Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the numerical targets for Benefits Agency medical service doctors in respect of the number of medical tests in connection with applications for incapacity benefit (a) in Scotland, and (b) in Strathclyde and the Benefits Agency districts contained within Benefits Agency area directorates 4 and 5.

Mr. Hague: The administration of incapacity benefit is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Donald Dewar, dated 8 December 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking about the numerical targets for Benefits Agency Medical Service (BAMS) doctors in respect of the number of medical tests in connection with applications for Incapacity Benefit in Scotland, Strathclyde and the Benefits Agency (BA) Area Directorates (ADs) 4 and 5.

The planning of procedures to deal with referrals to the BAMS is not yet complete and, accordingly, the number of cases to be seen by each doctor is not known.

It will be the nature of the cases to be seen which will determine the number seen each day by a doctor as opposed to the area in which the customer resides.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many Benefits Agency medical service doctors will be employed in the medical examination centres in Scotland, Strathclyde and the Benefits Agency districts contained within Benefits Agency area directorates 4 and 5.

Mr. Hague: The administration of incapacity benefit is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Donald Dewar, dated 8 December 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the number of doctors to be employed by the Benefits Agency medical Service in the medical examination centres in Scotland, Strahtclyde and the Benefits Agency Districts of Area Directorates 4 and 5 of the Scotland and Northern Territory.

In 1995, Scotland will have approximately 70 full time equivalent doctors, in addition to 19 full time medical advisers, all of whom will all be available to examine customers in the medical examination centres. The doctors will be available to examine where needed and will not be based rigidly in one specific location.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated benefit saving of the new test, including disability premium recipients in (a) Scotland, and (b) Strathclyde and the Benefits Agency districts contained within Benefits Agency area directorates 4 and 5.

Mr. Hague: Estimates of benefit savings of the new test by region are not available.

Estimated benefit savings in Great Britain from applying the new medical test to existing recipients of invalidity benefit, new recipients of incapacity benefit and both new and existing recipients of a disability premium in the income-related benefits are shown in the table:

Savings from medical test (£ million)	210	700	1,000

Note:
Estimates rounded to the nearest £10 million, expressed at constant 1993–94 prices. Estimates include income-related benefits offsetting costs.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many of current invalidity benefit recipients are to be exempt from the new test for incapacity benefit by virtue of being aged 58 years or over, by virtue of being in receipt of disability living allowance higher care component; and what is the estimate of the number of exemptions being deemed under the prescribed conditions listed in the report, "Incapacity for Work".

Mr. Hague: We estimate that at April 1995, the number of invalidity benefit recipients aged 58 or over and in receipt of invalidity benefit continuously since 1 December 1993 will be around 738,000.

It is not possible to make an estimate of the number of existing invalidity benefit claimants who are in receipt of the highest rate of care component of disability living allowance.

We estimate that around 293,000 existing claimants will be treated as incapable of work by reason of the exempt conditions listed in the report, "The Medical Assessment for Incapacity Benefit". Some of them will be aged 58 or over, but it is not possible to identify how many.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on how many occasions in each of the last five years cold weather payments have been made in the counties of (a) Dorset, (b) Hampshire, (c) east Sussex, (d) west Sussex, (e) Kent and (f) Berkshire.

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of the cold weather payments scheme is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. John Denham, dated 8 December 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your parliamentary question about the number of occasions in each of the last five years when cold weather payments have been made in six counties of southern England.

I have provided a list of the counties for which you requested, giving the number of times the weather stations returned temperature information which resulted in cold weather payments being issued. The information is based on the meteorological weather station that the Meteorological Office have advised broadly covers each county.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

County	Weather Station	1989–90	1990–91	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94
Dorset	Bournemouth	—	—	1	—	—
Hampshire	Southampton	—	—	—	—	—
East Sussex	Herstmonceux	—	—	1	—	—
West Sussex	Gatwick Airport	1	—	2	1	1
Kent	Manston	—	—	—	1	—
Berkshire	Easthampstead	1	—	3	1	1

In addition, cold weather payments were made on a national basis irrespective of recorded temperatures for the two weeks 1 February 1991 to 14 February 1991.

Automated Benefit Payment System

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which suppliers have been invited to make proposals for the automated benefit payment system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Arbuthnot: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 30 November, the automation of post offices and benefit payment will make a major contribution to our top priority fight against fraud. It will also act as a springboard for Post Office Counters Ltd. to gain new business. Nine companies, some of whom lead consortia, submitted formal procedures to act as prime contractors in the development of payment cards to replace girocheques and order books. The following five have been selected, by Post Office Counters Ltd. and my Department, to develop their solutions further: BT; Cardlink UK; EDS; IBM; ICL.

Domestic Fuel

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average amount spent weekly by (a) single pensioners and (b) married pensioners on domestic fuel between and including the months from November to March.

Mr. Roger Evans: The information requested is not available.

Back-to-work Scheme

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether, under the back-to-work bonus scheme, the bonus payment will be treated as income or capital for the purpose of calculating family credit or housing benefit entitlement.

Mr. Roger Evans: No decision has yet been made about the effect of a back-to-work bonus on a claim for family credit or housing benefit.

Income Support

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his assessment of the average loss per home owner who starts claiming income support with mortgage interest payments, arising from the changes introduced in the Budget after (a) April 1995 and (b) October 1995 compared with the arrangements prior to April 1995.

Mr. Roger Evans: The average loss per home owner who starts claiming income support with mortgage interest payments, arising from the changes introduced in the budget between April and October 1995 is estimated at around 25p. This estimate is based on the 1993 ASE, uprated to 1995–96 levels, and is rounded to the nearest 5p.

The proposed changes to be introduced from October 1995 will be subject to wide consultation. The financial effect will depend on the outcome of the consultation and the final detail of the scheme.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the number of current recipients of invalidity benefit in Scotland, Strathclyde and the Benefits Agency district contained within Benefits Agency area directorates 4 and 5.

Mr. Hague: This is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Donald Dewar, dated 8 December 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about Invalidity Benefit (IVB) recipients in Scotland.

The following figures were obtained from a 100% clerical count of cases in the Benefits Agency's (BA) District offices on 31 October 1994 and are the latest available.

The total number of IVB customers in Scotland at that date was 232,890.

The numbers of IVB customers dealt with by each Benefits Agency (BA) District in Area Directorates (ADs) 4 and 5 of the Scotland and Northern Territory are provided at Appendix 1 and total 171,287.

IVB customers in Strathclyde are those dealt with by the BA Districts of ADs 4 and 5, with the exception of the Forth Valley and Highlands and Islands Districts. Consequently, there were 150,730 IVB customers within Strathclyde at 31 October 1994.

The figures provided include some customers who have claimed but are not actually receiving IVB. This is because there are circumstances in which, although there is underlying entitlement to IVB, because a higher overlapping benefit is in payment no IVB is actually paid.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Patient Complaints

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many patient complaints were received per 1,000 patients treated in each year since 1989–90 by region.

Mr. Moss: There were 4.3 hospital-related patient complaints received per 1,000 patients treated in Northern Ireland during the period 1 April 1993 to 31 March 1994. Information relating to patient complaints is not available for years prior to 1993–94.

Information relating to patient complaints in the family health services is not available in the form requested.

Health Care Purchases

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much was spent by (a) district health authorities, (b) family health service authorities, (c) regional health authorities, (d) trusts and (e) general practitioner fundholders on health care purchases from non-NHS providers in each of the last three years.

Mr. Moss: In Northern Ireland integrated health and personal social services are supplied by health boards, trusts, general practitioner fundholders and the Central Services Agency for the Health and Personal Social Services.

Health and social services boards' expenditure on the purchase of health and personal social services from non-NHS/HPSS providers was £5,777,349 in 1992–93 and £4,448,722 in 1993–94.

The accounts of the health and social services boards were revised in 1992–93 to take account of the separation of the purchaser/provider functions and the information is accordingly not readily available prior to this date.

The first health and social services trusts were established in Northern Ireland on 1 April 1993. Their accounts for 1993–94 indicated nil expenditure on purchases from non-NHS/HPSS providers.

The accounts of general practitioner fundholders do not currently separately record expenditure on purchases from non-NHS/HPSS providers.

Family practitioner services which are delivered by the CSA on a regional basis indicated nil expenditure on purchases from non-NHS/HPSS providers.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated cost per annum of the Child Support Agency proposals to provide DNA testing for fathers in cases of disputed paternity.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Mr. Adam Ingram, dated 9 December 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the estimated cost to the Child Support Agency of DNA testing.

The contract for providing the DNA testing service has not yet been awarded, but it is being tendered on the basis that there will be no additional administrative costs for the Agency.

Where paternity is established, the resulting payment of child maintenance will provide a continuing nett weekly gain to either the parent with care, or in certain benefit cases, the taxpayer.

In the expectedly small number of cases where the alleged absent parent proves not to be the father and benefit is involved, the Agency will refund the test fees from within existing operating costs.

I hope this reply is helpful.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how much has been paid out by the Child Support Agency over the last 12 months in compensation for errors or inefficiency; and in how many cases;

(2) how many compensation claims for inefficiency are under consideration in the Child Support Agency.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Ms Helen Jackson, dated 9 December 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security about claims for compensation from the Child Support Agency.

Over the 12 months to the end of September 1994, payments totalling £900 were authorized in respect of four claims. A further 102 were under active consideration.

I hope that this reply is helpful.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Nuclear Liabilities

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what liabilities exist, what contractual arrangements exist to express those liabilities, in respect of Government programmes carried out prior to April 1971 on sites now in the ownership of British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. or the Atomic Energy Authority; which agencies of Government took part in settling those contractual arrangements; and on what dates such arrangements were concluded.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In correspondence between the Secretary of State for Energy and the chairman of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority in 1986 the Government confirmed that they were prepared to continue to accept responsibility in principle for the costs which the UKAEA incurred in treating and disposing of nuclear wastes and in decommissioning plant arising from programmes carried out by the UKAEA and its predecessors prior to 1 April 1986.

In correspondence between the Secretary of State for Energy and the Chairman of BNFL in 1983 and 1988 the Government agreed in principle to accept responsibility for the costs which BNFL incurred in treating and disposing of nuclear wastes and in decommissioning plant, arising from programmes carried out prior to 1 April 1971, to the extent that Government Departments were responsible for those programmes.

All of the work for which DTI has accepted financial responsibility, including that on BNFL sites, is funded by means of a conditional grant from DTI to the UKAEA and therefore is not subject to contractual arrangements between DTI and the UKAEA.

The UKAEA has estimated that the total value of waste management and decommissioning liabilities for which DTI has accepted financial responsibility is £8 billion, within a range of £6 to £12 billion, undiscounted at present price levels. These figures include liabilities for which DTI has accepted financial responsibility that have arisen from programmes carried out by the UKAEA or BNFL on behalf of DEn/DTI since 1986 and 1971 respectively. £1 billion of this estimate relates to waste management and decommissioning at BNFL sites.

The Ministry of Defence has also accepted responsibility in principle for some liabilities in respect of Government programmes carried out prior to April 1971 on sites now in the ownership of BNFL and the UKAEA.

The principal Government Departments which took part in settling these arrangements were the Department of Energy, the Treasury and the Ministry of Defence.

Insurance Company Act Notices

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many times notices were issued under sections 32 and 33 of the Insurance Companies Act 1982 in each subsequent complete calendar year.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Eighteen notices were issued under sections 32 and 33 in 1993; and 13 notices in 1994 to date. Figures for earlier years could not be obtained except at disproportionate cost.

Company Remuneration Committees

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what analysis he has carried out of the composition of remuneration committees of United Kingdom plcs and the background of their members.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: None. However, research has been commissioned by the Cadbury Committee as part of its monitoring of its code of best practice. The code recommends that remuneration committees should be made up wholly or mainly of non-executive directors who should be independent of management and free from any business or other relationship which could materially interfere with the exercise of their independent judgment, apart from their fees and shareholding.

Brewing Industry

Mr. Cox: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he last met members of the brewing industry which also included publicans to discuss the 1995 review by the European Union of the tied house system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: I have responsibility for competition issues in the brewing industry. Since taking up post in October I have held no such meetings. However, my predecessor last met a group of publicans to discuss issues relating to the tied house system in June this year. The European Commission regulation 1984–83 under which the tie is permitted expires in 1997; the Commission has made it clear that it does not expect to begin its review of the regulation until early 1996.

Mortgage Insurance

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his latest estimate of the additional cost per month to a house buyer of the requirement to take out insurance on a mortgage of £50,000.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The current average cost of mortgage protection insurance policies is about £7 for every £100 of mortgage payment per month up to a general maximum of £1,000 per month. The cost of insurance against a £50,000 mortgage would depend on the level of interest rates.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much he estimates an average householder will have to pay in monthly insurance premiums on a new mortgage when plans to limit income support help with mortgage interest payments come into effect.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The current average cost of mortgage protection insurance policies is about £7 for every £100 of mortgage payment per month up to a general maximum of £1,000 per month. Costs to householders will vary according to the prevailing rate of interest and how much they choose to insure.

Future Large Aircraft

Dr. David Clark: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent representations he has received concerning the future large aircraft.

Mr. Eggar: I have received many representations from interested parties including several United Kingdom aerospace companies and from hon. Members.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent discussions he has had with the Secretary of State of Defence concerning the future large aircraft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My Department keeps in close contact with the Ministry of Defence on the future large aircraft and other projects with significant implications for United Kingdom industry.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment his Department has made of the impact on the aerospace industry if the future large aircraft is not procured by the Government.

Mr. Eggar: My Department is considering the industrial implications of the future large aircraft with the Ministry of Defence and other interested Departments.

Deregulation Task Force

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the members of the deregulation task force and their payments.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade to my hon. Friend the Member for Surrey, East (Mr. Ainsworth) on 6 July 1994, Official Report, column 224, which listed the members of the deregulation task force. In addition, David Band of Barclays de Zoete Wedd has since been appointed. Individuals do not receive payment for their work as members of the deregulation task force, but the Department has agreed to reimburse their travel expenses.

Soft Commissions

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he is taking to co-ordinate action by regulatory bodies in the United Kingdom, in United Kingdom dependencies and elsewhere to end the offering of soft commissions by brokers; and what steps he will take to ensure that insurance companies declare soft commissions offered to, or by, brokers and fund managers acting on their behalf.

Mr. Nelson: I have been asked to reply.

Under the Financial Services Act 1986 "soft commissions" are closely controlled. They must be subject to formal soft commission agreements in each case and the range of benefits provided limited to those relating specifically to the fund manager's business. Fund managers are obliged to make regular and full disclosure to the fund trustees of all benefits provided to them.

Action in the dependent territories and elsewhere is a matter for their regulatory authorities.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the special advisers employed by his Department in each of the last five years indicating when they (a) joined and (b) left his Department and the annual salary they received.

Mr. David Hunt [pursuant to his reply, 5 December 1994, Official Report, column 16-17]: Miss R. Finlay was also employed as a special adviser in the Chief Whip's Offices from June 1985 to October 1991.

EMPLOYMENT

Jobseekers Allowance

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his policy under the jobseekers allowance in respect of claimants needing to show good cause for rejecting the offer of a part-time job of less than 24 hours a week.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Makerfield (Mr. McCartney) on 25 November 1994, Official Report, column 387.

Social Affairs Council

Mr. Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, if he will make a statement on the outcome of the EC Social Affairs Council held on 6 December.

Mr. Portillo: I attended the Social Affairs Council on 6 December in Brussels, accompanied by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Deptartment of Employment. The principal items on the agenda were two draft directives, on part-time and temporary work, and on posted workers; a discussion of Commissioner Flynn's White Paper on the future of European social policy; and a presentation of the Commission's proposals for the Essen European Council to follow up the earlier White Paper on growth, competitiveness and employment. There were no formal votes. The Leonardo training programme, a resolution on women and employment and proposals on the future of the handynet information system were agreed unanimously. The other 11 member states agreed a resolution, under their agreement on social policy, on future Community social policy.

In discussion of the part-time and temporary work directive, I made it clear that the United Kingdom could not accept the measure proposed. The United Kingdom Government have always opposed its directive because we believe that this is not an appropriate subject for Community-wide regulation and that the directive would lead to a loss of part-time jobs in the United Kingdom, particularly for women. There are 6 million part-time workers in the United Kingdom—more than 30 per cent. of all the part-time works in the European Community. The vast majority of them wish to work part time rather than full time. With nearly 20 million unemployed, the European Community should not be making it harder for employers to create part-time jobs. The Commission indicated that it would bring forward new proposals in this area under the agreement on social policy.

There was an inconclusive discussion of the draft directive on posted workers. My right hon. Friend the Minister of State made clear our considerable difficulties, of both principle and detail. A number of other member states also had significant difficulties with the proposal. The Presidency announced that the Council would meet again on 21 December to discuss it further.

The President of the European Commission, Mr. Delors, reported to the Council on issues to be discussed at the Essen European Council, following up the Commission's White Paper on growth, competitiveness and employment, and on the Commission report on employment. No formal conclusions were drawn.

There was a brief debate on Commissioner Flynn's White Paper on European social policy, again without conclusions.

I took the opportunity at the Council to set out the United Kingdom view of how the social affairs agenda should develop over the next few years. I suggested five main subjects for the Council of Ministers in the social affairs field:

- encouraging more effective policies to give the unemployed, particularly the long-term unemployed, the best chance of finding a job;
- improving training, through Community support for member states' activities;
- developing consistent standards for the implementation and enforcement of existing Community legislation;
- further practical steps to promote the free movement of workers;
- a re-examination of existing Community legislation to see whether it is still relevant and whether it stands in the way of job creation.

A resolution on social policy tabled by the Presidency which focused on developing legally-binding minimum standards at Community level was agreed by the other 11 member states under their agreement on social policy.

Final agreement was reached on the Leonardo vocational training programme.

A resolution on women and employment and a decision on the continuation, until 1996, of the handynet information system for people with disabilities were agreed without discussion.

The Council endorsed the conclusions of the Development Council about the world summit on social development which will take place in March 1995 in Copenhagen.

Prior Options Review Group

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 2 December, Official Report, column 931, if he will indicate the results of the Ernst and Young examination commissioned by the prior options review group; and when it will be published.

Miss Widdecombe: The work carried out by Ernst and Young was commissioned to inform the work of the prior options review. There are no plans to publish the results of the consultants' work independently of the results of the review. The results of the prior options review will be announced in due course.

Training and Education Expenditure

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Rother Valley (Mr. Barron) of 2 December, Official Report, column 931, if he will provide estimates of expenditure or planned expenditure by the Department of Employment on training in each year from 1994–95 to 1997–98.

Mr. Paice [holding answer 8 December 1994]: The table shows planned expenditure on the Department's training and education programmes:

Planned Expenditure (£ million)

Year	Cash	1994–95 prices
1994–95	[1]2,042	2,042
1996–97	1,941	1,831

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the proposals of Heatherwood and Wrexham Park trust to introduce a midwife-led maternity service and a nurse-practitioner led accident and emergency service.

Mr. Sackville: Berkshire health authority is currently undertaking a public consultation exercise on the proposed changes. This is due to be completed by the end of January 1995.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement about the plans of her Department to make information available on the Internet and the documents which she intends to be made available on the Internet over the next year which will be accessible via the world wide web server "open.gov.uk." or any specific departmental server.

Mr. Sackville: Use of the Internet as an additional method of disseminating information to the public via the world wide web server "open.gov.uk." is under active consideration by this Department in line with the Government's commitment to make more information available to the public and to make innovative use of telecommunications. Discussions are at an early stage and it is too soon to specify what documents will be made available. Officials from the Department of Health and Office of Population Censuses and Surveys are also working with the Central Statistical Office and other Government Departments to see what use can be made of the Internet to disseminate Government statistics.

Fraud

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking to combat fraud in the national health service.

Mr. Sackville: A recent Audit Commission publication, "Ensuring Probity in the NHS", stated that the level of proven fraud and corruption in the national health service was very low and the vast majority of people working in the NHS are honest and diligent. The Department has taken a number of initiatives including strengthening internal audit, the creation of audit committees in NHS bodies and a major review of the systems for collecting NHS charges and the scope of fraud by contractors is under way.

Prescription Costs

Mr. Cann : To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of prescription drugs costs less than £5.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of prescriptions cost less than £5; what is the (a) average and (b) median cost of a prescription item; how many prescriptions were issued by doctors in the last year; how many prescription items were dispensed by pharmacists last year, in total, and by the family health service authority area; and what has been the total revenue generated by charging for prescriptions in each of the last 15 years.

Mr. Malone: The available information has been placed in the Library. Figures for the number of prescriptions issued by doctors are not available centrally. The extensive arrangements for charge exemption and for remission of charges under the national health service low-income scheme, coupled with the prescription prepayment certificate scheme, ensure that no-one need be deterred from obtaining any necessary prescribed medication for financial reasons.

Patient Complaints

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patient complaints were received per 1,000 patients treated in each year since 1989-90 by region.

Mr. Malone: Information on the number of written complaints relating to hospital services per 1,000 in-patient and day cases in each year from 1989-90 to 1992-93, by region, are included in the publication entitled "Written complaints by or on behalf of patients—England—financial year 1992-93", copies of which are available in the Library.

Equivalent information about the number of complaints against family practitioners is not available centrally.

Tinnitus

Mr. Benton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much is being spent on specific tinnitus research; and what plans she has to increase the sums.

Mr. Sackville: The main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council which receives its grant-in-aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. The Medical Research Council is an independent body deciding what research to support on its own expert judgment.

In 1991-2 the Medical Research Council spent £129,000 on research directly related to tinnitus and in 1992-93, the last year for which figures are available, it spent £131,000.

National Capitation Scheme

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when she expects to publish the formula for the proposed national capitation scheme;

(2) what factors are being considered for the formula of the proposed national capitation scheme.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made by my hon. Friend the Minister for Health, Official Report, 21 October at column 573. The results of the review of weighted capitation are included in the guidance referred to in the statement. Copies of the guidance, FDL(94)68, are available in the Library.

The result of the review of weighted capitation is a modified formula which takes account of new information and better statistical techniques. The three basic elements of the formula, ie age, need and cost, remain the same but each element has been updated and refined. Further details of the modified formula have been published in the form of a booklet entitled "Hospital and Community Health Services. Revenue Resource Allocation: Weighted Capitation Formula", and copies of this are also available in the Library.

Life Expectancy

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total population of Great Britain aged 75 years and over; and how many of these are women.

Mr. Sackville: The latest available population estimates relate to mid-1993. It is estimated that there were 3.92 million residents in Great Britain aged 75 and over at that date. This figure comprises 2.59 million women and 1.33 million men.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average life expectancy for (a) males and (b) females in (i) 1978–79 and (ii) the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Sackville: Life expectancy at birth in England and Wales for males and females for the years 1978, 1979 and 1992, the last available year, are shown in the table:

Year	Males	Females
1978	70.1	76.3
1979	70.3	76.4
1992	73.8	79.2

Junior Doctors' Hours

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many new consultants have been employed by the NHS as a result of the new deal reduction in junior doctors's hours.

Mr. Malone: Our task forces report that, in England, at 30 September 1994, 533 new consultants were employed in centrally funded posts to reduce junior doctors' hours. In addition, 72 posts had been advertised and were awaiting appointments' committees. Many of these were already in operation through the temporary appointment of locum consultants. A further 81 posts had been funded and were at the planning stage, these will be filled as soon as possible.

Information on consultant posts set up specifically to reduce hours by individual trusts and authorities, and funded directly by them, is not available centrally.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment her Department has made of the increased workload resulting from the reduction in junior doctors' hours.

Mr. Malone: It was recognised when the new deal on junior doctors was introduced that reductions in junior doctors' hours unsupported by other action could lead to an increase in the intensity at which they work.

That is why a range of measures was put in place, focusing resources effectively so as to ensure that reductions in hours were real and sustainable. These include the controlled growth of the medical work force, more effective working patterns, improved team-working, greater use of cross-cover between appropriate specialities, better skill mix—including more nurses and support workers—and site and service rationalisation.

Paediatrics

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many paediatric consultants there were in each of the last five years.

Mr. Malone: The information is shown in the table.

Paediatric consultants—England at 30 September each year whole-time equivalent

Year	Whole-time equivalent
1990	710
1991	740
1992	780
1993	860

Note:
Figures are rounded to the nearest 10.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many unfilled vacancies exist for paediatric posts; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: The information is shown in the table.

Vacant paediatric posts by grade—England at 30 September 1993

Grade	Number of vacant posts
Consultant	42
Staff grade	12
Senior registrar	16
Registrar	15
Senior house officer	7
Total	92

Note:
This indicates the number of vacant paediatric posts notified to the Department as at 30 September 1993. As a snapshot of vacancies on a single date they may not fairly reflect the trend for the number of vacancies over the year as a whole.

Consultants

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many consultants there are per head of population in each EC country.

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally.

Accident and Injury Departments

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the location of all nurse-practitioner led accident or minor injury departments in England, and of all proposed such departments.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is not available centrally.

Maternity Units

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the location of all existing and proposed midwife-led maternity units.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Midwife and Nurse Practitioner Units

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research has been conducted into the efficacy, mortality rates, cost-efficiency, patient satisfaction and public perception of midwife and nurse practitioner units in England.

Mr. Sackville: A number of research studies, some funded by the Department of Health, address different issues concerning efficiency, cost-effectiveness, patient satisfaction and public perception in relation to nurse development units and nurse practitioners and the nurse practitioner scheme in England. The question of mortality rates is not generally applicable to nurse practitioners but will be covered in a study of NDUs.

In August 1993, following an evaluative study funded by the Department of Health, the King's fund centre published "A Way to Develop Nurses and Nursing", a report on the four pilot NDUs funded by the King's fund. A further study is being carried out of the 30 Department of health-funded NDUs.

Earlier this month Touche Ross issued a report, "Evaluation of the Nurse Practitioners"; this was initiated and funded by the former South East Thames regional health authority with a contribution for evaluation purposes from the Department of Health. The Department is also evaluating 10 nurse practitioner schemes set up in 1994 and has commissioned a literature review of role expansion with particular reference to nurse practitioners.

Work is being done to evaluate midwifery group practices in three locations. The main areas of work include basic audit of midwifery care, economic evaluation, assessment of staffing issues, women's experiences of care and the use of local maternity information systems.

Correspondence Costs

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost of sending individual letters to blood donors about a proposed change to the blood transfusion centre; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The National Blood Authority estimates that the total cost of the consultation letter to the two million blood donors about the reorganisation proposals was £400,000.

GP Lists

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 22 November, Official Report, column 86, when she will publish data for 1993–94 on patients removed from general practitioners' lists.

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 28 November at column 537.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 22 November 1994 Official Report, column 86, if she will now itemise the number of patients removed from general practitioner lists because of (a) registration with another doctor, (b) death or resignation of the doctor, (c) death or emigration of the patient, (d) removal at the doctor's request or (e) other causes for 1992–93 and 1993–94 by family health service authority.

Mr. Malone: The available information will be placed in the Library.

GP Fundholders

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 24 November, Official Report, column 322, when data for 1993–94 on general practitioner fundholders' end-of-year retentions will be available.

Mr. Malone: Information about fundholder efficiency savings for 1993–94 will not be available until final audits are completed in the new year.

Disabled People (Cash Payments)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 30 November, Official Report, column 794, what assessment she has made of the compliance by Gloucestershire county council in the current year with its statutory duties to disabled people under section 2 of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970; what recent contact her Department has had with the county council on this matter; if she has received legal advice on the effect of section 2; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: We are aware that leave has been granted for a judicial review hearing involving Gloucestershire county council. This is a matter for the courts. Local authorities' duties under section 2 of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970 remain unchanged, and they were reminded of their legal obligations in December 1992. The social services inspectorate is in regular contact with all local authorities.

Health Care Purchases

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much was spent by (a) district health authorities, (b) family health service authorities, (c) regional health authorities, (d) trusts and (e) general practitioner fundholders on health care purchases from non-NHS providers in each of the last three years.

Mr. Sackville: The total expenditure in the last three years of district health authorities, regional health authorities, national health service trusts and general practitioner fundholders on the purchase of health care from non-NHS providers is shown in the table. Family health services authorities do not purchase health care services.

District health authorities	159,818	187,335	250,484
Regional health authorities	32,746	21,421	25,649
NHS trusts	12,204	45,436	51,322
GP fundholders	3,698	13,127	29,899

Notes:

The figures for 1993–94 are provisional: the summarised accounts for 1993–94 are subject to audit by the National Audit Office.

NHS Private Treatment

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 24 November 1994, Official Report, column 320, if she will update the tables on the number of patients treated privately in the NHS.

Mr. Sackville: Updated information on outpatient attendances is available in "1993–94 Outpatients and Ward Attenders England", copies of which have been placed in the Library and updated information on finished consultant episodes will shortly be placed there.

Capital Projects

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the capital projects in the NHS with a works cost of over (a) £1 million, (b) £5 million and (c) £10 million that were completed in each of the financial years 1990–91, 1991–92, 1992–93 and 1993–94, giving the total costs and a brief description of each project.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 30 November 1994]: Information which records national health service capital building works projects with a works cost over £1 million will be placed in the Library. The works cost is a sum for the construction of buildings which excludes fees for professional services, equipment, value added tax and land purchase.

TREASURY

Child Benefit

Mr. Wicks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the administrative cost of introducing a system of taxing child benefit at the higher rate assuming that it is taxed as part of the woman's income if she is a higher rate payer and, if she is not, that child benefit is taxed at the higher rate as part of her husband's or partner's income.

Sir George Young: The cost of administration would depend on the form of the legislation and how it was administered.

VAT (Fuel)

Mr. Horam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost to the Exchequer of zero rating standard charges in domestic fuel bills assuming value added tax at 17.5 per cent.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 6 December 1994]: Zero rating of any item is not permissable under the sixth VAT directive once it has been given up.

Manufacturing Trade

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect of the increase in the nominal and real exchange rate against the deutschmark and the ecu since February 1993 on the balance of trade in manufactures; and what contribution that has made to the economic growth.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 8 December 1994]: The Government's most recent assessment of trade performance is published in chapter 3 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report", in which it is explained that the United Kingdom's cost competitiveness has largely been maintained as a result of British industry's success in controlling costs. Net trade accounts for about half the growth of gross domestic product in 1994 so far.

Christmas Cards

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Attorney-General how many official Christmas cards he and other Ministers in his Department intend to send in 1994; how much those cards will cost (a) to buy, (b) to post and (c) in staff time to sign, address and place in envelopes; and if he will place in the Library a sample copy of the official Christmas card he intends to send this year.

The Attorney-General: The Law Officers intend to send approximately 150 cards this year at a cost of (a) £123 and (b) an estimated £18 to post. Cards for recipients within the United Kingdom will be sent either second class post or included in normal departmental deliveries. Information on the cost of staff time is not available but would be minimal. A sample of the card has been placed in the Library.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage whether he will list (a) the arts organisations, companies and projects, (b) the public libraries and (c) the galleries and museums he has visited since becoming Secretary of State.

Mr. Dorrell: The visits I have made to the relevant bodies since I became Secretary of State are listed in the table.

In addition, I have had the opportunity to talk to many representatives of arts organisations at receptions I have hosted for the business sponsorship incentive scheme.

TRANSPORT

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the surveyed values, book values and location of the properties and houses purchased by British Rail along the lines of putative, but now rejected, channel tunnel rail links, together with the total price at which they were transferred to Railtrack.

Mr. Watts: Information about properties purchased for previous rail link proposals should be sought from the British Rail Property Board whose responsibility they are. No such properties have been transferred to Railtrack.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the text of the agreement between himself and the consortia bidding to build the channel tunnel rail link especially as it relates to obligatory confidentiality.

Mr. Watts: The confidentiality agreements with consortia bidding in the channel tunnel rail link competition are strictly private and confidential documents and are not appropriate for publication.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his best estimate of the revenues to be derived from the European passenger services due to be transferred to the consortium chosen to build the channel rail link.

Mr. Watts: This information is commercially confidential.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the value of the financial assistance likely to be available from the European Union towards the cost of building the channel tunnel rail link.

Mr. Watts: The value of any assistance from the European Union for the channel tunnel rail link has yet to be determined. Potential sources of support are the trans-European networks programme, the European investment bank and the European investment fund.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the latest estimate of the value of the assets intended to be transferred to the successful consortium in the competition to build the channel tunnel rail link.

Mr. Watts: The value of the assets to be transferred will be determined by the present competition to select the rail link promoter.

Traffic Calming

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will review the designs of traffic calming measures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The design of traffic calming measures is the responsibility of individual highway authorities. The Department of Transport works closely with authorities, offering advice on planning and design aspects and collaborating on the development of new techniques. Information on good practice is published in the form of traffic advisory leaflets, which are sent to all local authorities. Over the last few months, for example, we have produced leaflets on design aspects of entry treatments, speed cushions, thermoplastic road humps and road narrowings and chicanes.

Cyclists (Safety)

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to increase the safety of cyclists.

Mr. Norris: As part of our efforts to achieve a one third reduction in road casualties by the year 2000 we will maintain our commitment to reduce cyclist casualties. Cyclist safety will be promoted through education and publicity measures, continued research projects, and the issue of technical advice to local highway authorities on the planning, design and construction of cycling facilities.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many parliamentary questions tabled in the last session of Parliament were not answered on the ground that the information sought was not held centrally by the Department.

Mr. Norris: Twenty-seven.

Lorry Drivers

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many prosecutions have been taken out for each year since 1985 against haulage contractors and other firms employing long-distance lorry drivers for exceeding the permissible number of hours driving without a statutorily required break.

Mr. Norris: The information is not available in the form requested. The total numbers of drivers' hours prosecutions, including exceeding the permissable number of hours without a statutory break for United Kingdom and foreign heavy goods vehicle drivers/operators were as follows:

	Number
1984–85	212
1985–86	193
1986–87	249
1987–88	1,654
1988–89	1,893
1989–90	2,243
1990–91	2,310
1991–92	2,385
1992–93	2,898
1993–94	4,422[1]

[1] There was a change in the method of recording drivers' hours prosecutions in 1993–94. In the previous years the numbers of prosecutions referred to the number of cases whereas the 1993–94 figures refer to the number of offences.

Roll-on Roll-off Ferries

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many collisions have occurred involving roll-on roll-off ferries (a) in the Solent, (b) off the south coast of England and (c) in British coastal waters in each of the last 10 years.

(2) how many incidents have occurred involving roll-on roll-off ferries (a) in the Solent, (b) off the south coast of England and (c) in British coastal waters in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 8 December 1994]: The figures shown in the table relate to accidents involving one or more United Kingdom registered roll-on roll-off ferries where it has been established that the accident happened in (a) the Solent/Southampton Water, (b) elsewhere off the south coast and (c) in other stretches of United Kingdom coastal waters.

The figures are given only for the years shown as information relating to a particular sea area and type of accident can readily be obtained only from the marine accident investigation branch computerised accident database. The database contains data from 1991 onwards only. Information requested for the previous six years could be obtained only at disproportion cost.

The Solent/Southampton water
1991	Nil	Nil
1992	1	Nil
1993	1	Nil
1994 to date	Nil	Nil
Elsewhere off south coast
1991	Nil	Nil
1993	2	1
1994 to date	Nil	Nil
Other stretches of the United Kingdom coastal waters
1994 to date	5	Nil

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will include in Her Majesty's Government's submission to the International Maritime Organisation's investigation into roll-on roll-off ferries the recommendation that all roll-on roll-off ferries be fitted either with transverse bulkheads on the car deck or sponsons;

(2) if he will take steps to require all roll-on roll-off ferries operating in British coastal waters to be fitted either with sponsons or transverse bulkheads on the car deck;

(3) how many of the roll-on roll-off ferries operation (a) in the Solent and (b) off the south coast currently conform to the Solas 90 regulations;

(4) how many of the roll-on roll-off ferries operating off the south coast of England have fitted (a) transverse bulkheads on the car deck, (b) sponsons or (c) neither.

(5) how many of the roll-on roll-off ferries operating the Solent have fitted (a) transverse bulkheads on the car deck, (b) sponsons or (c) neither.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 8 December 1994]: These are operational matters for the Marine Safety Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from R. M. Bradley to Mr. John Denham, dated 9 December 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your questions about roll-on roll-off passenger ferries.

1. How many of the roll-on roll-off ferries operating off the south coast have fitted (a) transverse bulkheads on the car deck (b) sponsons, or (c) neither?

Of the sixteen United Kingdom registered ships operating off the south coast (including Dover) one has been fitted with sponsons. The information on foreign registered ships is not readily available.

2. How many of the roll-on roll-off ferries operating in the Solent have fitted (a) transverse bulkheads on the car deck, (b) sponsons, or neither?

There are nine roll-on roll-off passenger ferries operating solely on the Solent. These vessels are not of the same design as ships operating on international voyages in that they do not have enclosed car decks spaces—the car deck is open at both ends of the deck—and as such the devices are not appropriate.

3. How many of the roll-on roll-off ferries operating (a) in the Solent, and (b) off the south coast, currently conform to the SOLAS '90 Regulations?

An assessment of all ferries operating to and from ports in the United Kingdom is being processed. As soon as all the information is available, a full list will be published and a copy placed in the library of the House.

4. Will the Secretary of State take steps to require all roll-on roll-off ferries operating in British coastal waters to be fitted either with sponsons or transverse bulkheads on the car deck?

The enhanced survivability standard of roll-on roll-off passenger ferries operating to or from ports in the United Kingdom is already in place. That standard may require the fitting of sponsons or transverse bulkheads on the car deck. further measures will be addressed when the report from the International Maritime Organisation's Panel of Experts investigating ferry safety is received.

5. Will the Secretary of State include in Her Majesty's Government submission to the International Maritime Organisations into roll-on roll-off ferries the recommendation that all roll-on roll-off ferries be fitted either with transverse bulkheads on the car deck or sponsons?

The results of the United Kingdom research which identified the fitting of sponsons or transverse bulkheads on the car deck as two of the means of increasing the survivability standard or ro-ro passenger ferries have already been submitted to the International Maritime Organisation.

EDUCATION

Schools, Islington

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what information she has on shortages of state or private secondary school places in the Islington area.

Mr. Robin Squire: I refer my hon. Friend to my right hon. Friend's reply today to my hon. Friend the Member for St. Ives (Mr. Harris). There were, 656 surplus places in maintained secondary schools in Islington in January 1994, 19 per cent. of total capacity. The Department does not collect information on the supply of independent school places.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will meet the leader of Islington council and discuss the extent to which the council has not provided the range of educational choice required by all Islington residents.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend has no plans for such a meeting.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment she has made of whether Islington council is meeting all the statutory requirements currently in force under the Education Acts.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend has made no such assessment. She has no reason to believe that Islington is not meeting the relevant statutory requirements.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps she is taking to improve educational choice in Islington.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Government's White Paper of July 1992, "Choice and Diversity" (Cm 2021), set out a new framework for schools in England, opening the way to greater variety in education through the formation of new schools and by encouraging specialisation.

The Government have also taken action to increase parental choice by enabling parents to express a preference for the school they wish their child to attend. Parents now have more rights, more information and access to a wider choice of different schools than ever before.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many ballots for grant-maintained status have been conducted in Islington state schools in the last five years.

Mr. Robin Squire: Since grant-maintained status became available, to date no ballots have been held in Islington.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will list the state and private schools operating in Islington and within three miles of Islington and state for each state school whether it is grant-maintained.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department's records do not enable us to identify which schools fall within three miles of Islington. The list which has been placed in the Library gives all schools by type, excluding schools for pupils with special educational needs, in Islington and the neighbouring boroughs of Barnet, Camden, Hackney, Haringey, Lambeth, Southwark, Waltham Forest and Westminster.

School Meals

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is (a) the cost per meal and (b) the price charged per school meal currently in (i) primary and (ii) secondary schools in each local education authority in England.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information is not collected in the form requested. Some details of local authorities' charging arrangements for school meals were published in "Statistics of Education: Schools—1993", a copy of which in the Library.

London Oratory School

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) how many children from Islington have applied and been admitted to the London Oratory school during each of the last six years;

(2) how many children have applied to go to the London Oratory school in September 1995; how many of these children came from the London borough of Hammersmith and Fulham; and how many of these children come from each of the other London boroughs.

Mr. Robin Squire: This information is not collected by the Department.

Examination Statistics

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will list the proportion of pupils in each school in Northamptonshire who obtained five GCSE grades A to C in each of the last five years, the national average during the same period, the shire county average during the same period and the average during the same period for (a) Northamptonshire, (b) Cambridgeshire, (c) Bedfordshire, (d) Buckinghamshire, (e) Oxfordshire, (f) Warwickshire, (g) Leicestershire and (h) Lincolnshire.

Mr. Forth: The table lists the proportion of 15-year-old pupils in each school, including the independent sector, in Northamptonshire, who obtained five GCSE grades A to C, in each of the last three years. Individual school data are not available prior to 1992, the first year in which school performance tables were published. The table also shows the national average during the same period, and the averages during the same period for maintained schools in shire counties and in (a) Northamptonshire, (b) Cambridgeshire, (c) Bedfordshire, (d) Buckinghamshire, (e) Oxfordshire, (f) Warwickshire, (g) Leicestershire and (h) Lincolnshire.

Graveny School

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what decision she has made on the application by Graveny school in Wandsworth to introduce a selective admissions policy.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend approved on 28 November the statutory proposals made by the governors of Graveny school, Wandsworth, significantly to change the character of the school by introducing 50 per cent. selection by reference to general ability.

Surplus Places

Mr. David Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what are the numbers and percentages of surplus places in each local education authority in England.

Mr. Robin Squire: The tables set out the numbers of surplus places, by local education authority area, and the proportion that these represent of total capacity, as at January this year. The data are drawn from the returns made this summer by local education authorities in respect of their schools and by the Funding Agency for Schools in respect of grant-maintained schools in stage 2 and 3 authority areas: data on surplus places in the 286 GM schools stage 1 authorities are not available. These returns indicate that there were just over 1 million surplus school places in England in January this year, representing 13 per cent. of the total capacity of 7.7 million places.

The tables illustrate considerable variation in numerical and proportionate levels of surplus across the country. In some cases, combinations of pupil population growth and current rationalisation plans will probably reduce high levels of surplus to more acceptable levels. Where there is no indication of significant reduction in high levels of surplus, the Department will consult the authorities concerned about the extent to which any of that surplus is in practice removable. In the light of this consultation my right hon. Friend will decide whether surplus place removal targets should be set for any of these authorities.

DEFENCE

Ceremonial Swords

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many ceremonial swords have been bought or repaired and at what cost during the last five years; and how many such swords are now in circulation in the armed forces.

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the chief executive of the Defence Clothing and Textiles Agency under the terms of his framework document. I have asked him to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Richard Kirby to Mr. Alan Milburn, dated 8 December 1994:

I have been asked by the Minister for Armed Forces to reply to your Parliamentary Question about ceremonial swords. Truly ceremonial swords are only issued to the most senior officers and are very few in number. In replying to your question I have assumed, therefore, that you required information on all swords.

Our records indicate that, during the past 5 years 560 swords have been procured at a cost of £365,700 (including scabbards where appropriate). We have also had refurbished some 576 swords at a cost of £156,700. At present it is estimated that there are approximately 2,500 swords in use or held in pools for use by the Armed Forces.

These figures exclude the many swords which are procured privately by officers and regiments and for which we hold no records.

Allied Rapid Reaction Corps

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he has given to the use of NATO's Allied Rapid Reaction Corps for possible use in Bosnia in the event of a United Nations withdrawal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: NATO and the United Nations have undertaken contingency planning for a wide range of possible scenarios, including withdrawal. It would not, however, be appropriate to comment on the details of these plans.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what period of time is required for the NATO allied rapid reaction corps to be mobilised for operational use;

(2) in what current state of readiness is the NATO allied rapid reaction corps.

Mr. Soames: The multinational allied Europe rapid reaction corps was established to provide NATO with a capability to respond quickly, drawing on an appropriate level of forces determined by SACEUR, to a range of contingencies. It will achieve full operational capability in 1995 although the HQ is already operational in Rheindalen in Germany. Details of the readiness states of the units assigned to the ARRC and the period of time required to deploy the ARRC for operations are classified for operational reasons.

Departmental Cars

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many cars were (a) owned and (b) leased by his Department in each of the last five years;

(2) what makes of cars were (a) owned and (b) leased by his Department in each of the last five years.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

SA80 Rifles

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total cost to his Department to make the necessary modifications to the SA80 rifle to bring it to operational standards.

Mr. Freeman: Following negotiations with Royal Ordnance plc on outstanding pricing, we now estimate the cost of the SA80 modification programme to be £13 million at long-term costing 94 prices, inclusive of VAT.

Sergeant John Gilders

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when his Department first learned of the location of the remains of Sergeant John Gilders of the RAF; if the family were duly notified once the information was known to the authorities; and what action is being taken to ensure that the remains of other airmen who died in action within the United Kingdom are located and given a proper burial.

Mr. Soames: My Department was notified by the Coroner in Ashford, Kent on 22 April 1994 that what were believed to be the remains of Sergeant J.S. Gilders RAF had been discovered. My Department first notified Sergeant Gilders' family on 27 April and a letter of confirmation was sent on 3 May once the Coroner had confirmed the identity of the body.

It is long-standing policy not to disturb crash sites where a member of crew is listed as missing, as such sites are considered an appropriate last resting place for aircrew killed in action. This is a view shared by ex-service organisations who agree that the digging up of wreckage after so many years could be upsetting for next of kin. There is also the possibility of a difference of view between next of kin over what action should be taken where more than one member of crew is listed as missing.

Rwanda

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the extent to which the British troops who have recently returned from Rwanda had completed the task they had been sent to fulfil.

Mr. Soames: The British contingent was sent to Rwanda to provide specialist support for a three-month period in the initial stages of the United Nations operation. They were withdrawn having accomplished this task.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he had given to the replacement of the British troops recently in Rwanda and for what reasons he rejected that option.

Mr. Soames: The British contingent was sent to fulfil a specific role over a three-month period. That task is now complete. The United Nations has not requested a further deployment.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received, and from whom, against the withdrawal of British troops from Rwanda.

Mr. Soames: I am not aware of any representations received by my Department against the withdrawal of British troops from Rwanda.

Gulf War Syndrome

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if disclosure of allergies was required of British service personnel prior to their being offered chemical and biological warfare vaccines during the Gulf war; if severe asthma or hay fever was regarded as a contra-indication for vaccination; and what changes to guidelines to medical personnel about the administration of counter-CBW vaccines or preparations have been made since 1991.

Mr. Soames: The armed forces medical services, in line with Department of Health guidelines, regard a history of anaphylaxis as the only absolute contra-indication to vaccination. A previous severe reaction to the same vaccine may also be a contra-indication to be considered on its merits. The Department of Health guide on immunisation against infectious disease states that asthma, hay fever or a history of non-anaphylactic allergy are not contra-indications for vaccination and consequently disclosure of allergies was not required prior to vaccination during the Gulf war.

However, during the medical selection process for entry into the Armed Forces all candidates are required to disclose, by direct questioning, all aspects of their medical history. Among other things, candidates are required to disclose whether they suffer from "asthma or wheezing", "hay fever or allergies" and "any severe reaction to drugs or injections". A severe reaction to drugs or injections may indicate an anaphylactic episode, which is very rare, but is generally an absolute bar to employment in the armed services. Similarly, known asthmatics would not normally be accepted for service, and if already serving would be in a reduced medical category which would in general preclude operational service.

Apart from routine updating to take account of new vaccines, no changes to guidelines for medical personnel regarding vaccine or drug administration have been made since 1991.

Defence Industry

Mr. Olner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps the Government are taking to protect jobs in the defence industry by assisting in a transition from the manufacture of weapons to non-military manufacture.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the oral answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Pollock (Mr. Dunnachie) on 22 November 1994, Official Report, column 462–63.

Search and Rescue Helicopters

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current number of search and rescue helicopters in the Royal Air Force; and where these aircraft are based.

Mr. Soames: The RAF search and rescue helicopter fleet comprises 19 Sea King and nine Wessex helicopters. These are based at RAF Chivenor, RAF Leconfield, RAF Boulmer, RAF Lossiemouth, Wattisham airfield and in the Falkland Islands. Training is carried out at RAF Valley and RAF St. Mawgan and deep maintenance at RAF St. Mawgan.

Empty Property

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to make use of his Department's empty residential property.

Mr. Soames: The majority of our empty properties are undergoing or awaiting major maintenance, held for future developments, or form part of the management margin needed to ensure that accommodation is available for entitled service families. Empty properties which are surplus to requirements, however, are sold. Properties which are not surplus to long-term requirements but which are not needed immediately for service families are leased to local authorities, housing associations or civilians.

WALES

Building Refurbishment

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will itemise the refurbishment works undertaken on buildings housing departmental staff in the last three years, indicating the costs involved and the nature of the refurbishments.

Mr. Redwood: Refurbishment works undertaken and funded by the Department in its office buildings were as follows:

1991–92	Cathays Park, Cardiff	Partitioning for offices	3,000

Mr. Redwood: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Cambridge (Mrs. Campbell) on 5 December 1994, Official Report, column 68.

Mr. Richards: The available information, relating to hospital services, is given for Wales and each district health authority area in the following table. Information on complaints per patient concerning community health services and FHSA services is not available centrally.

South East Wales Ambulance Trust

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what is the estimated date for commencement of construction of the South East Wales Ambulance trust's new headquarters;

(2) what consideration he has given to the proposed new ambulance headquarters and allied communications infrastructure for South East Wales Ambulance trust.

Mr. Redwood: The South East Wales Ambulance trust submitted a business case for the leasing of an existing building and purchase of new communications equipment, supported by the South Glamorgan, Gwent and Powys health authorities. This has been approved and a start is due to be made shortly.

Countryside Council

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidelines he has issued to the Countryside Council for Wales with respect to making grants to voluntary bodies; and if he will list those voluntary organisations which have received grants under such guidelines.

Mr. Redwood: The guidelines on grants issued to the Countryside Council for Wales are contained in the management statement and the financial memorandum. Lists of recipients of grants from the CCW are included in its annual report for 1993–94, which is in the Library of the House.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the Countryside Council for Wales and other conservation bodies in Wales with respect to the purchase of land for the purpose of the maintenance of bio-diversity; what provision he has agreed with the council and the other bodies regarding the role of voluntary bodies in the field of conservation in the (a) purchase and (b) management of such land; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The Countryside Council for Wales is guided in its role regarding the purchase of land by the management statement, which states that the council should not add significantly to its estate. Within the limits of available resources, the CCW may, however, grant aid others in the purchase of land where the council's objectives are met.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 24 November, Official Report, column 365, when data for 1993–94 on private patient income will be available.

South Wales Valleys (Investment)

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how he intends to achieve his aim of generating £1 billion of private sector investment in the south Wales valleys.

Mr. Redwood: I have met the local authorities covering the Valleys area together with the Welsh Development Agency, the Land Authority for Wales and the training and enterprise councils. I have discussed in detail the land availability, communication needs and development plans of each local authority area.

On 13 December, at a lunch in the QEII centre with representatives of the business community, I will be issuing a brochure containing a selection of the development sites identified at the meetings that present excellent opportunities for attracting private sector investment.

Copies, will be sent to Members whose constituencies fall within the Valleys' area and will also be placed in the Library of the House. From 13 December copies of the brochure will be available from the urban affairs division of the Welsh Office.

The document will be incorporated in a new Government private finance initiative prospectus that I intend publishing shortly.

In the new year I will be conducting a series of meetings with local authorities outside the Valleys to discuss their development plans and identify sites with good potential for attracting private sector investment elsewhere in Wales.

Empty Property

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to make use of his Department's empty residential property.

Mr. Redwood: I have asked that all the Department's empty residential properties should be brought back into use as quickly as possible—either by re-letting where there is a justified need, or by disposal.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Energy Expenditure

Mr. Mathew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total expenditure on energy for offices and buildings by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Goodlad: The figures are as follows:

(a)	2,396,415	1,912,241	1,726,606
(b)	439,282	472,000	458,000

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total expenditure on energy for each property owned or leased by his Department for the use of Ministers in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Goodlad: The figures for the only property concerned are:

	1991–92 £	1992–93 £	1993–94 £
1 Carlton Gardens	16,077	15,191	13,091

Rwanda

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made by Rwanda by UNAMIR in establishing a radio station that will broadcast reliable information to the refugee camps for Rwandan refugees in Zaire and Tanzania.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The radio transmitting equipment donated by Her Majesty's Government to the Government of Rwanda has arrived in Kigali and is being commissioned by a British radio engineer with the assistance of UNAMIR forces.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action is being planned by the permanent members of the UN Security Council to provide the necessary logistical support that would back up the Secretary-General's urgent request for a security force in the refugee camps of Rawandans in Zaire.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The UN Secretary General's report contained several options for action in the refugee camps. The Security Council has asked him to investigate the practicalities of the proposals and to seek the views of potential troop contributor nations, emphasising the urgent need for progress towards national reconciliation. We await his response.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to contribute to the retention of a small military logistics unit of about 150 personnel in Rwanda as requested by the UN Secretary-General.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have received no such request.

Croatia

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the ability of non-Croat speakers to participate in elections in Croatia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Under article 45 of the constitution of the Republic of Croatia, all Croatian citizens who have reached the age of 18 enjoy the right to participate in elections. This right was confirmed in the electoral law promulgated on 15 April 1992.

European Union

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what concessions were made to Spain in negotiations regarding Norwegian accession to the European Union.

Mr. Baldry: No concessions were made to Spain with respect to Norwegian accession to the European Union. Under the earlier agreement on the European Economic Area, Norway agreed to make additional quantities of cod available to the "cohesion" countries—for this purpose, Spain, Portugal and Ireland.

As part of the EFTA accession negotiations it was decided that the terms for Iberian integration into the common fisheries policy would be agreed by 1 January 1995. This brought forward by 12 months the original agreement to this effect, reached at the time of Spanish and Portuguese accession to the Community.

Caribbean

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will describe the relationship between the dependant territories in the Caribbean and the regional secretariat in Barbados, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The secretariat is responsible for co-ordinating and managing those aspects of our policy towards the Caribbean dependent territories which are best dealt with in the region. The secretariat liaises with and supports governors and chief Ministers on matters relating to the promotion of economic development and good government and manages FCO and ODA financial resources available to the territories.

Bosnia

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration was given by the United Nations to declaring a safe area in north-west Bosnia to protect the dissident Bosnian Muslim population from attack by Bosnian Muslim troops supporting the Muslim Government in Sarajevo.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Nations has no plans to create any additional safe areas.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are being taken by the United Nations to disarm the Bosnian Muslims troops in the Gorazde exclusion zone.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: United Nations troops were deployed to Gorazde in April 1994 under Security Council Resolution No. 836, to deter attacks against the safe areas, to monitor the ceasefire, and to promote the withdrawal of military units other than those of the Government of the Republic of Bosnia-Herzegovina.

In the absence of any agreement between the parties to move towards demilitarisation of Gorazde, UNPROFOR is not mandated to disarm troops of either party.

Colombia

Mr. Llywd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received during the past two years on the subject of assistance, military or otherwise to the regime in Colombia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: We have received frequent representations. Our assistance has focused on the following priority areas which have been agreed with the Government of Colombia: renewable resources management, good government and help to counter the illicit production and trafficking of drugs.

Gibraltar

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to ensure that border controls on Gibraltar's Spanish frontier comply with European Community legislation.

Mr. Baldry: Gibraltar's position outside the Community's common customs territory allows Spain to maintain normal customs checks at the frontier. We view the current level of controls as disproportionate. We have protested strongly, and are considering next steps.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he is making to Spain about passport and customs delays on its frontier with Gibraltar; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: On 1 December, my hon. Friend the Minister of State summoned the Spanish ambassador to express our strong concern at these intrusive and disruptive checks, and made it clear that they should cease. Similar representations have been made on several other occasions and we shall continue to keep the position under close review.

World Service

Mr. Jim Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has agreed for the BBC World Service in the present funding triennium, 1994–95 to 1996–97.

Mr. Baldry: As stated in the recent White Paper, "The Future of the BBC" Cmnd 2621 of July 1994, the World Service will in future operate to targets and performance indicators agreed with the FCO. These will replace the detailed prescription of languages and hours of broadcasts. For the current triennium, 1994 to 1997, the following targets have been agreed for increasing overall World Service audiences and listenership among the better educated:

Other key targets are to increase output in programme minutes per £1,000 spent from 33 in 1994–95 to 40 in 1996–97, and to increase the hours of output per member of staff from 31½ in 1994–95 to 46 in 1996–97.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many operating theatre sessions have been cancelled in each region in each of the last five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information on cancellations of operating theatre sessions is not centrally available. Student Support

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of changes in the student support and tuition fee arrangements for Scottish domiciled students in session 1995–96.

Lord James Douglas Hamilton: I am publishing today the main rates of maintenance allowances payable under the students' allowances scheme and the postgraduate students' allowances scheme, including rates for those courses which do not attract student loans, together with the rates of various supplementary allowances payable to both undergraduate and vocational postgraduate award holders.

The support available to undergraduate students in 1995–96 through the main rates of maintenance grant and loan, taken together, will be 2½ per cent. higher than in 1994–95, thus maintaining its value in real terms. Postgraduate maintenance grants and supplementary allowances will be increased by a similar amount.

Tuition fees will continue to be reimbursed to institutions through the student support system on behalf of eligible students. The rates will be the same as in 1994–95.

These changes are consistent with those for England and Wales announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education. Details have been placed in the Library.

NHS Superannuation Scheme

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the report by the Government Actuary on his valuation of the national health service superannuation scheme in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: I have today placed copies of the report in the Library.

The report concludes that the rate of contribution required from employers to meet the scheme's future liabilities, after taking account of employees contributions, should be set at 4 per cent. of pensionable pay, a reduction of 1½ per cent. on the existing rate of 5½ per cent. The scheme's liabilities do not include the cost of pensions increase. Most of the costs of inflation proofing pensions are borne directly by the Exchequer and are not reflected in the above contribution rates.

I have decided to accept the actuary's recommendation and to reduce the employers contribution rate with effect from 1 April 1995. The rates of contribution paid by members of the scheme are not affected by this.

The reduction in employers' contributions will release an additional sum of some £22 million towards the funding of the NHS in Scotland.

Redundancies

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of redundancies among national health service staff (a) by grade and (b) by reason for each of the last five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Statistics on redundancies in the NHS in Scotland are not collected centrally other than in respect of staff who are both over 50 years of age and have at least five years' reckonable service for superannuation purposes where a benefit is immediately payable under the NHS (Compensation for Premature Retirement) (Scotland) Regulations 1981. The total number of such premature retirement awards for the last five years is as follows:

Number of cases	1,040	480	625	759	849

A breakdown by grade and by reason of redundancy is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Market Testing

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list those services that have been market-tested by his Department and won by the private sector, indicating the organisation that won the tender and its value.

Mr. Newton: No service in the Privy Council Office has been market-tested.

Energy Expenditure

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Lord President of the Council what was the total expenditure on energy for offices and buildings by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Newton: Expenditure on energy by the Privy Council Office amounted to £16,492 in 1991–92, £16,680 in 1992–93 and £13,977 in 1993–94. I am not responsible for any agencies.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Afzal v. Ford

Mr. Brazier: to ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what measures his Department is taking to monitor the effects of the Afzal v. Ford ruling; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: My Department is collecting statistics on the number of cases concluded each month through arbitration in the county courts, and a sample of cases concluded at trial broken down by the type of case and amount of the award. These data will, over a period, indicate whether changes have taken place, for example in relation to the number of lower value personal injury cases dealt with in the small claims procedure, and the total number of arbitrations compared with the number of trials.

Small Claims

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he plans to announce the review of the small claims court limit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor intends to keep the small claims limit under review. At present, officials are examining the volume of work received by the county courts in different monetary bands, gathering evidence on the current operation of the small claims procedure and considering other relevant information. Any proposals for change will be put out to public consultation in the usual way.

Market Testing

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list those services that have been market-tested by his Department and won by the private sector, indicating the organisation that won the tender and its value.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The services market tested by the Lord Chancellor's Department and won by the private sector are listed. The value of the contracts is £7,185,626.

Internet

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement about the plans of his Department to make information available on the Internet and the documents which he intends to be made available on the Internet over the next year which will be accessible via the world wide web server "open.gov.uk" or any specific departmental server.

Mr. John M. Taylor: My Department has no firm plans for the release of information through the Internet at this point. However, it is considering the potential of the CCTA government information service—world wide web server "open.gov.uk"—as a complementary service for the release of publicly available information.

Contact Centres

Mr. Alton: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many local authorities provide contact centres for fathers coming before family courts who wish to see their children; and what considerations are being made to extend the availability of contact centres across the country.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information sought is not a matter for the Lord Chancellor's Department.

Immigration Appeals

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the average cost of a hearing before a special adjudicator of the Immigration Appeals Authority of an application for bail by a person detained under Immigration Act powers.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information requested is not available. In any one case, the cost of a hearing depends on many factors, such as the number of parties and witnesses attending and giving evidence, the level of representation and whether or not an interpreter is required.

ENVIRONMENT

English Partnership

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the effect of the external finance limit on the EFL in the case of English Partnerships on the public sector borrowing requirement;

(2) what is the effect of guarantees provided by English Partnerships on the PSBR.

Sir Paul Beresford: The public sector borrowing requirement takes account of English Partnerships' external finance limit. Any calls arising from guarantees that English Partnerships give must be accommodated within its EFL, and therefore have no direct effect on the PSBR.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much was paid in housing benefit (a) to council tenants and (b) to non-council tenants; how much was received in housing revenue account subsidy in each local housing authority area; and what was the size of the surplus or deficit in each local housing authority in 1993–94.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: I have placed in the Library a copy of the information requested by the hon. Member.

Overpackaging

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what representations he has received regarding overpackaging;

(2) if he will introduce legal targets regarding the reduction of overpackaging; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: My Department has received over 450 representations about overpackaging in the past year.

There are strong financial incentives for reducing unnecessary packaging, and industry has made substantial progress in this area. The Government believe that the best way reducing of overpackaging is to build on these incentives through effective use of economic instruments. Our producer responsibility initiative for packaging waste and the recently announced landfill levy will provide substantial and additional incentives for the reduction of overpackaging.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total expenditure on energy for offices and buildings by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Sir Paul Beresford: The information is as follows:

£ million

	Department	Agencies
1991–92	1.03	1.05
1992–93	0.94	1.04
1993–94	0.90	1.10

Conservation

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his strategy for the purchase of land for the protection of flora and fauna; what role he envisages voluntary conservation organisations might play in the purchase and management of land of conservation importance; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Paul Beresford: In keeping with the voluntary principle of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, new acquisitions by the county councils are restricted to fragile sites where no alternative owners are willing or able to undertake appropriate management. Voluntary bodies play an important part in conserving important wildlife sites. Where appropriate, English Nature can give financial support to voluntary bodies for purchase and management.

Valuation Tribunals

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how members of local valuation tribunals are appointed and by whom;

(2) by what means small business proprietors can become appointed to local valuation tribunal panels.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Valuation tribunal members are appointed by the county council, metropolitan district council or London borough council for the area concerned. Each appointing authority decides its own method of selection and appointment, but my Department has issued general guidance, stressing in particular the desirability of appointing members from a wide cross-section of the community. I would expect appointing authorities to welcome approaches from people interested in serving on tribunals. Tribunal presidents and clerks will also be happy to discuss with such people the work of tribunals and what is expected of members.

Special Areas of Conservation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what further progress he has to announce on the consultation with owners and occupiers of land affected by the designation of special areas of conservation under the European union habitats directive, pursuant to his undertaking on 19 July, Official Report, column 240;

(2) what further progress he has to announce on the selection and designation of sites to become special areas of conservation under the Conservation (Natural Habitats etc.) Regulations 1994 approved on 19 July, as required by the EU directive on the conservation of natural habitats and, pursuant to his undertaking to the House on 19 July, Official Report, column 240.

Mr. Atkins: The Government are considering with the nature conservation agencies the sites to be proposed to the Commission as candidate special areas of conservation in June 1995. The Government will publish a draft list of sites as soon as possible for consultation with owners, occupiers and other affected interests.

Habitats Directive

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects additional draft regulations to implement the EU habitats directive on consents and permissions to be laid before the House, as indicated in his undertaking of 19 July, Official Report, column 242.

Mr. Atkins: The Government are currently considering the form that the additional regulations should take. They will be laid as soon as possible in the new year.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress he has to report on the establishment of joint working arrangements between sea fisheries committees, harbour authorities and local authorities as regards meeting the United Kingdom obligations under the European Union habitats directive for effective conservation in the maritime zone up to six miles offshore in (a) England, (b) Wales and (c) Scotland, as announced in his undertaking of 19 July, Official Report, column 242.

Mr. Atkins: The obligations under the directive relate to designated special areas of conservation. No SACs will be designated until the list has been agreed with the Commission some time after June 1995. Where necessary for marine sites, management schemes will be developed. I expect these to build upon the arrangements being developed on a voluntary basis for many areas of our coast.

County Hall

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will identify by building which parts of the county hall complex have been sold; and which parts remain to be sold.

Sir Paul Beresford: The riverside—or main—building of county hall has been sold by way of the grant of a 999-year lease. Contracts for the sale of the remainder of the county hall site were exchanged on 14 October, with completion being set for 29 March 1995.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what new measures he proposes to ensure that the international commitments made by the Prime Minister at the Rio Earth summit to reduce carbon dioxide emissions to 1990 levels by the year 2000 are met, following the decisions not to increase value added tax on domestic fuel to 17.5 per cent.

Mr. Atkins: The Government are committed to fulfilling their obligations under the climate change convention. We are considering whether further measures are needed to ensure that we remain on course.

Civil Estate (Charges)

Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the Government's policy in respect of charging users of publicly funded resources a charge equivalent to a full commercial rental value in respect of real property; and what exceptions have been made to this policy.

Sir Paul Beresford: Under the property repayment system introduced in 1984, Departments occupying the Government's civil estate currently pay an opportunity cost rent equivalent to the open market rent for their occupations of Government freeholds and properties on historically low rents. The opportunity cost rents are reviewed every five years.

Market Testing

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those services that have been market-tested by his Department and won by the private sector, indicating the organisation that won the tender and its value.

Sir Paul Beresford: In this Department so far, nine market tests which have involved exposing in-house functions to competition have been awarded to outside bidders, with a total value of £706,300.

With the exception of staff catering at the Building Research Establishment, these were one-off construction research projects.

Departmental Offices

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will itemise the refurbishment works undertaken on buildings housing departmental staff in the last three years, indicating the costs involved and the nature of the refurbishments.

Sir Paul Beresford: In addition to works undertaken on DOE buildings, the Department of the Environment Property Holdings undertakes work on buildings occupied by more than one Department. All the buildings concerned are on the common user estate. Works of less than £10,000 have been excluded from the table. Details of refurbishment works funded by other departments will be provided by the Ministers concerned.

Housing Expenditure

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will outline the expenditure plans in each year from 1994–95 to 1997–98 in respect of (a) the local authorities' housing investment programme and (b) the Housing Corporation's approved development programme.

Mr. Robert B. Jones [holding answer 8 December 1994]: The total of housing investment programme allocations in England for 1994–95 and 1995–96 are £1,326 million and £1,272 million respectively. Both figures exclude resources for estate action, which are now within the single regeneration budget.

It is not possible to give planned HIP allocations for 1996–97 or 1997–98. These depend on annual decisions about resources for special housing programmes, and the national level of receipts taken into account.

The Housing Corporation's gross capital resources for its approved development programme and the rough sleepers initiative are £1,533 million in 1994–95, £1,197 million in 1995–96, £1,177 million in 1996–97 and £1,191 million in 1997–98. The Housing Corporation will be publishing the full details of its approved development programme for 1995–96 later this month.

TREASURY

Internet

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the plans of his Department to make information available on the Internet and the documents which he intends to be made available on the Internet over the next year which will be accessible via the world wide web server "open.gov.uk" or any specific departmental server.

Mr. Nelson: The Treasury's Internet service was launched on 15 November 1994.

At present, the service includes the full details of the Budget, including my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor's Budget statement and all the Budget news releases. Other documents that are available include other Treasury news releases, speeches, minutes of the Chancellor's monthly monetary meetings with the Governor of the Bank of England, reports of the panel of independent forecasters and details of the fundamental expenditure review of Treasury running costs.

More information will be added in due course.

All this material is provided on the Treasury's own Internet server. The address for the Treasury's world wide web pages is "http://www.hm-treasury.gov.uk". In addition to the world wide web, the same information can be obtained by electronic mail or by FTP from the following addresses:

Email file transfer:	"ftpmail@hm-treasury.gov.uk"
File Transfer (FTP):	"ftp.hm-treasury.gov.uk"

The text of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" has been published on the Internet by HMSO, and is available at "http://www.open.gov.uk/budget94/budget94.htm;" it can also be located by a hypertext link from the Treasury's world wide web pages.

War Loan

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many recorded holders there are of the 3.5 per cent. war loan.

Mr. Nelson: There are approximately 243,000 accounts in 3½ per cent war stock on the Bank of England and other registers.

Insurance Premium Tax

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in what circumstances insurance policies for mortgage interest protection against sickness and unemployment are liable to the insurance premium tax; and what is his estimate of the effect on tax receipts of plans to restrict income support help with mortgage interest payments from October 1996.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Insurance policies for mortgage interest protection against sickness and unemployment are liable to insurance premium tax because they are a type of general insurance, almost all of which is subject to the tax. No specific estimate has been made of the effect on tax receipts of any increase in the use of such insurance—in the context of changes to the income support arrangements relating to mortgage interest payments—but any such effect is likely to be negligible.

Manufacturing Trade

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what was the contribution made to economic growth since 1992 by the reduction in the deficit on trade with the EEC in manufactures;

(2) what was the contribution made to economic growth since 1992 by the reduction in the deficit on trade in (a) manufactures and (b) finished manufactures.

Mr. Nelson: Between the fourth quarter of 1992 and the third quarter of 1994 gross domestic product increased by 6 per cent. Over the same period, net trade in manufactures contributed 0.9 percentage points to GDP growth, net trade in finished manufactures contributed 0.3 percentage points to GDP growth, and net trade in manufactures with countries in the European Union made a slightly negative contribution to GDP growth. However, more recently net trade in manufactures has accounted for a far more significant proportion of GDP growth, as the economies of the European Union have picked up.

Building Societies Acts

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to amend the Building Societies Acts to ensure that if the first named holder of a joint account dies the second named holder qualifies for any bonuses in the event of a takeover.

Mr. Nelson: I am currently reviewing the Building Societies Act 1986. In my interim statement of 6 July, I said that stringent statutory controls on takeovers would be retained. The review is now focusing on societies' accountability and powers, but I am taking careful note of all the comments I have received about the position of joint account holders. I hope to announce the conclusion of the review soon.

Official Residences (Expenditure)

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many meetings or functions have been or will be held at No. 11 Downing street in December 1994 and which alcoholic drinks will be available.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No such information is available.

Tourism

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give full details of all interdepartmental and non-governmental consultations carried out in the preparation of Customs and Excise compliance cost assessment No. 6 related to his Budget statement, with regard to the effect of the measures proposed on the international competitiveness of the United Kingdom tourism industry.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: In common with most other Budget measures, there were no such consultations in preparing the compliance cost assessment to which the hon. Gentleman refers. However, Customs and Excise has stated that the assessment will be reviewed in the light of any comments received.

EU Budget

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out the assumptions he made as to the increase in gross domestic product when calculating the United Kingdom contribution to the European Union budget for each year until 1999.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The growth assumptions used were consistent with those set out in the Budget of 29 November.

Finance Bill

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) on what date he plans to publish the Finance Bill;

(2) what plans he has to publish the Finance Bill before the House rises for the Christmas recess.

Sir George Young: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Southport (Mr. Banks) on Thursday 8 December, Official Report, column 330.

Customs and Excise

Mr. Denham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the average amount of VAT collected by one Customs and Excise VAT collection officer annually.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 8 December 1994]: For the year ending March 1994, Customs and Excise deployed 5,429 staff years on VAT visiting. These staff identified errors in traders' records which when corrected resulted in an increase in the net liability of £1,322 million, or an average of £243,507 per staff year. These figures do not take account of errors that traders might have found and corrected themselves.

Customs and Excise has recently reviewed the way in which it deploys staff to ensure compliance with VAT requirements so as to ensure increased effectiveness. Over the coming years, effort will be refocused on better education to assist businesses to get their VAT declarations right. In parallel with this, targeting of visits and assurance techniques will be improved.

Mortgage Statistics

Mr. Denham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the percentage of those with mortgages who are self-employed, employed on fixed-term contracts or who are employed on a part-time basis.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 8 December 1994]: Estimates from the spring 1994 labour force survey for Great Britain show that of all heads of households who were owner-occupiers with mortgages, 15 per cent. were self-employed; 2 per cent. were employed on fixed-term contracts; and 4 per cent. were working part time either as an employee or self-employed. These three groups make up 19 per cent. of all mortgage holders.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many new mortgages have been taken out in each of the last five years (a) in total and (b) by geographic region.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 8 December 1994]: Data for the total number of mortgages advanced are available in table 10.4 of "Housing and Construction Statistics 1983–1993" published by the Department of the Environment. These data are not published on a regional basis. However, the first column in table 10.9 of the same publication gives the percentage breakdown of new mortgages by region only for advances made by building societies.

Income Statistics

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give an estimate of the change in real personal disposable income over the whole of 1994 and in each quarter of 1994, both in aggregate and on a per capita basis.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 9 December 1994]: At this stage, quarterly information on real personal disposable income in aggregate and on a per capita basis is available only for the first half of 1994. It can be found on the Central Statistical Office database, series CECP and CAIU respectively. The Budget forecast is for no change in the level of real personal disposable income in 1994 as a whole compared with 1993. Quarterly forecasts are not published.

National Lottery

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the main expected effects on the public accounts from 1994–95 to 1997–98 of the national lottery, including the effects on general Government expenditure, general Government revenue, the general Government borrowing requirement and the public sector borrowing requirement.

Mr. Aitken [holding answer 9 December 1994]: Proceeds paid into the national lottery distribution fund are part of general Government revenue and spending of these proceeds part of general Government expenditure. The GGR figures in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" include projections of £0.2 billion in 1994–95, £0.7 billion in 1995–96, £0.9 billion in 1996–97 and £1.1 billion in 1997–98. These figures do not include lottery duty because the net effect of the lottery on tax revenues is expected to be broadly neutral after redistributive effects. The GGE figures include projections of £0.0 billion, £0.5 billion, £1.0 billion and £1.0 billion respectively for those years. The difference between these flows in any particular year affects the general Government borrowing requirement and the public sector borrowing requirement. The spending of these proceeds is outside the public expenditure control total.

British Nuclear Fuels Ltd.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the main effects on the public sector accounts from 1992–93 to 1997–98 of the re-classification of British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. as a public corporation, including the effects on the public expenditure new control total, general Government expenditure, the general Government borrowing requirement and the public sector borrowing requirement.

Mr. Aitken [holding answer 9 December 1994]: The figures for the control total contained in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" include the following amounts for BNFL's external financing requirements for the years in question:

	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98
EFR	–392	–653	–422	–411	–573	–244

The reclassification of BNFL as a public corporation in national accounts had no effect on general Government expenditure or the general Government borrowing requirement. However, it did mean that BNFL's market and overseas borrowing became part of the public sector borrowing requirement. The amounts in each year are:

£ million

	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98
EFR	–417	–679	–449	–439	–601	–272

The difference between the two sets of figures represents the payment of the fossil fuel levy to BNFL which is now included in its external financing requirement but was previously outside the control total. These payments have been included in general Government expenditure since the 1993 national accounts Blue Book.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Market Testing

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list those services that have been market-tested by his Department and won by the private sector, indicating the organisation that won the tender and its value.

The Attorney-General: The reprographics service of the Crown Prosecution Service headquarters was market-tested in 1991 and the contract awarded to Williams Lea FM. The value of the contract is approximately £1 million.

Brendan Smyth

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Attorney-General what information he, the Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland or the RUC have about approaches made by Father Bernard Marshall of the Norbertine Canons based in County Cavan to a family whose children had been abused in Northern Ireland by Father Brendan Smyth after warrants for the latter's deportation had been delivered by the RUC to the Garda in April 1993 and prior to his subsequent conviction in January 1994; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Wheeler: I have been asked to reply.

The RUC investigated an allegation from a member of the public of an attempt to pervert the course of justice by taking a statement from a member of the family of a victim of Brendan Smyth.

In the light of this statement, it was decided that no further action was appropriate.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Bosnia-Herzegovina

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the value since February 1994 of monthly supplies of humanitarian aid from (a) Government and (b) non-governmental organisations to Bosnia-Herzegovina; and what were the monthly targets.

Mr. Baldry: Monthly figures for the value of humanitarian aid to Bosnia-Herzegovina since February 1994 are not available. According to the UN Department of Humanitarian Affairs, the value of 1994 aid contributions to the former Yugoslavia reported to the DHA by donors as at 27 October 1994 was:

Governments	367,872,094
European Union	62,198,805
UN Agencies	12,597,735
Red Cross	42,054,618
Non-Government Organisations	131,254,905
Others	7,545,230
Total	623,523,387

UN figures for food aid targets and deliveries to Bosnia-Herzegovina are:

	Target (tonnes)	Delivered (tonnes)
1994
February	42,000	22,000
March	47,000	43,000
April	27,000	25,000

The Prime Minister [holding answer 29 November 1994]: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood).

Details of parliamentary private secretaries for earlier dates are a matter of public record.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Prime Minister if he will itemise the refurbishment works undertaken on buildings housing departmental staff in the last three years, indicating the costs involved and the nature of the refurbishments.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment today at columns 436–39.

In 1991–92 the kitchens used for catering for official functions in 10 Downing street were refurbished to bring them into line with the requirements of the then new food hygiene regulations. The cost of these works was £122,000 excluding value added tax and fees.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Prime Minister how many bottles of (a) whisky, (b) other spirits and (c) wine were bought from public funds for use at No.10 Downing street and the Prime Minister's other official residences in 1993–94; and how much they cost.

Shareholders

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister what consideration he is giving to how shareholders might be given additional powers to influence boardroom pay and perks.

The Prime Minister: Shareholders are already able to influence directors' remuneration. The Government are always ready to consider ideas for improving shareholders' powers or the information which is made available to them. It was announced in the White Paper on competitiveness—CM 2563—that the Government have been reviewing a number of aspects of company law, including directors' duties.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister how many parliamentary questions tabled in the last Session of Parliament were not answered on the ground that the information sought was not held centrally by his Department.

Members. These measures were provided on the advice of those responsible for protective security and reflected on assessment of the threat to the individuals concerned. All spending is carefully monitored and controlled by those responsible.

Information in the form requested for before that date is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: The citizens charter has led to considerable improvements in public services. Details of these improvements have been published in the citizens charter reports in 1992 and 1994. There have also been 227 charter mark awards, each one recognising excellence in public service delivery.

Public Complaints

37. Mrs Angela Knight: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress his Department has made in making it easier for citizens to complain about the delivery of public services.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: Well-publicised and easy to use complaints procedures are a key principle of the citizens charter. In addition, our independent complaints task force is looking at how public services handle complaints and where improvements can be made.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: The total expenditure on energy for offices and buildings in my Department and its agencies for each of the last three years was:

Tinnitus

Mr. Benton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the current work of the Institute of Hearing Research on tinnitus.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: Although work on tinnitus does not currently form a major theme of activity at the Medical Research Council's Institute of Hearing Research, the institute does undertake some tinnitus research in several areas. These include an epidemiological study of risk factors associated with tinnitus and its effects on lifestyle; three studies on the extent of referral by GPs for specialist advice; and methodological research aimed at establishing an improved scale of tinnitus severity. Links with the Nottingham tinnitus clinic are actively maintained. The MRC is always willing to consider soundly-based research proposals in competition with other applications.

CERN

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy on investment in new developments at CERN.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: The Government have consistently expressed their support in principle for the next major development planned at CERN, the large hadron collider project. It is widely acknowledged to be the right next step for the organisation and more generally for particle physics at the high-energy frontier. However, the LHC, like many other major international scientific initiatives, will be very expensive. Before giving final approval, therefore, it is essential that the project is based on a fair and sustainable financial framework. This will ensure that the investment made in the project gives the best possible value for money, both scientifically and economically. It is only by ensuring that major international collaborative facilities such as CERN are tightly managed that we will be able to afford the domestic science programmes which will exploit those facilities fully.

Market Testing

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list those services that have been market-tested by his Department and won by the private sector, indicating the organisation that won the tender and its value.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: Those services market tested under the "Competing for Quality" initiative by the Cabinet Office, Office of Public Service and Science, including its agencies, HMSO and COI, and won by the private sector, are as follows:

Activity Tested (and area)	Successful Tenderer
Telephonist Service for Downing Street—Cabinet Office	Manpower plc
Office Services—Cabinet Office	Serco Ltd.
Recruitment Monitoring—OPSS	PE International Ltd.
Facilities Management—CCTA	Tarmac Construction Ltd.
Reprographics—Chessington	Dytecna Ltd.
Typing Services—HMSO	Manpower plc
Passport Supply and Production—HMSO	Thomas De La Rue
Classified Printing—HMSO	Greenaways
Office Services: Custody Cleaning—COI	Royal British Legion Cleancare Ltd.
Catering—COI	Gardner Merchant Ltd.

The total value of these services is just over £3.9 million per annum. Individual contract values are not given as this would prejudice the legitimate commercial interests of those companies involved. Information on the restrictions of publication of commercial data within Government can be found in the code of practice on access to Government information, guidance on interpretation. Information on all market testing activities within central Government is published monthly in the "Market Testing Bulletin", a copy of which is available in the House of Commons Library.

EDUCATION

Schools, Islington

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will arrange for ballots to be conducted in each secondary school in Islington on the issue of whether the school should apply for grant-maintained status.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no powers to arrange for any school to conduct a ballot on whether to apply for grant-maintained status. A ballot, in Islington as elsewhere, may only be triggered by a resolution of the governing body of the school, or by the presentation to the governing body of a parental petition.

Energy Expenditure

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the total expenditure on energy for offices and buildings by (a) her Department and (b) her agencies in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Forth: The total expenditure incurred by this Department on energy in respect of the offices and buildings occupied in each of the last three financial years is as follows:

1991–92	577,600
1992–93	530,600
1993–94	550,600

The Teachers Pensions Agency shares a supply of electricity with the Department on its Darlington site. It is therefore not possible accurately to disaggregate the agency's energy costs which are included in the figures given.

Market Testing

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will list those services that have been market-tested by her Department and won by the private sector, indicating the organisation that won the tender and its value.

Mr. Boswell: The information requested is as follows:

Service	Successful contractor
The Department's publications despatch service	Westex Ltd.
Catering at the Department's headquarters	Gardner Merchant
Banking services provided to the Teachers Pensions Agency	Midland Bank plc
The Department's data preparation service	Compower Ltd.

The value of the individual contracts is commercially confidential information.

Political activity is excluded if there might be a conflict of interest between political activity and the holding of a public appointment. The rules on political affiliation and conflict of interest are laid down in the Office of Public Service and Science "Guide on Public Appointments Procedures".

DEFENCE

Indonesia

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many armed forces personnel have been provided by the Ministry of Defence to (a) support sales of planes and other military equipment to Indonesia during the last two years and (b) have been stationed in Indonesia during the last two years; and for what purpose they were there.

Mr. Soames: Other than a colonel attached to the British embassy in Jakarta as defence attache and a warrant officer to support him, no military personnel have been stationed in Indonesia for any purpose during the last two years.

Market Testing

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his answer of 5 December, Official Report, column 108, what was the basis on which he calculated annual savings arising from the market testing of health provision for British forces.

Mr. Soames: The level of savings arising from exposing an activity to competition will depend upon the outcome of the exercise to test the efficiency of in-house services and functions against tenders from outside contractors. In the case of health provision for the armed forces, many of the support activities which make up the service are still the subject of feasibility studies to determine objectives, priorities and optimum savings routes. Experience has shown that for departmental purposes, a savings target of at least 15 per cent. of the annual operating cost should be assumed to flow from the exposure of an activity to competitive pressures, but the final savings achieved will depend on the outcome of the market-testing exercise itself, and in many cases will be considerably higher.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those services that have been market-tested by his Department and won by the private sector, indicating the organisation that won the tender and its value.

Mr. Freeman: In the 30-month period up to September 1994, the Ministry of Defence examined 82 support activities with annual operating costs in the order of £600 million under the Department's "Competing for Quality" programme, which included market-testing activities. This resulted in contracts being placed with the private sector for 46 of these activities covering over two thirds of the total annual operating costs. Full details of individual contracts remain commercial-in-confidence, although some information on contracts awarded as a result of market tests is published monthly in the "Market Testing Bulletin" available from the House of Commons Library.

EH101 Helicopters

Sir Patrick McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the Royal Air Force to place an order for the EH101 helicopter.

Mr. Freeman: We hope to be able to make an announcement shortly on our decision on support helicopters for the Royal Air Force.

Ministerial Travel (Israel)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) in what capacity Mr. David Hart took part in his recent visit to Israel; and who paid for his costs;

(2) who was in the official party during his recent visit to Israel; and who paid for the visit.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. and learned Friend was accompanied by Mrs. Rifkind, Mr. David Hart in his capacity as an independent adviser, Mr. Crispin Blunt—special adviser—the MOD press secretary, two members of his private office staff and an MOD official.

The costs of the visit were met from public funds with the exception of Mr. Hart, who paid his own costs.

"Front Line First"

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultancy contracts have been let by his Department as part of the "Front Line First" review; which companies have won contracts; and what sums of money are involved.

Mr. Freeman: BAe Sema, Price Waterhouse, Monk Dunstone Associates, McKenna and Co. and P-E International provided advice to the defence costs study. A number of individuals from outside Government, as listed in the answer given to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 29 April, Official Report, column 399, were engaged to provide advice to the defence costs study teams.

Not all those listed charged for their services, although the companies for which some worked did. Those companies were:

Capita Managed Services Ltd.
Jones Lang Wootton
Trias Management Consultants
Ian McNeil Associates
Central Research Laboratories Ltd.

The total cost in fees to the Ministry of Defence of the work done in the study phase of "Front Line First" inclusive of VAT is £396,597. This total includes an estimate of the elements of the costs of contracts held with BAe Sema and Price Waterhouse prior to the DCS, the terms of which were changed to reflect, inter alia, work done on the DCS.

RAF Chivenor

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the projected cost of new sewerage works at RAF Chivenor.

Mr. Soames: There are no plans for any new sewerage works at RAF Chivenor other than routine maintenance. If it is not possible to find an alternative defence use for the main site at RAF Chivenor following the departure of the RAF, some work would be necessary to link the SAR flight to the local council's main drainage system. The estimated cost of this work is approximately £100,000.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he has given to moving the Sea King search-and-rescue flight currently stationed at RAF Chivenor to St. Mawgan.

Mr. Soames: As part of my Department's review of its requirement for military SAR, a number of possible basing options were considered. For the south Wales and west country area, it was concluded that optimum SAR cover could be provided from RAF Chivenor, and the Brawdy flight was subsequently transferred there on 1 July 1994.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much his Department has spent and how much it plans to spend on building works to enable the Sea King flight to operate at RAF Chivenor.

Mr. Soames: Some £47,100 has so far been spent and a further £51,100 is planned to be spent on building works at RAF Chivenor to enable the Sea King flight to operate there.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his estimate of the costs of supporting and RAF Sea King flight at RAF Chivenor in (a) 1994–95 (b) 1995–96 and (c) 1996–97.

Mr. Soames The information requested is as follows:

1995–96	573,000
1996–97	1,030,000

These figures represent the station infrastructure and operating costs. They do not include the costs of operating the SAR flight.

Fox Hunting

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much his Department has spent on fox hunting for members of the armed forces in each of the last five years.

Mr. Soames: Fox hunting is undertaken by some members of mounted units as part of normal training, and costs are not separately identified. No additional costs are incurred by my Department as a result of participation in this activity since these are met by the individuals concerned.

Expenditure

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the percentage fall in defence expenditure from 1984–85 to 1997–98.

Mr. Soames: Based on current plans, defence spending is expected to decline by around 28 per cent. in real terms between 1984–85 and 1997–98, as measured by the GDP deflators published in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report", 1995–96—House of Commons No. 12. Outturn in 1984–85 included some expenditure for the security and intelligence services which now falls outside the defence budget.

Airwork Ltd.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how much his Department is attempting to recover from Airwork Ltd. following work undertaken by that company at RAF St. Athan;

(2) what is his estimate of the total cost of the damage caused by Airwork Ltd. on the Tornados based at RAF St. Athan.

Mr. Freeman: Preparation of my Department's claim, for costs consequent upon the damage to Tornado F3 aircraft caused by Airwork, is not yet complete.

Aircraft Movements

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many aircraft movements by (a) Southampton University Air Squadron and (b) others took place on Saturdays and Sundays in (i) September 1994, (ii) October 1994 and (iii) November 1994 at Aircrafts and Armaments Experimental Establishment Boscombe Down.

Mr. Soames: The information requested is as follows:

	Southampton University Air Squadron	Others
September	10	106
October	132	79
November	225	106

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

International Civil Aviation Organisation

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how often his senior staff meet their colleague in the Department of Transport to discuss British representation at the International Civil Aviation Organisation.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: United Kingdom representation on the council of the International Civil Aviation Organisation, the office and staff is fully funded by the Department of Transport. The posts of United Kingdom representative and alternate United Kingdom representative are filled by the Department of Transport. There are no detailed discussions between FCO and DOT officials on representation. However, FCO and DOT officials have regular and close contact on the international aspects of British aviation policy and the DOT attends meetings held by the FCO to discuss the United Kingdom's policy interests in the whole range of UN specialised agencies.

Public Appointments

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what criteria govern his decision in respect of the public appointments to which political activity is relevant.

Mr. Goodlad: The criteria which govern the composition of the governing bodies of non-departmental public bodies for which the Foreign and Commonwealth Office is responsible and to which political activity are relevant are as follows:

Political activity is relevant where the board needs to cover a range of political experience to support the work of the NDPB in question. This will depend on the political affiliation and experience of the MPs, MEPs and Members of the House of Lords from whom the candidates are drawn.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the public appointments in respect of which political party membership is relevant.

Mr. Goodlad: The appointments to the boards of non-departmental public bodies for which the Foreign and Commonwealth Office is responsible in respect of which political party membership is relevant are:

Westminster Foundation for Democracy:

The following are appointed by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State:

Conservative 3, including the chairman—MPs
Labour 3—2 MPs and 1 MEP

Liberal Democrat 1—MP.

Jean Pierre Derisbourg

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the European Commission about the investigation by the EU's external relations inspection unit into the expenses of Jean Pierre Derisbourg.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We attach the utmost importance to encouraging sound financial management in the institutions of the Community, and will insist on appropriate action whenever instances of fraud or mismanagement are apparent. Within the Council, we have pressed the Commission for a report on its investigation into the matter raised by the hon. Member.

Western European Union

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration they are giving to hold WEU meetings concurrently with meetings of the EU Foreign Affairs Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: WEU meets at ministerial level every six months, more often if required in a crisis, with Foreign and Defence Ministers from the 24 nations which are either full members, associate members, associate partners or observers. In the past, there have been occasions when WEU Ministers have met back to back with the Foreign Affairs Council, but it would not be practical to make this a rule.

Bulgarian Vessels (Safety)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will hold urgent talks with the Bulgarian Government to discuss matters of safety of the Bulgarian vessels Afala, Aktinia, Kaprela, Ofelia,and Rotalia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The safety of foreign-flagged vessels in British waters is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport. But FCO officials have supported the DOT in discussions with Bulgarian officials about the safety of these vessels. They have also raised the question of safety during separate discussions with the Bulgarians, and have been active in support of the DOT with the flag states of other such vessels.

I understand that as a result of the repair work that has been undertaken, the Marine Safety Agency has now been able to lift the detention order of the Ofelia, one of the Bulgarian vessels.

Human Rights (Workplace)

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will meet the director general of the International Labour Organisation to discuss ways of incorporating a social clause supporting human rights in the workplace in the rules and procedures of the new World Trade Organisation.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have no plans to meet the director general of the International Labour Organisation to discuss ways of incorporating a social clause supporting human rights in the workplace in the rules and procedures of the new World Trade Organisation.

We do not support calls for the inclusion of a social clause in the general agreement on tariffs and trade or other multilateral trade agreements under the auspices of the World Trade Organisation. We remain unconvinced that trade measures are an appropriate or effective way of addressing the issue of workers' rights.

EC Presidency

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out the rota of EC countries holding the presidency to the end of 1997.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The member states holding the presidency will be as follows:

1995: France
Spain

1996: Italy
Ireland

1997: Netherlands
Luxembourg

Mr. Edsil Charles Fordyce

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will now reconsider the decision of his Department to refuse entry into the United Kingdom for Mr. Edsil Charles Fordyce; and if he will make a statement on the criteria used by his Department in deciding on humanitarian visits to the United Kingdom of foreign citizens.

Mr. Baldry: Ministers do not intervene in individual cases unless there is evidence of illogicality or procedural error in handling the application or there are exceptional compassionate circumstances.

Entry clearance officers take all aspects, including those of a humanitarian nature, of an application into consideration when making decisions.

Gibraltar

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Spanish Government regarding border controls between Spain and Gibraltar.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have repeatedly and vigorously protested at high level to the Spanish authorities about the harassment at the frontier and the disruption to normal movement across the border. We are keeping the position under close review.

Market Testing

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those services that have been market-tested by his Department and won by the private sector, indicating the organisation that won the tender and its value.

Mr. Goodlad: None of the services market-tested so far by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office has been won by the private sector.

Macedonia

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans there are to establish a British Council Office in Macedonia.

Mr. Baldry: The British Council has no plans at present to expand beyond the resource centre which it maintains in Skopje but it is alive to the interest and opportunities there and keeps the position under review.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans there are to establish at the British embassy in Macedonia a facility for issuing visas to those wishing to visit the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The embassy in Skopje accepts diplomatic and official applications, refugee cases accepted jointly by the United Nations High Commission for Refugees and the Home Office and applications from visitors sponsored by the British Government and the British Council. The premises occupied by the embassy are not suitable for a full visa service.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the countries visited by a spouse accompanying a Minister on overseas visits, since 1 October 1993; which Minister was accompanied; what was the cost of each visit; and what were the dates and the duties undertaken by the spouse during such visits.

Mr. Goodlad: The list gives details of visits made by a spouse accompanying a Minister overseas since 1 October 1993. In each case, the spouse carried out an official programme arranged by the post concerned. On each occasion the guidelines in "Questions of Procedure for Ministers" were followed and accord with departmental practice which has existed since at least 1985.

HEALTH

Spending Statistics

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the per capita spending figure for each (a) district health authority and (b) family health services authority in each of the last four years.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 7 December 1992 at columns 513–18, and to the reply the then Minister for Health, my right hon. Friend the Member for Peterborough (Dr. Mawhinney), gave him on 26 May at column 305. The per capita spend for district health authorities and family health services authorities for 1991–92 and 1993–94 will be placed in the Library.

Comparisons of these per capita spend figures need to be treated with caution. First, not all the expenditure covered arises from population-related activities. Secondly, crude populations do not reflect differences in age structure or relative health care need. These differences feature in the formulae used to inform the main allocations made to DHAs.

NHS Managers

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for each year since 1980 the number and cost of managers in the NHS.

Mr. Malone: The general management function was introduced in 1984, following acceptance of the 1983 Griffiths report which concluded that the national health service was undermanaged. Interim arrangements existed for general management appointments until permanent selection and appointment arrangements took effect from February 1986. The senior management staff group was created subsequently. For information on the numbers of general and senior managers for the years ending September 1985 through to September 1990, I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend the Member for Peterborough, the then Minister for Health, (Dr. Mawhinney), gave my hon. Friend the Member for Surrey, North-West (Sir M. Grylls) on 26 March 1993 at column 755. At 30 September 1991, revised, 1992 and 1993, the number of general and senior managers were 14,500, 17,700 and 20,010 respectively. The increase in numbers over time is largely due to the reclassification of staff from professional and administrative groups, including many senior nurses, as managers. About two thirds of the increase between 1991 and 1992 and almost half the increase between 1992 and 1993 is the result of such reclassification.

The salary costs for general and senior managers from 1985–86 through to 1988–89 were £10,951,000, £25,677,000, £29,647,000 and £30,513,000 respectively. For the years 1989–90 to 1992–93 I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 3 November at column 1267. The provisional figure for 1993–94 is £606,002,000.

General and senior managers still account for only 2.6 per cent. of the total NHS work force in England and 3.6 per cent. of total NHS expenditure on salaries and wages. This is not excessive by any standard in a large organisation.

GP Fundholding

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence she has on the levels of support for fundholding among general practitioners; and what conclusions she draws from that evidence.

Mr. Malone: Over 35 per cent. of the population is now registered with a fundholding general practitioner. More general practitioners are preparing to join the scheme from next April and regional health authorities report considerable interest in the extended options for fundholding announced in October.

From this, and the benefits for patients fundholding is delivering, I conclude that we were right to enable general practitioners to purchase care and improve services for patients in this way and to extend the options to enable them to do so.

Brain Tumours

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the incidence of brain tumours in the United Kingdom; and what estimate she has made of the accuracy of the figures.

Mr. Sackville: In 1989, the latest available figures, there were 2,947 registrations of newly-diagnosed cases of malignant neoplasm of the brain—international classification of diseases in 191—in England. This figure is likely to be an underestimate because accurate diagnosis of many brain tumours is problematic.

Information relating to Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Scotland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Chiropody

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her policy towards chiropody in the NHS; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Chiropody treatment within the national health service should be available to those with a clinical need for this service. Provision is determined locally by health authorities in the light of their priorities and resources. "Feet first", the report of a joint Department of Health and NHS chiropody task force, was issued to the service in September and aims to assist authorities in developing better, more cost-efficient chiropody services. Copies are available in the Library.

Energy Expenditure

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total expenditure on energy for offices and buildings by (a) her Department and (b) her agencies in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Sackville: The expenditure on energy for the Department and its agencies is shown in the table.

	1991–92 £ million	1992–93 £ million	1993–94 £ million
Department	2.514	2.093	1.558
Agencies	—	0.230	0.393

Notes:

1. Figures have not been adjusted for inflation.
2. Figures are not directly comparable from year to year because of organisational changes to the Department following the establishment of next steps executive agencies.
3. Separate figures are not available for agencies for 1991–92.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what remuneration, allowances and other expenses are received by members of the boards of (a) Hillingdon hospital trust and (b) Portsmouth health care trust.

Mr. Malone: Chairmen of national health service trusts receive annual remuneration in the range of £15,125 to £19,285. The annual remuneration of non-executive directors of NHS trusts is £5,000. They are also entitled to claim allowances, at rates set centrally, for travel and subsistence necessarily incurred on trust business. Details of such payments are not available centrally.

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make an announcement about the fifth wave of national health service trusts.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have today approved 13 applications from hospitals and other units wishing to become national health service trusts. I have also given approval to two trust-to-trust mergers. Details have been placed in the Library.

AIDS and HIV

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the annual number of (a) new AIDS cases and (b) HIV reports for each year since 1990.

Mr. Sackville: The information for the United Kingdom is shown in the table:

	AIDS cases	HIV infection reports
1990	1,268	2,203
1991	1,357	2,485
1992	1,482	2,432
1993	1,609	2,408

Treatment Provision (Specialisation)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health to what extent she expects trusts within one health authority are (a) to compete and (b) to come to agreements about specialisation of treatment provision; which trend she expects to dominate over the next five years; what assessment she has made of the compatibility of the two purposes; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Competition with the national health service internal market makes a contribution to ensuring the most appropriate and efficient care for patients.

Mental Health Task Force

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to publish the report of the mental health task force; what estimate she has made of its resource implications; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: The report of the mental health task force London project "Mental Health in London: Priorities for Action" was published on 27 September, copies of which are available in the Library. The report summarised the key themes from the action plans which had been agreed by district health authorities, in conjunction with local authorities and other agencies, to deliver improvements in the quality and co-ordination of services for severely mentally ill people in London. No separate estimate has been made of the resource implications of these plans which form part of the authorities' overall programme of action to improve services.

NHS Deficits

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the figures for the deficit of each London NHS trust and district health authority at the end of the last financial year.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 30 November at column 787. Information on national health service trusts will be available shortly.

Mixed-sex Wards

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress she has made with regard to reviewing the mixed-sex ward policy in favour of single-sex wards.

Mr. Sackville: A revised patients charter standard to be issued early next year will require hospitals to inform patients in advance when they will be accommodated on a mixed sex ward for non urgent treatment. The standard also expects hospitals to respect the wishes, wherever possible, of those patients who prefer to be cared for in a single-sex ward or a single-sex bay. Patients can also expect to have access to single-sex washing and toilet facilities while in hospital.

In some circumstances—for example, in an intensive care unit or an observation unit where specialist nurses are employed—single-sex accommodation may not be available.

Mundesley Hospital

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment she has made of whether the Anglia and Oxford regional health authority received the best possible price for the Mundesley hospital on its disposal;

(2) if the Anglia and Oxford regional health authority received independent advice on the valuation of the Mundesley hospital prior to its disposal.

Mr. Sackville: Regional health authorities managing the disposal of surplus property must follow the guidance contained in "Property Transactions in the NHS", part of the estatecode series. Independent valuation advice is not required where the RHA has suitably qualified in-house staff, which is the case in Anglia and Oxford. The sale of Mundesley hospital is being conducted by the local office of a national firm of chartered surveyors. A sale has not yet been agreed, but the RHA is considering offers made for the property.

Special Hospitals

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list, for each special hospital, the originating local authority of their patients.

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally. I refer the hon. Member to the Special Hospitals Service Authority.

Psychiatric Hospitals

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of in-patient admissions to psychiatric hospitals has involved the use of the compulsory provision of the Mental Health Act 1988 for each year since its implementation.

Mr. Bowis: The information requested, which relates to the Mental Health Act 1983, is shown in the table:

Year	Per cent.
1984	7
1985	7
1986	7
1987–88	7
1988–89	7

Notes:

The figures from which the percentages between 1983 and 1986 were calculated, were collected by the mental health inquiry from all mental illness and mental handicap hospitals and units, and include figures from special hospitals and private nursing homes. These were based on calendar years. From 1987–88, the figures refer to financial year and were collected on forms KH15—from all NHS facilities—and K037—from private nursing homes—and also directly from the Special Hospitals Service Authority.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate she has made of (a) how much money has been saved by the closure of psychiatric hospitals and (b) where these savings have been spent; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: The information is not available centrally. We have made it clear that any money released from the closure of a mental hospital should be reinvested in community-based services for the same client group.

Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on her Department's latest assessment of the prevalence of attention deficit hyperactivity disorder; and what plans she has for treatment within the national health service.

Mr. Bowis: Research findings have estimated a prevalence of 1.7 per cent. in a population of primary school boys but there are gender differences and geographical variations in distribution.

Children with hyperkinetic disorders are seen routinely within child mental health services and paediatric services.

Mental Health Services

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many district health authorities are currently able to purchase treatment for mentally ill offenders, who are regarded as dangerous and difficult, from hospitals within their own geographical areas.

Mr. Bowis: District health authorities are responsible for assessing the health needs of their residents and for purchasing a range of services to meet those needs. Mentally disordered offenders are treated in a range of secure and non-secure settings in accordance with their differing needs. High-security services are provided by the three special hospitals which are funded centrally.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make bridging finance available to enable alternative community mental health services to be developed alongside existing in-patient services; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: It already is.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to ensure that adequate community mental health services are available before any powers of supervised discharge are introduced; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: It is for health authorities to purchase community mental health services to ensure the needs of patients being discharged from hospital are met.

Vaccinations

Mr. Renton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she will issue instructions that those people going abroad to countries where vaccinations for diseases including hepatitis A, typhoid and meningitis are necessary on holiday or business should pay the full price at national health service surgeries; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: Hepatitis A, typhoid and meningitis vaccinations are currently provided free of charge to people travelling abroad to high-risk countries.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many parliamentary questions tabled in the last Session of Parliament were not answered on the ground that the information sought was not held centrally by the Department.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many written parliamentary questions have had an answer containing the phrase, "This information is not held centrally" in each of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table.

Session	Number	Percentage of total answered
1989–90	157	3.4
1990–91	192	6.2
1991–92	130	8.5
1992–93	433	7.3
1993–94	225	4.5

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many written parliamentary questions have been answered with the words "No" or "None" in each of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: The number of parliamentary questions answered by "No" or "None" in the last five Sessions is shown in the table.

Session	Number
1990–91	31
1991–92	16

VAT (Fuel)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what will be the total cost to NHS trusts in the financial year 1995–96 of 17.5 per cent. VAT on heating fuel.

Mr. Sackville: The non-domestic supply of fuel and power, including that to hospitals, is subject to value added tax at the standard rate. Information on VAT paid by trusts on supplies of heating fuel is not separately identifiable.

Secret Files

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 30 November, to the hon. Member for Wallsend (Mr. Byers), Official Report, column 795, what are the subject headings of each of the secret files at her Department; how many secret files were held at her Department in each of the last five years; and for what reasons her Department cannot identify top secret files from those held as secret.

Mr. Sackville: The Department is able to identify top secret from those held as secret, but to give a breakdown for each of the last five years, and to list each of their subject headings, could be done only at disproportionate cost. However, the majority relate broadly to home and civil defence and co-ordination of emergency planning, and approximately 95 per cent. are held as secret.

Health Authorities (Public Meetings)

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many public meetings have been held by each trust, district health authority, family health services authority and regional health authority in each of the last three years.

Mr. Malone: Information on the number of authority and trust meetings held is not available centrally.

Official Secrets Acts

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which staff working in the Department of Health, national health service executive, regional health authorities, district health authorities, family health services authorities, trusts and general practitioner fundholder practices are covered by the conditions of the Official Secrets Acts.

Mr. Sackville: The Official Secrets Act 1989 applies, inter alia, to Crown servants. All Department of Health employees are therefore subject to the Act. Staff in other organisations listed will be subject to the Act if they have, or have had, official information, as defined in the Act, in their possession.

National Health Service Executive

Mrs. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans exist for the proposed regional offices of the NHSE to hold meetings in public or provide information to the public.

Mr. Malone: Regional offices of the national health service executive will not generally hold public meetings but will provide information to the public in accordance with the code of practice on access to Government information.

Food Allergies

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many physicians in English national health service hospitals are specialists in the treatment of food allergies.

Mr. Malone: Information in this form is not available centrally, as a number of clinical specialties treat food allergies.

Night Calls

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will abandon her proposals in respect of payment for night calls by general practitioners; and if she will make a statement;

(2) if she will make it her policy to remunerate general practitioners for night calls on an hourly paid basis; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: We are continuing to discuss general practitioners' out of hours remuneration with representatives of the medical profession.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her estimate of the time taken by the average general practitioner on the average night call from receipt of call to return to home or surgery; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: This information is not available.

Patient Complaints

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 24 November, Official Report, columns 323-24 on patient complaints, when she will publish data for 1993–94.

Mr. Malone: Information on patient complaints for 1993–94 is expected to be available early next year.

Intensive Care Beds

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will obtain a report as to the reasons why on the evening of 6 December there were no intensive care beds with neurosurgical capacity available within west Yorkshire; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for the Northern and Yorkshire regional health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. John Greetham, chairman of the authority, for details.

Blood

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what blood or blood products produced in the United Kingdom have been sold internationally; in what amounts; and to which countries.

Mr. Sackville: Blood collected by the national blood service is for the needs of the national health service not for sale or export. The amount of blood collected is determined by the needs of NHS hospitals for blood. Blood products are produced from components of donated blood by the bio products laboratory, which is a part of the National Blood Authority. Surpluses of products, that is after NHS demand has been satisfied, may be exported rather than destroyed. The only blood product where present availability significantly exceeds NHS demand is albumin and this is exported worldwide. This avoids waste of valuable resource and supplements NHS income available for patients.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what funds were made available during 1993 and 1994 to date to encourage an increase in the amount of blood donated; during which periods; and to what amounts;

(2) what sum was made available to each blood transfusion service for advertising purposes during the Christmas and new year period of 1994–95.

Mr. Sackville: National publicity to retain existing donors and recruit new donors for the national blood service is funded and organised centrally by the Department of Health. In 1993–94, £1.6 million was spent on national publicity. The budget for 1994–95 is £1.2 million. The proportions devoted to advertising at times of potential seasonal shortage and emergencies are 57 and 50 per cent. respectively. Local publicity is generally funded and organised by the National Blood Authority.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many operations were cancelled owing to a shortage of blood in 1993 and 1994 to date;

(2) what considerations led to the decision of the National Blood Authority to increase its stock levels of donated blood for the end of 1994 and the beginning of 1995.

(3) if she will make a statement on the expected supply of donated blood during the period of reorganisation of the National Blood Authority;

(4) what was the stock levels of blood held nationally for each month of 1993 and 1994 to date;

(5) during what periods during 1993 and 1994 to date there was a shortfall in the supply of blood;

(6) what criteria are used to decide the levels of donated blood kept by the National Blood Authority.

Mr. Sackville: The National Blood Authority is responsible for managing and monitoring the blood supply. A difficult balance has to be struck by the authority between unpredictable demand from the national health service and uncertain supply from the planned collection programme. This balance is subject to considerable seasonal and other fluctuations. From figures available centrally, over the last 12 months average blood stocks have ranged from 15,505 units in July 1994, to 27,142 units in February 1994. Blood stock figures for previous years are not available centrally. Although on occasions, including several days in September 1994, stocks fell below what the NBA regard as a safe limit emergency demands for blood have always been met. Figures are not available centrally on whether operations are cancelled.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals are in place regarding the transfer of jobs resulting from the proposed merger of blood transfusion centres.

Mr. Sackville: The National Blood Authority will produce final proposals after the consideration and evaluation of the comments received during the recent consultation exercise has been completed.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list (a) the performance indicator of each of the United Kingdom's blood transfusion centres, (b) the criteria by which any proposed merger will be judged and (c) the percentage number of contracted donors who actually donate at each transfusion centre.

Mr. Sackville: The details of the system are a matter for the National Blood Authority. Approximately 5 per cent. of all blood donations take place at transfusion centres.

Trust Property

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will describe and give the value of the property referred to in the Aintree Hospital National Health Service Trust (Transfer of Trust Property) (No. 2) Order 1994—S.I., 1994, No. 2988;

(2) if she will describe and give the value of the property referred to in the Hartlepool Community Care National Health Service Trust (Transfer of Trust Property) Order 1994—SI., 1994, No. 2989;

(3) if she will describe and give the value of the property referred to in the South Lincolnshire Community and Mental Health Services National Health Service (Transfer of Trust Property) Order 1994—S.I., 1994, No. 2991;

(4) if she will describe and give the value of the property referred to in the Hartlepool and Peterlee Hospitals National Health Service Trust (Transfer of Trust Property) Order 1994—S.I., 1994, No. 2990.

Mr. Sackville: The information will be placed in the Library.

Market Testing

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list those services that have been market-tested by her Department and won by the private sector, indicating the organisation that won the tender and its value.

Aggregate information on tender values for the Department's 1992–93 programme has already been published in the "Citizens Charter Second Report", available in the Library. Aggregate figures for the 1993–94 programme will be published shortly. Information about individual tender values is considered by the Department as commercially confidential, and cannot therefore be disclosed.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received regarding the risk to humans from BSE following the publication of "Precautions for Work in Human and Animal Transmissible Spongiform Encephalopathies".

Mr. Sackville: We have received one letter regarding the risk to human health from bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she plans following the publication document produced by the Advisory Committee on Dangerous Pathogens entitled "Precautions for Work in the Human and Animal Transmissible Spongiform Encephalopathies".

Mr. Sackville: The publication of this guidance has been brought to the attention of those with an interest in the national health service including district and regional directors of public health and consultants in communicable disease control, and also to relevant professional bodies. The Advisory Committee on Dangerous Pathogens will be keeping the guidance under review.

Working for Patients

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the document "Working for Patients".

Mr. Malone: "Working for Patients", which was published in 1989, set out the Government's plans for reform of the national health service. The implementation of these plans has led to major improvements in health services.

Leeds Health Authority

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking following the further report issued on 8 December by the health service ombudsman in respect of complaints against Leeds health authority; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: Leeds health authority has already taken action to address the issues raised by the commissioner.

Cot Deaths

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations she has received about child mattresses and cot deaths; and what is her Department's policy on the matter.

Mr. Sackville: More than 300 written representations on child mattresses and cot deaths have been received in the Department. In addition many people have telephoned.

Dr. Kenneth Calman, the Chief Medical Officer, has set up an expert group to steer further work by the Department of Health on cot deaths. The group will be chaired by Lady Limerick.

The terms of reference for the group are:

> To review the findings of the report on "Sudden Infant Death Syndrome"—the "Turner report", 1991—and any subsequent data on hypotheses linking antimony with unexplained deaths in infants; and to advise the CMO on what further studies should be undertaken to investigate postulated causal relationships between chemicals and cot deaths.

The group has been asked to review the available material and to provide the Department with advice as quickly as possible.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Hill Farmers

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he is taking to encourage hill farmers under 40 years old to remain on the land.

Mr. Ancram: The Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland operates a range of measures which either directly benefit or are available to hill farmers. None of these measures is specific to any particular age group.

In addition to the normal range of common agricultural policy support schemes farmers in the less-favoured areas are eligible for hill livestock compensatory allowances and an LFA supplement under the sheep annual premium scheme.

As part of its recently announced rural development programme the Department of Agriculture will be giving priority to proposals coming forward from the most deprived rural areas of Northern Ireland which would include much of the land owned and worked by hill farmers. The programme will build on the concept of involving local communities in the development of plans for their areas. It may provide assistance for a range of beneficiaries—collectives, co-operatives and rural community organisations—with the aim of strengthening the rural economy and maintaining viable rural communities. There is considerable scope for farmers and their families to become involved in the programme. The EC Leader II rural development initiative will also target partnerships and may assist with such activities as on-farm and off-farm diversification and small rural enterprises.

Insolvencies

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the cost to the Exchequer, broken down by category, of the process of insolvencies in each of the past seven years; and what has been the number of cases in each category for the same period.

Mr. Ancram: The available information is set out in the table. A breakdown by category of the costs of processing insolvencies could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

	Bankruptcies	Companies wound up	Total	[1]Costs £000
1987–88	169	52	221	449
1988–89	176	62	238	518

1993–94	487	86	573	1,090

[1] The costs column represents salaries and wages and general administration expenses.

Water Metering

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland further to his statement of 1 December, Official Report, column 1324, what plans he has to introduce water metering in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Moss: Meters are currently installed for water supplies to commercial, public, industrial and agricultural premises in Northern Ireland. Water supplies used solely for domestic purposes are not metered and there are no plans to introduce routine metering of purely domestic supplies.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many parliamentary questions tabled in the last Session of Parliament were not answered on the ground that the information sought was not held centrally by the Department.

Sir John Wheeler: In 13 out of a total of 1,469 questions answered, no information could be provided because of the disproportionate cost involved. In a further 10 questions only partial information could be provided.

Market Testing

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list those services that have been market-tested by his Department and won by the private sector, indicating the organisation that won the tender and its value.

Sir John Wheeler: The information provided relates to the period April 1992 to September 1994. In each of those cases listed an in-house bid was submitted for evaluation against tenders from alternative providers and subsequently won by the private sector:

Sludge Disposal—three tests

Road Reinstatement

Catering in Staff Restaurants—10 tests

IT Mainframe Operation

Sewer Maintenance—two tests

Building Maintenance

Castlenavan Quarry

In the unique circumstances of Northern Ireland, I would not wish to disclose the names of the successful contractors. We also consider that the disclosure of the tender prices could prejudice fair competition between contractors.

Patients' Complaints

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 25 November, Official Report, columns 405-6, how many hospital patient complaints there were in the four years prior to 1993–94.

Mr. Moss: Information relating to hospital patient complaints was not collected centrally prior to the year 1993–94.

EMPLOYMENT

Energy Expenditure

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total expenditure on energy for offices and buildings by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Miss Widdecombe: The total expenditure on energy for offices for the financial year 1991–92, 1992–93 and 1993–94 is shown in the table:

	1991–92 £	1992–93 £	1993–94 £
Employment Department	1,545,105	1,524,680	1,457,767

Labour Statistics

Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what was the number of adult (a) male and (b) female part-time workers in Great Britain in April 1993 and the proportion of those workers whose earnings, excluding overtime, fell below (a) £5.88 per hour, (b) £5.53 per hour, (c) £4.15 per hour, (d) £4.00 per hour, (e) £3.50 per hour, (f) £3.00 per hour and (g) £2.50 per hour;

(2) If he will list the proportions of (a) full-time employees earning less per week than (1) £221.50, (2) £208.53, (3) £156.40, (4) £150.80, (5) £131.95, (6) £113.10 and (7) £94.25, excluding overtime payments and (b) part-time employees earning less per hour than (1) £5.88, (2) £5.53, (3) £4.15, (4) £4.00, (5) £3.50, (6) £3.00 and (7) 2.50, excluding overtime payments giving (a) and (b) in relation to (A) Great Britain as a whole, (B) each county in England, (C) each county in Wales, (D) each London borough and Greater London as a whole and (E) each regional authority and borough in Scotland.

Mr. Oppenheim: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Rotherham (Mr. MacShane) on 29 November 1994, Official Report, column 635.

Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the proportion of manual, non-manual and all full-time employees earning less per week than (a) £221.50 (b) £208.53, (c) £156.40, (d) £150.80, (e) £131.95, (f) £113.10 and (g) £94.25, excluding overtime payments, giving each of the above in respect of (i) men, (ii) women and (iii) both sexes by standard economic region, for Great Britain as a whole, and for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Oppenheim: As the information is contained in a number of tables, I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy in the Library.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the effects of the jobseeker's allowance and the test for availability for work on those with a disability; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: In our proposals for the introduction of the jobseeker's allowance we recognise, as now, that some people with disabilities may have difficulties in making themselves available for the full range of employment opportunities. They will, therefore, be able to restrict their availability to the type or hours or work they are able to undertake within the limits of their physical or mental condition. In addition, many people with disabilities will continue to receive incapacity benefit or income support without having to be available for work. However, where people in these groups wish to claim jobseeker's allowance we propose that they should be able to do so, provided they are able to work and meet the other conditions for its receipt.

Work Start Schemes, South-west London

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the number of work start schemes now in place in south-west London; and if he will list them.

Miss Widdecombe: Work-start has been piloted in four areas: Devon and Cornwall; Kent; Tyneside; and south and south-west London. So far 138 people in south-west London have benefited from this scheme. Eighty-five are still participating and 108 employers have been involved.

Market Testing

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list those services that have been market-tested by his Department and won by the private sector, indicating the organisation that won the tender and its value.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is given in the following table, in line with the code of practice on access to Government information under the citizen's charter initiative. Information on individual tender values is commercially sensitive and cannot be provided, but aggregated total values for the different parts of the Employment Department group are included.

Young People

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide estimates of the number of 16 and 17-year-olds not currently in full-time education, work or training.

Mr. Paice: In October 1994, on the unadjusted basis there were 15,849 unemployed claimants aged under 18. All 16 and 17-year-olds who are not in education or a job are covered by the Government's guarantee of an offer of a youth training place.

Employment Policy

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are his policies towards maximising the number of local employees in total employment.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 7 December 1994]: The route to more jobs and fewer people out of work is clear: sound economic policies based on low inflation; a deregulated, flexible labour market; and help for those who need it most, especially the long-term unemployed. We will continue to pursue these policies, which have already led to a fall of over 450,000 in unemployment since the recovery in the labour market began. There is in place a very wide range of help to get unemployed people back into work, and my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor's Budget statement announced the extension of a number of programmes, including workwise, 1-2-1, community action, jobfinder's grant and work trials which will be available in Southwark and Bermondsey.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prevention of Terrorism Acts (Review)

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements he has made for the annual review of the Prevention of Terrorism Acts to be carried out; and how interested persons and organisations may submit their views for consideration.

Mr. Howard: Mr. J.J. Rowe QC will shortly begin to review the operation of the PTA in 1994. Written observations should be submitted to him c/o Room 647, Home Office, Queen Anne's gate, London SW1H 9AT by 13 January 1995.

Football Matches (Ticket Touting)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of arrests, cautions and convictions arising from the measures to curb ticket touting at football matches, contained in the Criminal Justice Act 1994; and if he will include details of those arrests, cautions and convictions, including the dates, games and grounds at which they took place.

Mr. Maclean: Information on the number of people arrested for specific offences is not collected centrally.

Information on cautioning and court proceedings data under section 166—summary offence of sale of tickets by unauthorised persons—of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 will not be available until autumn 1996.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many individuals applied for asylum in each year from 1990–91 to 1993–94 and in the first eight months of 1994–95; how many of these applications were granted; and how many of those who were unsuccessful are known to have left the United Kingdom.

(2) how many of the detainees in each of the detaining locations listed in his table C were long-term Immigration Act detainees.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The available information is that as at 8 December 1994—103 people who had sought asylum have been in detention for longer than six months and a further 18 have been detained longer than 12 months.

Information on the number of detained people as at 8 December 1994 who had sought asylum and have been in detention for longer than one month, by location of detention, is provided in the table.

Prisoners (Psychiatric Treatment)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each prison establishment the latest estimate of the number of inmates diagnosed as requiring psychiatric treatment in a hospital environment; and if he will express the figure as a percentage of the individual prison population.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. David Hinchliffe, dated 12 December 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of inmates in each Prison Service establishment who have been diagnosed as requiring psychiatric treatment in a hospital environment.

The most up to date information held centrally on mentally disordered offenders is for 21 September 1994. On that day there were 102 mentally disordered prisoners awaiting transfer to NHS psychiatric facilities of all types. The attached table lists by establishment the prisons in which these prisoners were held and expresses the figure for each individual establishment as a percentage of that prison's daily average population during the week beginning 4 September.

Electoral Registration

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what action he is taking to prevent the distribution of electoral registration forms with advertising material; and what assessment he has made of the extent of the practice;

(2) what authority electoral registration officers have to take any actions in an official capacity that are not specifically required of them by law;

(3) what authority electoral registration officers have under law to send out commercial advertising and other material covering statutory electoral registration forms;

(4) what regulations govern the handing out by an electoral registration officer or a local authority of commercial advertising material with ballot papers in polling booths.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: We are not aware of any cases involving the distribution of advertising material with electoral registration forms and no assessment has been made of the extent, if any, of this practice.

The duties of the electoral registration officer are set out in representation of the people legislation and the Juries Act 1974. The electoral registration officer's official duties include only those duties imposed by the law relating to elections or the registration of electors. The representation of the people legislation contains no provisions relating to the distribution of commercial advertising and other material with electoral registration forms, but there is no statutory provision prohibiting the distribution of such material.

Rules for the conduct of parliamentary elections are contained in schedule 1 to the Representation of the People Act 1983. Similar provisions are contained in the Local Elections (Principal Areas) Rules 1986 and the Local Elections (Parishes and Communities) Rules 1986. The only item which may be given to voters at the polling station is the ballot paper.

Speeding Offences

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many motorists have been prosecuted for speeding offences in each of the last three years in each police authority region.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what methods have been used to encourage nominations for the independent members of the new police authorities in England and Wales.

Mr. Maclean: Advertisements were placed in the following newspapers: The Independent on Sunday, The Observer, The Sunday Times, The Guardian, The Daily Telegraph, The Liverpool Daily Post and The Western Mail.

Officials wrote to members of the public who had expressed an interest in the appointments in response to the White Paper, or who had registered an interest in this type of work with the public appointments unit at the Cabinet Office.

In addition, police authorities were encouraged to bring the appointments to the notice of local community groups whose members might be interested in them.

Visas

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the visas to be offered to nationals of the former Yugoslavia deemed to be vulnerable and their close dependants have, to date, been issued; how many nationals of the former Yugoslavia have been issued with visas, outside the scheme refereed to, to obtain medical treatment in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: In November 1992, the Government agreed to accept up to 1,000 nationals of former Yugoslavia (and their dependants) considered by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to be vulnerable and in need of evacuation. To date, 831 principal applicants and 1,130 dependants have arrived in the United Kingdom under these arrangements. Of these, 77 people came specifically for medical treatment. Other nationals of former Yugoslavia have been admitted to the United Kingdom for medical treatment outside these arrangements, but no central record is kept of the number of visas issued specially for medical treatment.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the countries visited by a spouse accompanying a Minister on overseas visits since 1 October 1993; which Minister was accompanied; what was the cost of each visit; and what were the dates and the duties undertaken by the spouse during such visits.

Mr. Howard: Since 1 October 1993 there have been three occasions when the spouse of a Home Office Minister has accompanied the Minister on public duties overseas.

From 1 January 1994 to 7 January 1994 I was accompanied by my spouse on a trip to the United States of America at a cost of £2,919.35. From 20 August 1994 to 2 September 1994 I was again accompanied by my spouse on a trip to Latin America, which included visits to Argentina, Bolivia and Colombia, at a cost of £5,397.65.

On both occasions the necessary approval was sought in advance of the visit and full official programmes were followed which had been drawn up by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. These concentrated on charity work relating to Home Office interests, particularly drugs.

My hon. Friend the Minister for Bexhill and Battle (Mr. Wardle) undertook a trip to Greece from 17 November to 19 November 1993 when he was Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department. He was accompanied by his spouse at own cost.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Press Regulation

15. Sir David Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he proposes to publish his White Paper on the regulation of the press.

Mr. Dorrell: The White Paper on privacy and media intrusion will be published when we have completed our consideration of the legal issues relating to the proposed criminal and civil remedies.

South Bank (Tourism)

17. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment he has made of the contribution of the south bank of the Thames in Southwark and Lambeth to London's tourism; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sproat: I consider the south side of the Thames to be an important and integral part of the tourism industry in London. This area has a rich variety of attractions enjoyed by both visitors and residents.

On 29 November, my right hon. Friend was able to announce an additional £2 million over two years for the promotion of London tourism. This will be matched by the British Tourist Authority from existing resources and it, in conjunction with London First and the London tourist board, will seek to lever in matching funding from the private sector. This substantial new fund will make a significant contribution to further strengthen London's performance in tourism.

Sport

19. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what priority the Government give to promoting excellence among the United Kingdom's sporting competitors.

Mr. Sproat: The Government attach great importance to the pursuit of high standards of sporting achievement. This and the development of sporting opportunity for young people are the cornerstones of the Government's proposals for reform of the Sports Council which I announced to the House on 8 July, Official Report, columns 584–86.

Fibre-optic Communications

20. Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement on the implications of fibre-optic communications for television services in Wales.

Mr. Dorrell: Optical fibre networks offer a means of distributing television programmes, information or entertainment to the home. They can create new opportunities for programme makers and broadcasters, and can provide increasing choice for viewers, in Wales and throughout the United Kingdom.

Foundation for Sports and the Arts

21. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations he has received about the Foundation for Sports and the Arts.

Mr. Sproat: I have received a number of representations.

Children's Play

22. Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the time scale for publishing the results of his consultation on the future of children's play.

Mr. Sproat: I am currently considering the comments received on future arrangements for children's play submitted as part of our wider consultation on Sports Council restructuring. I have asked the council to provide me with its own view of how its current functions and staffing might be realigned to take account of the proposals set out in our 8 July statement, Official Report, columns 584-86. I shall then take final decisions on policy and the timing of implementation.

Television (Violence)

23. Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what additional proposals he has for reducing the amount and level of violence on television.

Mr. Dorrell: Broadcasters in the United Kingdom are independent of Government but have clear responsibilities with regard to programme content. Earlier this year, my predecessor held meetings with the chairman of the BBC, Independent Television Commission and Broadcasting Standards Council to discuss public concern about television violence. Both the BBC and ITC undertook to monitor the amount of violence and report back and we await their findings.

Television Transmissions

24. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will take powers to ensure that television viewers can receive transmissions from the appropriate regional ITV and BBC stations.

Mr. Dorrell: No. It is for the broadcasters to determine their own transmission arrangements in the light of their resources and within the constraints of frequency availability and engineering feasibility.

National Lottery

25. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement about the operation of the national lottery.

Mr. Dorrell: The Director General of the National Lottery regulates the operations of the licensed operator, Camelot plc, and would be happy to write to the hon. Member about any operational matters he wishes to raise.

26. Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to monitor expenditure patterns by households and individuals on national lottery tickets.

Mr. Dorrell: I have no plans to do so at present.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the latest number of bids received under the millennium fund; how much he envisages will be available for such projects; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The Millennium Commission will be inviting applications from 4 January 1995. The commission has already received notification of over 300 potential millennium projects and there have been 4,000 requests for application forms. According to Camelot's forecasts, the Millennium Commission could receive around £1.6 billion between now and 31 December 2000.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many outlets that have been approved by Camelot for the sale of national lottery tickets remain unconnected to the national lottery ticket sale system; and whether these outlets will be compensated by Camelot for loss of revenue.

Mr. Dorrell: This is an operational matter for Camelot Group plc. I have therefore asked Peter Davis, the Director-General of the National Lottery, who is responsible for regulating the operation of the lottery, to write to the hon. Member, placing copies of his response in the Library of the House.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is his best estimate of the funding that will flow from the national lottery to assist sport and the arts in 1995–96.

Mr. Dorrell: On the basis of forecasts prepared by Camelot Group plc when it submitted its application for the licence to run the national lottery, I estimate that £750 million will be paid to the national lottery distribution fund in 1995–96. As specified in section 22 of the National Lottery etc. Act 1993, each of the five good causes—including sport and the arts—will receive 20 per cent. of the sum remaining in the national lottery distribution fund after expenses have been deducted. This could amount to some £150 million for each sector.

Tourism (VAT)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment his Department made, prior to the Budget statement, of the effect that imposition of VAT on non-essential public transport would have on the United Kingdom tourism industry.

Mr. Dorrell: The application of VAT is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer, who announced on 29 November that services relating to entertainment or recreational activities and car parking at airports, which include passenger transport, will become wholly standard rated. The measure, which will affect a limited range of businesses, will not involve significant compliance costs for any business category, and is not expected to affect international competitiveness. Indeed, where supplies become wholly taxable at the standard rate instead of being apportioned, VAT accounting requirements will become simpler.

Sports Councils

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many submissions have been received as a part of his Department's consultation process on the future of the sports councils; how many expressed an opinion on his proposals to (a) restrict sports council direct funding to a core of two to three dozen sports and (b) cut the formal links between the sports council and the regional councils for sport and recreation; and if he will divide the figures into those in favour of his proposals and those against.

Mr. Sproat: In accordance with the Government's code of practice on open government, I will publish the facts and analysis which were relevant and important in framing our final decisions on reform of the Sports Council when these decisions are announced publicly. I refer the hon. Member to my reply to his written question of 28 November, Official Report, column 477, for the current position on our consideration of responses to the consultation exercise.

SCOTLAND

Energy Expenditure

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total expenditure on energy for offices and buildings by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total expenditure on energy for each property owned or leased by his Department for the use of ministers in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Lang: Expenditure on energy at Bute house, the Secretary of State's official residence, was as follows:

Health Care Purchases

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much was spent by (a) district health authorities, (b) family health services authorities, (c) regional health authorities, (d) trusts and (e) general practitioner fundholders on health care purchases from non-NHS providers in each of the last three years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In Scotland, the purchase of hospital, community and family health care is primarily the responsibility of health boards. The following table shows expenditure on purchases of health care from private providers:

Purchases of Health Care from Private Providers

	1991–92 £000	1992–93 £000	1993–94 (Provisional) £000
Health Boards	2,642	21,475	16,255
GP Fundholders	34	131	23

Health boards also have contracts with local authorities, hospices and voluntary agencies where these organisations are registered charities undertaking specific contracted activities but information on these is no longer collected centrally. Expenditure by NHS trusts on purchases from private providers in Scotland is not held centrally.

Food Allergies

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many physicians in Scottish NHS hospitals are specialists in the treatment of food allergies,

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Consultants in various specialties may practise in the treatment of food allergies. Information is not collected on how many doctors carry out such work.

Market Testing

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those services that have been market-tested by his Department and won by the private sector, indicating the organisation that won the tender and its value.

Mr. Lang: Since 1 April 1992, the activities set out in the table have been contracted out as part of my "Competing for Quality" programme.

General Practitioner Lists

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will itemise the number of patients who have been removed from general practitioner lists because of (a) registration with another doctor, (b) the death or resignation of the doctor, (c) the death or emigration of the patient, (d) removal at the doctor's request and (e) other causes in each of the last five years.

GP Fundholders

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide an estimate for the value of fundholding allocations retained by general practitioner fundholders at the year end in each of the last four years by region.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 23 November 1994]: In Scotland, trusts have been progressively introduced since 1 April 1992. Staffing information for 1992 is not readily available centrally. There were 17 NHS trusts at 30 September 1993 and 39 from 1 April 1994; managerial staff information available is shown in the table. The managerial staff figures shown for 1993 and 1994 are not comparable as different numbers of trusts may be included within each health board for each of the years. The figures also include staff previously employed by health boards who transferred to trust employment on the establishment of trusts. They also include staff from other staff groups who have transferred to senior manager grades. In addition, new payment arrangements for general and senior managers progressively introduced in Scotland from 1 September 1993 changed the pay threshold to a lower one at which a member of staff can be classified as a senior manager.

* Provisional data.

[2] There were 17 NHS trusts at 30 September 1993 and 39 from 1 April 1994.

[3] Some of the change between 1993 and 1994 is accounted for by staff transferring to senior manager grades. For example, staff employed on estates', A and C, senior nurse manager and other grades have so transferred. This is illustrated by Ayrshire and Arran where over 30 such transfers have occurred between 1993 and 1994.

[4] The pay threshold for classification as a senior manager was lowered in September 1993 from £14,940 to £13,086.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Advisory Bodies

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the functions and objectives of (a) the Monitoring Committee on Misleading Price Indications, (b) the Standards Quality and Measurement Advisory Committee, (c) the Energy Advisory Panel, (d) the Advisory Committee for the Joint Environmental Markets Unit and (e) the Advisory Committee on Coal Research.

Mr. Heseltine: The information requested is as follows:

(a) Monitoring Committee on Misleading Price Indications

The Committee was formally disbanded in May 1993 by the then Minister for Consumer Affairs.

(b) Standards Quality and Measurement Advisory Committee (SQMAC)

The SQMAC became the Measurements Advisory Committee, MAC, on 1 July 1994. The function of the MAC is to advise the Department on:

—the effectiveness with which the National Measurement System supports UK industry, and —the priorities which the Department should assign to programmes of work undertaken to meet the demands of the national measurement system.

Its objectives are:

—advising on the broad objectives, balance and strategy for Government support of measurement and proposing effective means for the delivery of that message to business in general in support of wealth creation;:

—advising on the commercial opportunities resulting from the research and development carried out by contractors, in support of the national measurement system;

—contributing to an annual longer term perspective, as input to the Department's annual "Forward Look" at programme expenditure over the next five years and longer;

—identifying key priorities for the UK measurement system within a European and global context;

—taking account of the advice of technical experts (Working Groups), to advise on priorities for funding.

(c) Energy Advisory Panel

The function of the panel is to assist in the preparation of the annual energy report which the Government undertook to prepare, as explained at paragraphs 3.31 and 3.32 of the White Paper "The Prospects for Coal: Conclusions of the Government's Coal Review" (CM 2235, March 1993). The panel's objectives are:-

—to offer views on the structure, content and balance of the report against the background of Government energy policy as outlined in the White Paper.

(d) Advisory Committee for the Joint Environmental Markets Unit (JEPU)

The function of the committee is to advise the Department on the priorities and future work of JEPU. Its objectives are:-

—to consider how Government and industry can most effectively identify and exploit environmental market opportunities at home and overseas;

—to assess and recommend specific actions to pursue these objectives.

—to consider how to encourage firms, particularly small and medium sized enterprises to take up new environmental opportunities.

(e) Advisory Committee on Coal Research

The advisory committee was established in 1993 to provide advice to the Department with respect to its coal research and development programme. The terms of reference for the Committee and its membership are listed in annex B of Energy Paper 63, copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the functions and objectives of (a) the Advisory Council on Research and Development for Fuel and Power, (b) the Offshore Industry Liaison Committee and (c) the Overseas Projects Board.

Mr. Heseltine: The information requested is as follows:

(a) Advisory Council on Research and Development for Fuel and Power

The council's primary function was to give Minister's detailed technical overview of the research and development plans of the nationalised energy industries. The privatisation of these industries essentially removed the need for this function and with the establishment of the Energy advisory panel in October 1993, ACORD was dissolved.

(b) Offshore Industry Liaison Committee

The function of the committee is to advise the Minister responsible for the oil and gas sector regarding the progress of the United Kingdom offshore supplies industry on the United Kingdom continental shelf. Its objectives are;

— to analyse problems affecting the competitiveness of the industry, identify gaps in its capability and propose strategies for improving its performance and coverage.

(c) Overseas Project Board

I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey) on 7 July 1994, Official Report, column 295.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his policy in respect of the requirement on the Official Receiver to implement the provisions of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 when the Official Receiver is undertaking the investigation of possible offences referred to him by contractors undertaking case administration work.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Legal advice indicates that the role of official receivers in conducting further interviews of bankrupts and company directors would remain unchanged.

Package Travel Directive

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which member states of the European Union have transposed the package travel directive into their national law; and on which dates.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The United Kingdom implemented the directive on package travel, package holidays and package tours on 23 December 1992.

Information on the transposition of Community legislation into national law is available on the Commission's CELEX database. This records that the directive has been implemented by the following other member states—the date given is that of the latest piece of implementing legislation shown on the database:

Belgium—1 April 1994
Denmark—21 September 1993
France—17 June 1994
Luxembourg—6 July 1994
Netherlands—26 January 1993
Portugal—6 May 1994

Germany, Spain, Greece, Ireland and Italy are not recorded as having implemented the directive. In Spain implementation is the responsibility of the regional governments.

Energy Expenditure

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total expenditure on energy for offices and buildings by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Ian Taylor: Total expenditure on energy by the DTI and its agencies was as follows:

1991–92	5,950
1992–93	5,490
1993–94	5,377

Because agency and departmental staff are co-located on some sites, it is not possible to provide accurate information for expenditure by agencies separately.

Exports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his oral answer of 23 November, Official Report, column 583, whether he will show the percentage increase in United Kingdom exports between 1990 and 1992 compared with the weighted average increase in exports from other developed countries, the number of those countries which did better than the United Kingdom and the number which did worse, and which countries on the basis of the latest quarterly figure in each case have done better than the United Kingdom since 1992 and which have done worse.

Mr. Needham: In $US terms United Kingdom exports grew 2.8 per cent. between 1990 and 1992, compared with 9.2 per cent. for the weighted average of the remaining OECD countries. Eighteen countries did better than the United Kingdom and four worse.

Based on the latest available quarterly figures the following eleven OECD countries did better than the United Kingdom in terms of increasing exports in $US terms since 1992: Australia, Canada, Finland, Iceland, Ireland, Japan, New Zealand, Spain, Sweden, Turkey and USA. Ten countries did worse than the United Kingdom: Austria, Belgium/Luxembourg, France, Germany, Greece, Italy, Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, and Switzerland. There have been no internationally published Danish export figures since the introduction of Intrastat in January 1993.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his oral answer of 23 November, Official Report, column 583, what has been the change since October 1990 in United Kingdom export unit values for finished manufactures in terms of dollars; and what have been the figures in (a) Germany, (b) France and (c) Italy.

Mr. Needham: United Kingdom export unit values for finished manufactures in terms of $US increased 1.2 per cent. between October 1990 and August 1994. Comparable figures for Germany, France, and Italy are not readily available, and could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his oral answer of 23 November, Official Report, column 583, if he will publish the United Kingdom share of the volume of exports of manufacturers by the main manufacturing countries in 1970, 1978 and each year from 1987 to 1993; and if he will add corresponding figures for France and Italy.

Mr. Needham: The United Kingdom figures, where available, are given in the CSO publication "Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics—Annual Supplement 1992", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. Corresponding figures for France and Italy could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his oral answer of 23 November, Official Report, column 583, what was the reduction in the deficit on the balance of trade in finished manufactures this year to date at an annual rate compared with 1992 in respect of (a) all countries and (b) for the EEC.

Mr. Needham: Information on United Kingdom trade in finished manufactures in total and to the EC is available from the Central Statistical Office's central shared database and is published in the monthly review of external trade statistics. The database and the publication may be accessed from the Library of the House.

Manufactures

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his oral answer of 23 November, Official Report, column 583, what was the increase in output of manufacturing (a) since 1973 and (b) between 1964 and 1973; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The information is available from the Central Statistical Office's central shared database which can be accessed in the Library of the House. Manufacturing output is growing strongly: in the three months to October output was 5.3 per cent. higher than a year earlier.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his oral answer 23 November, Official Report, column 583. what was the level of import penetration of the United Kingdom market for manufactures in 1979, 1988, 1990, 1992 and 1993 together with his forecast for 1994.

Mr. Needham: The information requested was published until 1989 in "Business Monitor MQ12", which is available in the Library of the House. The Central Statistical Office expects to publish provisional 1993 figures in the "Monthly Digest of Statistics" early in 1995. Figures for 1990 and 1992 are not available.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his oral answer of 23 November, Official Report, column 583, what was the level of import penetration in the market for manufactures in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) France and (c) Italy.

Mr. Needham: The information requested was published until 1989 in "Business Monitor MQ12", which is available in the Library of the House. The Central Statistical Office expects to publish provisional 1993 figures in the "Monthly Digest of Statistics" early in 1995. The information requested with respect of France and Italy is not readily available and could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his oral answer of 23 November, Official Report, column 583, whether he will publish the latest figures for import penetration of the United Kingdom market for manufactures by two-digit sectors of the standard industrial classification.

Mr. Needham: The Central Statistical Office expects to publish provisional 1993 data on import penetration by industry sector, in the "Monthly Digest of Statistics", early in 1995.

Exchange Rates

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his oral answer of 23 November 1994, Official Report, column 583, what has been the change in the nominal exchange rate for sterling against (a) the Deutschmark, (b) the ecu and (c) the non-ecu currencies since February 1993, together with his estimate of the likely effects on imports and exports of finished manufactures.

Mr. Needham: A selection of exchange rates, including the Deutschmark and the European currency unit, are regularly published in the Central Statistical Office's financial statistics, table 7.1A, copies of which are available in the Library of the House. An exchange rate index for non-ecu currencies is not available and could be calculated only at disproportionate cost. The Government's assessment of trade performance, published in chapter 3 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" took into account all relevant factors, including past movements in exchange rates.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his oral answer of 23 November 1994 Official Report, column 583, what has been the fall in the value of sterling and the lira since August 1992 together with (i) the balance of visible trade in 1992, 1993 and this year to date in each case in terms of dollars and (ii) the increase since August 1992 in producer prices.

Mr. Needham: Between August 1992 and October 1994 the values of sterling and the lira against the US$ fell 21.0 and 40.4 per cent. respectively. Between August 1992 and July 1994 United Kingdom and Italian producer prices for manufacturing increased 5.1 and 10.1 per cent. respectively.

Mr. Needham: Figures of trade in motor vehicle components with EC countries are published in "Business Monitors" MA20 for 1992, MQ20 for 1993 and 1994 to date—which are available in the Library of the House.

Information on the import content of cars produced or assembled in the United Kingdom is not held centrally, and could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

"Marketing Your Business"

Mr. Mullin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much was paid to Strategic Consultants for "Marketing Your Business"; and if he will list other contracts between his Department and this company over the last three years.

Mr. Ian Taylor: "Marketing Your Business" was one of a series of business skills seminar workbooks which were originally written in 1988 by a group of experienced training providers on behalf of the Training Agency. It is not possible to identify the separate cost of writing this workbook. Since April 1992 Strategic Consultants Limited has undertaken the following contracts for my Department:

July 1992—Testing and editing material for two business skills seminar titles—cost £4,284

December 1992—Review and revision of business skills seminar material (5 titles)—cost £5,875

February 1994—Revision of business skills seminar material (3 titles) - cost £7,373

Mr. Mullin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the cost of producing and distributing "Marketing Your Business"; how many copies were produced; how many have been withdrawn; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Taylor: "Marketing Your Business" was one of a series of business skills seminar workbooks originally written in 1988 by a group of experienced training providers on behalf of the Training Agency. It is not possible to identify the separate cost of writing this workbook. The printing, publishing and sale of business skills seminar workbooks is licensed by Her Majesty's Stationery Office to Vector Business Development and involves no cost to my Department. I understand that around 50,000 copies have been produced and distributed since 1988. Distribution has now ceased.

Radioisotopes

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what types, quantities and values of radioisotopes and nuclear materials have been imported from the Russian Federation since 1992.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is not available due to commercial confidentiality.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information has been provided to his Department in regard to the licensing of the imports of radioisotopes from the Russian Federation by Amersham International.

Mr. Needham: Information which businesses provide in support of applications for import licences is treated as commercially confidential.

Hualon

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will give details of the representations he has received objecting to the Government grant to Hualon to set up in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Eggar: Since Hualon's plans first became known my Department has received representations from five organisations within the textile industry and two members of the public.

US Product Liability Laws

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he is taking to assist small firms who export to the United States of America to meet the requirements of US product liability laws.

Mr. Needham: My Department regularly provides advice to small firms on US product liability requirements.

A "North America Now" publication on US product liability was prepared earlier this year for DTI by an American lawyer practising in London, and is freely available to British companies. DTI has also held, throughout the United Kingdom, a number of "North America Now" seminars, involving experts in legal and insurance aspects of US product liability.

Copyright

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how he proposes to implement in United Kingdom law the Council directive on the term of protection of copyright and certain related rights, 93/98 EEC.

Mr. Ian Taylor: I intend to implement Council directive 93/98 EEC by regulations amending the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988 made under the powers conferred by section 2 of the European Communities Act 1972. The regulations will take into account comments received in response to a consultative document recently issued by my Department on certain matters which the directive leaves to be decided by member states.

National Fibre Optic Network

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects a national fibre optic network to be in place.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The Government's policy of telecommunications liberalisation has encouraged substantial investment in modern telecommunications networks. The promotion of competition between interconnected networks is essential if the full benefits of liberalisation are to be realised for consumers. The main fixed link telecommunications operators already have wholly fibre optic trunk networks, and provide fibre optic links to business customers. Cable TV operators are providing fibre closer to the home.

Optical fibre is one of a number of technologies which can be used to provide residential customers with access to communications networks—including optical fibre, coaxial copper cable, copper wire, radio or satellite. For many residential consumers the superhighway applications now being developed are likely to be delivered through using advanced compression technologies over copper networks rather than through wholly fibre optic networks. This process is already underway.

Information Superhighway

Mr. Denham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to develop the information superhighway.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The Government published a Command Paper, "Creating the Superhighways of the Future: Developing Broadband Communications in the UK", on 22 November, which set out the Government's vision for establishing information superhighways in this country, building on the billions of pounds of investment in telecommunications networks and infrastructure made by the private sector in recent years. Copies are available in the Libraries of both Houses and on the Internet.

Steel

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent representations he has made to the European Commission on the subject of state aids to national steel industries, with particular reference to subsidies provided by the Italian and Spanish Governments; and with what result.

Mr. Eggar: I have urged the European Commission—most recently at the Industry Council on 8 November—to intensify its monitoring of the state aid cases agreed in December 1993 to ensure that the strict conditions agreed then are adhered to; and I obtained a firm commitment that they would take firm action against breaches, including repayment of the subsidy. I am determined that the highly efficient, unsubsidised United Kingdom industry should not be disadvantaged by illegally subsidised competition.

Aluminium

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent representations he has made to the European Commission on the subject of state aids to national aluminium industries, with particular reference to subsidies provided by the Italian and Spanish Governments; and with what result.

Mr. Eggar: My officials recently met the Commission to pursue the aluminium state aid cases which my right hon. Friend brought to our attention. When the Commission has completed its inquiries I will write to inform him of the result.

Balance of Trade

Sir Patrick McNair-Wilson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish details of the United Kingdom balance of trade with other members of the European Union for the years since the establishment of the single market.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is published in the 1994 issue of "The Pink Book—United Kingdom Balance of Payments", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. Table 9.1 gives the UK balance of trade with other members of the European Union for each year from 1983 to 1993.

Market Testing

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those services that have been market tested by his Department and won by the private sector, indicating the organisation that won the tender and its value.

Mr. Ian Taylor: Of the services market tested, and where an in-house bid was made, the IT services contract was won by Hoskyns Group plc. The contract value will depend on the volume of work.

Mortgage Insurance

Mr. Denham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action he is taking to ensure that mortgage providers draw consumers' attention to sources of mortgage insurance other than that supplied by the said mortgage provider.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 8 December 1994]: I am not taking any such action; nor am I persuaded that it would be appropriate to do so. The protection which consumers need is to be told by any person who offers them insurance whether that person is an independent intermediary or is offering only the products of a restricted range of insurers. Such disclosure is a requirement under the general insurance business code of practice of the Association of British Insurers.

Cot Mattresses

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what advice he is currently giving retailers on the sale of cot mattresses.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 25 November 1994]: The Department has been in close contact with the Department of Health over recent claims that cot deaths have resulted from the use of fire retardant treatments in cot mattresses. The theory that flame retardants in cot mattresses released toxic gases, which caused sudden infant death syndrome, was thoroughly investigated by an expert working group set up by the Chief Medical Officer of Health in 1990. The working group concluded—the Turner report, 1991—that this theory was not supported by the experimental evidence.

The Department of Health has advised that there is nothing in the recent claims which invalidates the conclusions of the Turner report of May 1991 and that there is no reason for retailers to withdraw cot mattresses from sale.

The Chief Medical Officer of Health has recently set up a working group of experts to study the questions which were raised by the current media speculation surrounding the research contained in the Rubens Institute study. The Department will be kept fully informed of their deliberations.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the changes in ECGD premium rates for political risks, by country, for 1993–94, 1994–95, 1995–96 and 1996–97.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 8 December 1994]: ECGD premium rates are reviewed annually. As political risk premiums are set individually for each country, the type of cover required and the terms of individual transactions, it would not be cost-effective to calculate and detail the changes in rates for each country over this period. However looking at all countries overall, ECGD's political risk premiums have fallen on average broadly as follows in the years in question:

1993 by around 20 per cent.
1994 by around 7.5 per cent.
1995 by around 10 per cent.

Any changes to rates for 1996 will depend on the outcome of future reviews.

WALES

Cynon Valley

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has received the report on the Welsh Development Agency's action in relation to the development of certain sites in the Cynon valley.

Mr. Redwood: The Welsh Development Agency commissioned an inquiry, undertaken by Grant Thornton, into the actions of the agency in connection with the development of sites in the Cynon valley, Mid Glamorgan. These arose from the establishment of a joint venture board in 1991 comprising the WDA, Cynon Valley borough council and Mid Glamorgan county council. I have received a copy of the report from the chairman of the agency.

The report notes that the inquiry team was granted full access to the agency and Welsh Office papers and also to those of a number of other organisations. It concludes that there is no evidence of improper pecuniary gain or collusion by any of the parties. It concludes, too, that conflicts of interest which arose were properly declared and dealt with by agency board members. But the report identifies weaknesses in the agency's procedures and serious lapses in management control over its joint venture activities. It also questions whether value for money was secured.

The agency chief executive has informed me that he is sending a copy of the Grant Thornton report and the agency's response to the recommendations to the Chairman of the Committee of Public Accounts. I note the comprehensive remedial action contained in the response of the new management and I will be discussing the report's findings and the proposed measures with the chairman. The chairman of the agency agrees with me that the former management's conduct fell short of the standards we expect.

The report examines a number of transactions which also involve Cynon Valley borough council. The council did not allow Grant Thornton access to certain papers, but I hope that those concerned will study the report carefully and, where appropriate, carry out their own investigation of these matters. It would, of course, be for the district auditor to respond to any requests for an inquiry into the council's activities.

The chief executive as accounting officer has also informed the Chairman of the Committee of Public Accounts about other matters which the new management of the agency has been investigating which go back many years. These concern redundancy and pension payments, the underwriting of share issues, the engagement of consultants, procurement issues and breaches of delegated authority. Some of these instances of non-compliance continued until earlier this year.

I have considered the agency's past underwriting activities. The agency has not engaged in underwriting or sub-underwriting since 1991 and has no plans to do so. In my view, however, this is no longer an appropriate role for the WDA, even in relation to Welsh-based companies, and I have so informed the board.

The chairman has assured me that he will continue to investigate and expose all instances of non-compliance which the agency can identify, however long ago they might have occurred, and to continue to act swiftly wherever necessary to bring agency practice and procedures in line with the proper stewardship of public funds. The new management of the agency understands the standards which I and this House expect of it. The chairman has also assured me that he and his senior management team attach the highest importance to open communication between the agency and my Department.

A copy of the Grant Thornton report and the agency's response to the recommendations have been placed in the Library of the House.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what changes he proposes to make to the cash limits for class XV, vote 2 and to the local authority capital cash limit for his Department for the current financial year.

Mr. Redwood: The cash limit on class XV, vote 2 will be reduced by £6,750,000 from £160,331,000 to £153,581,000. The local authority capital limit—WO/LACAP—will be increased by £6,750,000 from £476,465,000 to £483,215,000.

The reduction in the cash limit for vote 2 results from a forecast underspend on urban regeneration schemes and lower than forecast costs for land reclamation projects on account of reduced inflation and competitive pricing.

The increase in WO/LACAP provides for expenditure on information technology for local government reorganisation.

Neither of the proposed changes will add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Railways

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps his Department will be taking to enable Welsh railway lines to meet the required rate of return both before and after privatisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: It is for Railtrack to determine Welsh rail investment priorities in the light of its commercial discussions with customers and the availability of resources. These resources might include any support for projects sponsored by local authorities under the strategic development scheme. I do not expect these arrangements to change after the privatisation of Railtrack.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the importance of a railway infrastructure in the overall process of encouraging inward investment and job creation in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Communications are important in the attraction of inward investment and to indigenous companies in Wales. The Government's proposal to transfer the responsibility for the railway to the private sector ensures that they develop in a way that is appropriate to the needs of the industry.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guarantees his Department has sought on the subject of socially necessary services in the Welsh railway network; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The franchising director is responsible for deciding passenger service requirements to be included in franchise agreements. My right hon. Friend and I have recently met him and he is aware of the situation in Wales.

Tourism

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the latest estimate of the total number of people employed in the tourism industry in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The number of employees employed in tourism-related industries in Wales was 79,300 in September 1991 according to the 1991 census of employment. Employment data at this level of industrial activity are only collected in the biennial censuses of employment and 1991 is the latest year for which data are available. The figure includes only those industries which are classified as tourism related in table 1.14 of Employment Gazette, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Dental Services

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what safeguards are in place to protect dental services to the public where an area is not served by a dental practice taking NHS patients; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Richards: Family health services authorities are able to apply to the Secretary of State for permission to employ salaried dentists in areas where there is a shortfall in NHS provision. The community dental service acts as a safety net for those unable to obtain treatment under the general dental services.

In addition, a general practitioner may refer patients requiring emergency treatment to an oral surgery department of a general hospital.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many dentists there are in each Welsh constituency who are prepared to take new patients under the NHS; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Richards: The information is not held centrally. Dentists are independent contractors who are free to choose who they can accept onto their NHS dentist list. Most dentists have NHS patients on their lists but may open and close their books to new patients on a daily basis.

If any person has difficulty in obtaining treatment from a general dental practitioner, they should contact their local family health services authority, which is best placed to advise on local availability of dental treatment. This includes reference to the community dental service which offers a safety net provision for those unable to secure NHS treatment from a general dental practitioner.

A483 (Pool Quay)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many fatalities have occurred in road accidents on the A483 trunk road at Pool Quay, Powys since 1 January 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Since 1 January 1988, there have been three fatalities on the A483 trunk road in the vicinity of Pool Quay, Powys. These fatalities occurred on 19 January 1988, 1 February 1993 and 26 November 1994.

Housing

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidance he has given to district councils on the inspection of properties (a) prior to the award of housing benefit and (b) after it has been awarded.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Housing benefit regulations do not require properties to be inspected.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures are in place to ensure that properties in multiple occupation do not present any safety or public health hazards.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Houses in multiple occupation must meet standards of fitness for human habitation and fitness for the number of occupants. They must have adequate means of escape from fire and adequate fire precautions. Local authorities have powers to enforce these requirements.

Bridgend and District NHS Trust

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many responses to his consultation paper on the re-organisation of health service administration supported his proposal to transfer the Bridgend and District NHS trust to the West Glamorgan area health authority; and from whom they were received.

Mr. Richards: The Bridgend and District NHS trust does not form part of any health authority. The following respondents to our consultation explicitly supported establishing a new health authority responsibility for commissioning health care for people in West Glamorgan and Bridgend: Clwyd DHA; Gwent Health Commission; Dyfed FHSA; Nevill Hall and District NHS trust; Swansea NHS trust; University Hospital of Wales and Royal Cardiff group; Swansea/Lliw Valley CHC; Children in Wales; MENCAP; and Health Promotion Wales.

Community Care

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the Assembly of Welsh Counties social services committee in relation to the adequacy of funding and the consistency of working arrangements with health commissioning authorities in relation to community care for (a) the prospective 1994–95 outturn and (b) 1995–96.

Mr. Redwood: Community care funding and the distribution of community care resources between county councils is discussed by the Welsh Consultative Council on Local Government Finance, which includes the Assembly of Welsh Counties. The resources are allocated to county councils in accordance with distribution formulae ratified by the WCCLGF.

Working arrangements between local authorities and health authorities are for local agreement. The White Paper, "Caring for People", Cm. 849, and subsequent guidance have stressed the need for joint working.

Health Authority Finance

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were (a) the surpluses and (b) the deficits recorded by each health authority in each of the last tree years.

Mr. Richards: The information requested is as follows:

Health authority	1991–92 £000	1992–93 £000	1993–94 £000
Clwyd	2,703	(3,312)	119

Sea Fisheries Committee

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received in relation to the setting up of a unified sea fisheries committee structure for Wales

Mr. Redwood: Along with other interested parties I have received a paper prepared by the South Wales Sea Fisheries Committee on options for the future structure of sea fisheries committees in Wales.

Wrexham Maelor Hospital

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total cost of phase II of the Wrexham Maelor hospital, Wrexham.

Mr. Richards: The final construction cost of phase II of the Wrexham Maelor hospital was £21.035 million including fees and VAT.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the prime contractor and sub-contractors on phase II of the Wrexham Maelor hospital, Wrexham.

Mr. Richards: The main contractor for phase II of the Wrexham Maelor hospital development was Alfred McAlpine Building North and the only nominated sub-contractor was Evans Lifts Ltd. Additionally there were a substantial number of sub-contractors engaged by the main contractor.

Market Testing

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those services that have been market tested by his Department and won by the private sector, indicating the organisation that won the tender and its value.

Mr. Redwood: The following list covers the period October 1992 to date:

Service	Organisation	Tender value
Managing agents for building works	Kirkham, Williams and Lewis of Newport, Gwent	Not available. Fee based call-off contract.
Staff training	Training Services (Wales) Ltd. of Bridgend, Mid Glamorgan	Total not available. Part call-off contract. Fee for three years non-call-off element £286,750, excluding VAT.

Pigs

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what grant aid is available to pig producers in Wales to convert sow tether and stall accommodation.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None. Producers have eight years from 1991 over which to spread these costs.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Farming

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many people were employed in the farming industry in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement about the unemployment rate among former farm workers.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 1 December 1994]: a) The number of people employed in the farming industry in the United Kingdom at June in each of the last five years is shown in the table:

Number of persons working on holdings in the United Kingdom—1989 to 1994—farmers, growers and workers

Year	Number
1989	646,300
1990	644,600
1991	630,500
1992	624,400
1993	622,300
1994[1]	615,600

Notes:

(a) Source: Agricultural and Horticultural June census.

(b) Includes estimates for minor holdings in England, Wales and Northern Ireland but not for Scotland.

(c) In England and Wales figures exclude School children but include trainees employed under an official youth training scheme and paid at agricultural wages board rates or above. In Scotland and Northern Ireland school children and all trainees are excluded.

(d) Figures include farmers, growers, partners, directors, spouses, managers, regular and hired workers, seasonal and casual workers.

The labour force survey conducted in spring 1994—this is a sample survey of 65,000 private households in the United Kingdom carried out every spring since 1984—showed that there are approximately 31,000 unemployed people in the United Kingdom who recorded their last occupation as farming. This represents an unemployment rate for this socio-economic grouping of 7 per cent., which is significantly lower than the equivalent rate for all socio-economic groupings in the United Kingdom which at this time was 10 per cent.

Fishing Industry

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will set up a working group of officials from his Department and representatives of the fishing industry to review the burdens of existing legislation on fishermen as it relates to bureaucracy;

(2) what representations he has received on deregulation relating to the burdens of bureaucracy on the fishing industry.

Mr. Jack: Following representations from the fishing industry, I secured last June a commitment from the European Fisheries Commissioner that the Commission would examine how the body of regulation under the common fisheries policy could be simplified. We invited our industry to make suggestions for simplification but it has not yet been able to offer any. A meeting with the industry is now planned which I hope will be able to make some useful progress.

Ostriches

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what current legislation exists to protect the welfare of ostriches at slaughter;

(2) how many ostriches were slaughtered in each year since 1991;

(3) what consideration he has given to introducing provisions to protect the welfare of ostriches at slaughter;

(4) if he will make a statement on the welfare of ostriches at slaughter.

Mrs. Browning: The welfare of ostriches at slaughter is currently protected by the general provisions of the Agriculture (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1968 which make it an offence to cause unnecessary pain or unnecessary distress to livestock on agricultural land and the Protection of Animals Act 1911 which makes it an offence to cause unnecessary suffering to any domestic animal. New welfare at slaughter legislation to implement the EC slaughter directive will be introduced next year and will provide additional protection for ostriches when slaughtered.

There is no commercial slaughter industry for ostriches at present in this country. Some small numbers will have been killed on farms since 1991 but no figures are available. Officers of the State Veterinary Service will monitor any developments in this area.

Research and Development

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the projected expenditure by his Department on research and development in (a) 1994–95 and (b) 1995–96.

Mr. Waldegrave: My Department's total research and development expenditure for 1994–95 and 1995–96 is estimated to be £136 million and £140 million respectively.

Nitrates

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the cost of implementing nitrate-vulnerable zones in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Jack: Farmers in nitrate-vulnerable zones will be affected in different ways, depending on such factors as the type of enterprise, stocking density and existing storage capacity for organic manure—for example, arable farmers who are already following good agricultural practice should incur no significant cost as a result of the rules which will apply in vulnerable zones. Some intensive livestock units may, however, incur costs through having to transport manure off farm, and provide additional storage during the closed period for the application of organic manure. Costs are being examined and a compliance cost assessment will be issued when the detailed draft action programme of measures is published in 1995.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the level of nitrate pollution in the River Stour in Essex and Suffolk; and what information he has about the state of the River Rhine in Germany.

Mr. Jack: Figures for nitrate pollution in the River Stour taken at Langham—the abstraction point used for drinking water purposes—for the 1992 calendar year are set out:

1992	Nitrate mg/l
08 January	33.05

With the Stour exceeding the nitrate parameter of 50 mg/litre eight times out of the 48 samples taken at the abstraction point, the river is considered a polluted water under the terms of the EC nitrate directive and the Nayland nitrate vulnerable zone has been proposed on this basis. We have no detailed information of the nitrate pollution in the River Rhine. However, Germany is expected to designate its entire territory as a nitrate vulnerable zone.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list (a) the distribution by month of the dates of birth of each animal in the BSE cohort study and (b) the date of birth of each animal that has been confirmed with BSE in each six-monthly period from the start of the cohort study.

Mr. Waldegrave: The following is a table, by month and year of birth, of the number of animals in the cohort study:

	January	February	March	April	May	June	July	August	September	October	November	December
1987	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	3	2	4	3	9

1989	24	18	17	11	8	8	13	16	13	11	2	—

The following tables are of the animals in the cohort study confirmed to have BSE, sorted into six-monthly periods by date of clinical onset and giving details of month and year of birth. It is not known how many of the confirmed cases are offspring and how many are controls as the study is being carried out blind:

Horticultural Survey

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the cost to date of the study of the horticultural sector initiated in October 1993.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 7 December 1994]: In addition to my own time, and that of my small team of industry advisors, given without charge, I was assisted on an ad hoc basis by a grade 7 official from our horticulture division. The costs, including staff time and travel costs, amounted to about £12,000. As part of the project, we also contributed £10,000 to the Fresh Produce Consortium/Strathclyde university study on the future of the wholesale markets.

TRANSPORT

Vehicle Licensing

Mr. Alison: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for introducing continuous licensing for commercial vehicles and heavy goods vehicles to mitigate problems of illegal operation.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have been asked to reply.

The Government have no plans to introduce continuous licensing for goods vehicles in excess of 3.5 tonnes. The Chancellor of the Exchequer has, however, announced his intention to introduce a number of other measures for goods vehicles—including clarifying their definition and weight, and reducing the number of concessionary classes—which will help to reduce evasion.

M11 Link Road

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the total cost to his Department and the Highways Agency (a) to occupy the premises in Claremont road, Leytonstone and (b) for the security and associated costs of the M11 link road project as a whole; if he will break this expenditure down into its main components; and if he will indicate the extent of the continuing cost.

Mr. Norris: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 12 December 1994:

I have been asked to write to you in response to your Parliamentary Question about the costs of occupying Claremont Road and security costs for the A12 Hackney Wick to M11 Link Road as a whole, since these are operational matters for the Highways Agency.

We estimate the cost to the Agency of last weeks operation at Claremont Road at about £1 million.

The protestors' action also meant that we were unable to salvage valuable materials from the properties, which had to be rapidly demolished and the resultant rubble carted away to the tip at a cost of £100,000.

The total for other security and associated costs for the whole Link Road project since construction began in September 1993 is about £3 million for security staff costs, together with £185,000 paid in fees to Brays Detective Agency and legal costs of about £180,000.

Levels of security are geared to the perceived likelihood of protest action involving trespass on to sites. If current levels are maintained, expenditure on security staff would be about £500,000 per month. The situation is, however, monitored all the time and if the activity of protestors diminishes, as it now should, this expenditure could, in turn, be reduced. Similarly expenditure on Brays Detective Agency, currently about £25,000 per month, will be reviewed but there remains continuing involvement for them with injunction proceedings at least until the end of January 1995.

Legal costs in this connection will run at about £4,000 per month, but this figure could be higher dependent upon the number and length of Court hearings, which are unpredictable at present.

Eastern European Fishing Vessels

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current estimate of the number of former eastern bloc fishing vessels in United Kingdom waters within the harbour limits of Lerwick; in each case how many are klondykers; what assessment he has made of the implications for safety of life at sea arising from such vessels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: This is an operational matter for the Marine Safety Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from R. Bradley to Ms Joan Walley, dated 12 December 1994:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your Question about the number of former eastern bloc fishing vessels within the harbour limits of Lerwick.

The number of fishing vessels within the harbour limits fluctuates daily in response to changes in weather conditions and the location of the fish shoals. At midday on Tuesday 6 December there were 59 former eastern bloc fishing vessels in Lerwick harbour, all of which are considered to be klondykers. Each of these klondykers has been inspected by surveyors from the Marine Safety Agency (MSA) since the second inspection campaign began in July 1994.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which vessels from the former eastern bloc have been subjected to port state control within the last 18 months; which vessels were klondykers; and if he will give the date and details of the inspections.

Mr. Norris: This is an operational matter for the Marine Safety Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from R Bradley to Ms Joan Walley, dated 12 December 1994:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your Question about the port state control inspections carried out on vessels from the former eastern bloc.

During the past 18 months, ships from the following former eastern bloc countries have been inspected:

Country	Number of inspections of klondykers	Number of inspections of other ships	Total number of port state inspections
Azerbaijan	—	1	1
Bulgaria	14	15	29
Croatia	—	4	4
Czechia	—	5	5
Estonia	4	9	13
Georgia	—	5	5
Latvia	19	23	42
Lithuania	11	18	29
Poland	1	48	49
Romania	—	11	11
Russia	132	227	359
Ukraine	9	40	49

The Marine Safety Agency publishes monthly a report of ships which have been detained in United Kingdom ports. Full details of former eastern bloc ships inspected and detained since June 1994, when publication began, can be found in these reports.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will request his shipping Minister to include in his visit to Shetland a visit to Lerwick harbour to assess the implications for safe shipping, search and rescue and marine pollution from former eastern bloc-owned klondykers.

Mr. Norris: My noble Friend the Minister for Aviation and Shipping visited the Shetland islands on 4 November 1994. His visit included an informative and useful discussion with the chief executive and chairman of the Lerwick harbour trust, as well as providing an opportunity to see at first hand the problems posed by the klondykers.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what joint discussions he has held with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the Scottish Office to resolve any problems arising from the klondyker fleet.

Mr. Norris: My noble Friend the Minister for Aviation and Shipping met my hon. Friend the Minster with responsibility for agriculture and the environment at the Scottish Office on 31 October to agree a joint approach to tackling the problems arising from the klondyker fleet. The Scottish Office will be consulting on proposals to limit the numbers of fish transshipment licences and to introduce an advance notice requirement for licence applications. In addition, my officials have had several meetings with their counterparts in the Scottish Office, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. Our Departments are working together to produce a further consultation paper on additional measures which could be taken to ensure adequate standards of safety and insurance on these ships.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he has taken to establish whether vessels from the former eastern bloc anchored within United Kingdom waters are fully insured.

Mr. Norris: Only oil tankers are required to carry proof of adequate liability insurance. The Marine Safety Agency's inspections of foreign fish factory ships have therefore not included a check of insurance documents.

There is, however, clear evidence that few, if any, of these ships carry adequate insurance.

Energy Expenditure

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total expenditure on energy for offices and buildings by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Norris: The figures are as follows:

(a) Department of Transport Total

1992–93 £	1993–94 £	1994–95 £
4,455,870	4,379,338	4,377,023
(b) Executive agencies total
3,937,470	3,950,681	3,748,965

The figures for 1992–93 and 1993–94 include agencies created at the start of 1994–95.

Donaldson Report

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when and how he proposes to implement each of the recommendations of the Donaldson report.

Mr. Norris: I refer the hon. Lady to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for St. Ives (Mr. Harris) on 29 November Official Report, columns 657–59.

Vehicle Inspectorate

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the roadside enforcement activities of the vehicle inspectorate between April and September 1994; how many people were employed; and how many prohibition notices were issued to (a) heavy and light goods vehicles, (b) buses and (c) coaches.

Mr. Norris: This is an operational matter for the Vehicle Inspectorate Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from R. Oliver to Ms Joan Walley, dated 12 December 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about roadside enforcement activities at the Vehicle Inspectorate.

The Vehicle Inspectorate employed, on average, 237 Vehicle Examiners and 164 Traffic Examiners on its roadside enforcement activities between April and September 1994.

I attach a table (Annex A) which shows the number of prohibition notices issued for the same period.

If you have any further questions about these data please contact me.

Number of prohibition notices issued by VI from April to September 1994

	HGV	PSV	LGV	Total
Roadworthiness Enforcement	11,996	1,706	1,552	15,254
Traffic Enforcement	2,658	47	227	2,932
Total	14,654	1,753	1,779	18,186

Notes:

i. Roadworthiness Enforcement includes all prohibitions, although some of the inspections may not have taken place at the roadside.

ii. Traffic Enforcement includes all over weight prohibitions issued, including those issued at port checks, and foreign vehicle prohibitions for drivers' hours offences.

iii. We have used the Inspectorate's standard definitions—Heavy Goods Vehicles, Public Service Vehicles and Light Goods Vehicles. We are not able to break down these groups further—for instance between buses and coaches.

Great Central Railway

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much is owed by the Highways Agency to the Great Central Railway in respect of work carried out at (a) Thurcaston on the A6 and (b) on the same road between Loughborough and Quorn; and when these payments will be made.

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Mike Hall, dated 12 December 1994:

I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about monies owed by the Highways Agency to the Great Central Railway in respect of work carried out on the A6 at Thurcaston and between Loughborough and Quorn.

The only outstanding payment is a further advance of £13,500, plus interest, in respect of compensation for the works at Thurcaston. The payment is being processed and will complete the 90 per cent. advance payment of compensation required by the Land Compensation Act. The balance, with interest, will be paid as soon as final settlement is reached.

Motorway Cleaning

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how motorway cleaning is funded; and what is its annual cost;

(2) how often the M1 in Northamptonshire is cleaned.

Mr. Watts: These are operational matters for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. James Pausey, dated 12 December 1994:

The Minister for Railways and Roads has asked me to answer your questions to the Secretary of State about motorway cleaning.

The Highways Agency is responsible for ensuring trunk motorways are kept clean in accordance with a statutory Code of Practice issued under the Environmental Protection Act 1990. We spend some £5 millions annually from our maintenance budget on litter clearance, sweeping, grass cutting and other associated cleansing activities. In addition, regular safety patrols are undertaken to check, amongst other things, for hazardous debris.

In Northamptonshire, the County Council is our Agent Authority for this maintenance work. Daily safety inspections are carried out on the M1. Any debris causing a safety hazard to road users is removed as quickly as possible—usually immediately. The presence of litter on the verges and side slopes is noted and cleared as soon as possible. The hard shoulder is swept mechanically every 8–10 weeks. Because of the dangers inherent in gaining access to the central reserve, and the disruption to traffic, cleaning there is undertaken in conjunction with routine or emergency maintenance operations to meet the standards of the Environmental Protection Act.

Road Accidents

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many road accidents occurred where bus lanes and pedestrian crossings meet in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Norris: The required information is not available.

Radioisotopes

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many transportation licences his Department has issued for the import of radioisotopes from the Russian Federation in each year since 1992.

Mr. Norris: None. The Department issues package design approvals for the safe transport of radioactive material. Import licences are issued by the Department of Trade and Industry.

Channel Tunnel Freight Trains

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he is having and with whom about the channel tunnel freight trains and the possible effects this service will have on the local environment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Watts: I have met some hon. Members for constituencies traversed by channel tunnel freight trains. I am visiting the West London line on 15 December. A demonstration of new electric locomotives and new rolling stock will be arranged in the new year.

Noise Pollution

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement concerning potential similar cases arising from building the A46-47 link road and the eastern district distribution road in Leicester following the recent Court of Appeal decision to allow Colonel David Owen full compensation for the noise blight which has devalued his home; and what assessment he has made of the effects of potential claims for blight and the rise in costs on the continued viability of the A46-A47 link road and the EDDR.

Mr. Watts: The right to compensation where an interest in land is depreciated by noise from the use of a new or improved highway is set out in part 1 of the Land Compensation Act 1973. In addition section 246 of the Highways Act 1980 provides highway authorities with a discretionary power to acquire by agreement land to mitigate the adverse effects of constructing or improving a highway.

The A46-A47 link road and the EDDR are roads for which Leicestershire county council is the highway authority. I am advised that the county council does not exercise its discretionary powers in respect of the purchase of properties. Information about the cost of these local road schemes can be obtained from the county council.

Highways Agency

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what public service standard he has set the Highways Agency in terms of response times of reaction to telephoned or written queries from local authorities and members of the general public.

Mr. Watts: Standards for dealing with correspondence are set out in the Highways Agency's business plan. The agency is required to reply to all correspondence within 15 working days of receipt.

Age Concern

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from Age Concern as part of its 1994 annual campaign on transport and mobility; what other representations he has received; and what action his Department has taken to implement the recommendations of the campaigns.

Mr. Norris: The Department has worked closely with Age Concern at national and regional level throughout the year. Ministers and officials have taken part in Age Concern conferences. These have provided an opportunity to hear at first hand the concerns of older people and to work with them in developing appropriate solutions.

We will continue to give priority to meeting the needs of older people as public transport users, pedestrians and motorists.

European Year of Older People

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what contribution his Department has made in 1994 to follow up the European Year of Older People and Solidarity between Generations in 1993.

Mr. Norris: The Department has, through conducting research and issuing guidelines and advice to local authorities, manufacturers, operators and individuals, continued to develop and promote solutions to the problems faced by older people as public transport users, pedestrians and motorists.

Tyres

Mr. Purchase: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to ensure that part-worn tyres imported into the United Kingdom for resale meet the standards required by British law.

Mr. Norris: Further to the answer I gave on 18 November, Official Report, column 119, the measure which applies to both domestic and imported tyres was laid in Parliament on 8 December 1994.

Rolling Stock Leasing Companies

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to ensure that the rolling stock leasing companies which remain in the public sector have sufficient passenger train stock to meet the demands of Regional Railways Central in the summer peak of 1995; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Watts: The three rolling-stock leasing companies own almost the whole British Rail passenger fleet. I am not aware of any prospective shortfall of trains to be leased to the central train operating unit in summer 1995.

Railtrack

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when Railtrack will publish its 10-year plan for the railway industry; and who will undertake this role after Railtrack has been privatised.

Mr. Watts: Railtrack will publish its first 10–year investment plan next year. It will continue to be required under the terms of its network operator's licence to do so annually after privatisation.

Rail Investment

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the forecast level of investment for (a) Railtrack, (b) BR and (c) European passenger services for 1995–96; and if he will indicate under each heading how much of this expenditure is committed to projects already authorised and how much is available for investment in projects not yet authorised.

Mr. Watts: Overall investment in the railway industry in 1995–96 is expected to be of the order of £1 billion, of which around a quarter will be financed by the private sector. A detailed breakdown will not be available until the individual budgets have been settled.

Rail Finance

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what grant will be payable to the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising in respect of support for passenger services in 1995–96;

(2) what the external financing limits will be for (a) BR and (b) Railtrack in 1995–96.

Mr. Watts: The 1995–96 external finance limits for BR and Railtrack, and support to passenger services, will be set out in the "Transport Report 1995".

Road Safety

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the cost of the present publicity programme "Kill your Speed, Not a Child".

Mr. Norris: Some £2.65 million.

Public Transport (Definition)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the definition of public transport used by his Department.

Mr. Watts: Any form of domestic passenger service by road, rail, air or water which is available for use by the public at large in return for the payment of a fare.

Air Traffic Control

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on how many occasions the Scottish air traffic control centre has been overloaded by excessive flights over the past five years.

Mr. Norris: Before 1993 if air traffic controllers considered that their workload on their sector had become too high they could submit a report which was investigated by both the unit management and the safety data analysis unit at Gatwick. The figures in Scotland for the period 1989 to 1992 were:

1 sector incident in 1989
4 sector incident in 1990
2 sector incident in 1991
1 sector incident in 1992

In 1993, a new recording system was introduced which cannot be directly compared with the previous system. There were 13 investigations in 1993 and 10 investigations so far in 1994.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what method is used to deal with excess flight pressure on the air traffic control system; and how many times this has been used in the past five years.

Mr. Norris: Within the United Kingdom, National Air Traffic Services establishes a flow rate for each sector of air space which takes into account air traffic controller manning. In order to prevent air traffic control demand exceeding the agreed level in United Kingdom air space the London flow management unit, situated at Heathrow, applies departure and flow restrictions measures. Such measures are designed to ensure that safety is not compromised and are applied throughout the busy times of the day.

Market Testing

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those services that have been market-tested by his Department and won by the private sector, indicating the organisation that won the tender and its value.

Mr. Norris: Items in the Department's "Competing for Quality" programmes which have resulted in contracts being let to the private sector are listed.

Road Workers (Injuries)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information his Department has of injuries to workers on (a) motorways, (b) other trunk roads and (c) other roads during each of the last five years involved in (i) construction, (ii) repairs and (iii) cleaning; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Oppenheim: I have been asked to reply.

The Health and Safety Executive does not record information on injuries to road workers in the form requested.

The table shows the number of injuries to workers while carrying out road surfacing work and highway maintenance for the last five years:

SOCIAL SECURITY

Mr. Wicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many families have been eligible for, and what has been the cost to public funds of, (a) family income supplement and (b) family credit since their introduction.

Mr. Roger Evans: Information is not available on the total numbers eligible for the two benefits.

The table provides details of the number of families receiving either family income supplement or family credit in each year since 1971 and the benefit expenditure for each financial year.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total expenditure on energy for offices and buildings by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Burt: The available information is in the tables.

A number of the agencies which form the Department have not been in existence for three years.

[1] In the year 1991–92 the DSS—HQ—was not responsible for payment of energy costs, therefore details are not held by the Department.

[2] The Contributions Agency was not responsible for energy costs in the years 1991–92 and 1992–93.

Jobseekers Bill

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the elements of the Jobseekers Bill which promote the assistance of persons without a settled way of life.

Mr. Roger Evans: Clause 25 in the Bill allows the Resettlement Agency to complete its task of disengaging the Government from the running of resettlement units by funding more appropriate provision provided by voluntary organisations, local authorities or private organisations.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his policy in respect of people who make themselves voluntarily unemployed or who refuse job vacancies continuing to receive automatic hardship payments under the allowance.

Mr. Roger Evans: Sanctioned claimants will not receive automatic benefit payments under the jobseeker's allowance. Claimants who are not in vulnerable groups will receive no benefit for the first two weeks of a sanction; thereafter, they may receive hardship payments at a reduced rate if they can demonstrate that they or their partner would otherwise suffer hardship. Claimants in vulnerable groups—those with children, who are sick or pregnant or have a sick or pregnant partner, or who have caring responsibilities—may have access to hardship payments throughout the period of the sanction.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much of the expected reduction in expenditure on benefits of around £140 million in 1996–97 and £270 million in 1997–98 as a result of the introduction of the jobseekers allowance will arise from each clause of the Jobseekers Bill

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is set out in the table. Estimates do not take account of tax or behavioural effects.

Policy measure	Benefit expenditure effect in 1996–97 £ million	Benefit expenditure effect in 1997–98 £ million	Relevant clause(s) in Jobseekers Bill
Contributory entitlement six months	–70	–180	Clause 5(1)
No Adult Dependency Increases in contributory benefit	–10	–20	Clause 4(1) and Schedule 2(20)
Unified rates of benefit: effect on 18–24 year old claimants	–20	–30	Clause 4(1)
Treatment of income from occupational and personal pensions	–10	–10	Clause 4(1) and Schedule 1(7)
Waiting days in income-based JSA	–40	–40	Schedule 1(4)
Anti-fraud measures	–10	–10	Clause 27 and 28
Benefit sanctions	–10	–10	Clauses 15 and 16
Treatment of earnings: disregard £10 per week per couple; partners may work up to 24 hours	+20	+20	Clauses 3(1), 4, 9 and 10
Net effect	+140	–270

Notes:

1. Assumes 2.4 million unemployed; 500,000 unemployment benefit cases; inflow into claimant unemployment of 3.8 million.
2. All estimates rounded to nearest £10 million.
3. Figures may not sum due to rounding.
4. Estimates in cash prices.
5. Excludes measures related to back to work bonus and national insurance contribution rebate.
6. Benefit sanction estimates are net of hardship payments.
7. Estimates are net of any effects in other benefits.
8. Based on 1993 annual statistical inquiry, 1993 and 1994 unemployment benefit statistics, 1993–94 adjudication officer statistics and the policy simulation model using 1990–91–92 family expenditure data.
9. The estimated effects relating to adult dependency increases unified rates assume contributory entitlement lasts six months.

Benefit savings are also likely to arise from aligning the treatment of earnings for contributory claimants with that for income-based claimants. Further information is currently being collected to allow this to be assessed.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his assessment of the number of people who will give up work as a result of their unemployed partners being eligible for non-means-tested benefit for only six months instead of 12 months under the jobseekers allowance.

Mr. Roger Evans: Of the 165,000 people estimated to lose entitlement to contribution-based jobseekers allowance as a result of the length of contributory entitlement being reduced to six months, 55,000 are estimated to have partners with earnings. It is not possible to provide an estimate of the number of these partners who may decide to give up work once contributory benefit is lost. However, any such effect is likely to be small as most couples in this position will be substantially better off with one partner in work than with neither.

We will also be introducing measures which are designed to encourage the partners of jobseekers allowance and income support claimants to remain in work, including increasing the partner's hours threshold from 16 to 24 hours, and introducing the back to work bonus.

Notes:

Estimated using the policy simulation model with 1990–91–92 family expenditure survey data and the 1993 and 1994 unemployment benefit statistics.

All estimates rounded to the nearest 5,000.

Youth Aid and Barnardo's Report

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what response he has made to the Youth Aid and Barnardo's report of 1993, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Roger Evans: Since publication of the report, we have substantially improved access to youth training; the number of young people awaiting a youth training place for eight weeks or more has dropped significantly to around 2,400. Our policy remains one of encouraging young people to take up education, work or training, not dependency on benefits, although income support remains available to young people at risk of severe hardship.

National Insurance

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many women in the United Kingdom were still paying the reduced married women's national insurance contributions in 1993–94 at the latest available date.

Mr. Arbuthnot: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Broadgreen (Mrs. Kennedy) on 21 October, Official Report, column 381. Information regarding 1993–94 is not yet complete.

Habitual Residency Test

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what additional resources or training has been given to local Benefits Agency staff to implement decisions under the habitual residency test; and what safeguards exist to ensure the test is not applied in a racially discriminatory way.

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Max Madden, dated 9 December 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the introduction of the habitual residence test.

An allocation of £800,000 has been distributed among Benefits Agency (BA) District offices and the need for any additional resources is being kept under review as management information is collected about the impact of the new procedures.

Prior to the introduction of the test, self instruction training material was produced by the BA in conjunction with staff from the office of the Chief Adjudication Officer. This material set out the requirements imposed by the test and was issued to Managers of all local BA offices. Managers are responsible for deciding who amongst their staff should receive the training.

The BA is committed to equal opportunities and has published an equal opportunities policy statement which makes it clear that no form of discrimination, whether against customers or staff by customers or staff, will be tolerated. This policy statement has been implemented through local action plans that are regularly monitored. Any complaints or suggestions of discrimination will always be treated seriously and immediately investigated by management. In addition, the Chief Adjudication Officer's staff are currently conducting a monitoring exercise to confirm uniformity in the application of the test and decision making throughout the country and as a part of this exercise will this month hold seminars with local Adjudication Officers.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Information Technology

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the bid by Computer Sciences Corporation to take over the day-to-day running of the information technology operations and support services of the Information Technology Services Agency.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The deadline for initial bids for this procurement was 12pm on 2 December 1994. No bid had been received from Computer Sciences Corporation by this deadline.

Divorce Settlements

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to be able to make a statement to the House regarding clean-break divorce financial settlements for wives and children.

Mr. Burt: The Government are aware of the concerns about the treatment of clean-break settlements in the child support arrangements. We have been conducting our own review of the child support system and are now considering carefully the recent report of the Social Security Select Committee. We will respond with proposals for policy changes in due course.

Disabled People

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will now summarise in a report to the House the responses to his consultation paper on the Government's proposals in regard to discrimination against disabled people, or place a summarised version of the responses in the Library.

Mr. Hague: I intend to publish an analysis of the responses when it is available. Copies will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will make it his policy to draft his proposed Bill on discrimination against disabled people in such a way that its scope will not prevent any attempt to substitute a disability rights commission, with the powers provided for by the Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill, for the proposed National Disability Council;

(2) if he will make it his policy to draft the money resolution for his proposed Bill on discrimination against disabled people in such a way as not to preclude amendments to substitute a Disability Rights Commission, with the powers provided for by the Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill, for the proposed National Disability Council.

Mr. Hague: We are in the process of drafting the Bill. The Bill's scope and the money resolution will depend on the final contents. It is not our intention to draft the Bill in such a way as to rule out full discussion of this issue.

Pensions

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out the amount of the normal uprating in April 1995 for (a) a single pensioner not on income support, (b) a pensioner couple not on income support, (c) a single pensioner on income support, (d) a pensioner couple on income support and alongside set out the money over and above that uprating for VAT home heating compensation.

Mr. Roger Evans: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 8 December to my hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, North (Mr Gale), Official Report, column 376.

Market Testing

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list those services that have been market-tested by his Department and won by the private sector, indicating the organisation that won the tender and its value.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The information requested by the hon. Member is published in the "Market Testing Bulletin", copies of which are held in the Library.

[1] The cost of the service that went out to tender for the Quarry house contracts cannot be broken down into individual contracts as this is a notional figure.

[2] Due to the nature of the market test BA Training was submitted to, much of the information cannot be obtained at contract level, having been calculated on a national level at the time. The value of £12.48 million therefore includes the 16 in-house wins.

VAT (Fuel)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much compensation towards the extra cost of value added tax on domestic fuel there will be within the benefit rates from next April for pensioners and disabled people.

Mr. Lilley: Average amounts of compensation are shown in the table. Fuel prices have fallen in real terms over the last two years inclusive of VAT. Pensioners and disabled people should therefore have experienced gains in addition to those due to VAT compensation next year exceeding the impact of eight per cent. VAT on average fuel bills.

	VAT: 8 per cent. of estimated average fuel bill, for each group of recipients, in 1995–96 —per week £	Compensation in 1995–96—per week. (includes amounts added into benefit rates in 1994–95 and 1995–96) £
Pensioners[1]	0.85	0.90

[1] The average of VAT and compensation for all single people over pension age, and all couples where the head of the couple is over pension age.

[2] The average of VAT and compensation for all single disabled people, and all couples where at least one person in the couple is disabled.

Note:

Modelled using the 1990–91–92 family expenditure surveys, uprated to 1995–96 levels. Amounts of VAT and compensation are calculated at benefit unit level. Estimates of VAT for pensioners are similar—within 5p—to those produced by Age Concern from the 1993 family expenditure survey.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the changes to his proposals, consequent upon the decision not to proceed with the second phase of value added tax on domestic fuel following his annual review of national insurance contributions.

Mr. Lilley: The revised contribution rates and thresholds are in the table.

Benefit Upratings

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost, in a full year, of full uprating of child dependency additions of all categories using their year of introduction as a base.

Mr. Roger Evans [holding answer 5 December 1994]: The estimated net cost would be £90 million in 1994–95:

Notes:

1. The estimate has been calculated by:
    - (i) taking the child dependency increase rate—CDI—for the eldest child payable in 1948, the year of introduction; then
    - (ii) inflating that figure to take account of upratings from 1948 up to and including April 1994. The percentage rate of increase used is the same as that of personal retirement pension; then
    - (iii) deducting the rates of child benefit payable from April 1994 to arrive at the rates that would apply for both the eldest child and subsequent children; then
    - (iv) following conversion to an annual gross figure, applying an offsetting reduction on expenditure on income-related benefits.
2. The estimate excludes the cost of restoring sickness benefit, maternity allowance and unemployment benefit CDIs, which were discounted with effect from November 1984.
3. The estimate has been rounded to the nearest £5 million and should be treated with caution owing to small sample sizes.

Written Answers to Questions

Tuesday 13 December 1994

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department which of the appointments made to public bodies by his Department were advertised in the period from April 1992 to December 1993.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Four appointments to the Law Commission were advertised in the period from April 1992 to December 1993, although three of those appointed did not take up post until 1994.

In addition, two vacancies for barristers on the Legal Aid Board were also advertised in Bar News, a publication distributed to all subscribing members of the Bar.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is his Department's policy regarding the use of executive search consultants in making appointments to public bodies; and if he will list (a) the appointments where such consultants have been used and (b) the cost in each case in the period April 1992 to December 1993.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The use of executive search consultants is one of the recruitment options considered when making public appointments. Such consultants were not, however, used in the period in question.

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department which of the special advisers serving in his Department during the last five years were subject to positive security vetting.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor's Department has not employed any special advisers during the last five years.

Magistrates Court Service

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he will announce the results of the review conducted by his Department and the magistrates courts service into the operation of the formula for allocating revenue grant to the magistrates courts service.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor has today completed his consideration of the proposals made by the working group, comprising representatives of the service and his Department, and of the representations made by the service regarding those proposals.

The Lord Chancellor has concluded that the review has demonstrated that the current formula for revenue grant allocation, introduced on 1 April 1992, as set out in the answer given on 18 October 1991, Official Report, column 288, does not represent the best method of allocation. It does not adequately encourage local managers to achieve the best value for money in their use of resources, while also reflecting the varying needs of magistrates courts committees. He, therefore, intends to allocate revenue grant in 1995–96, and in subsequent years, on the basis of a revised formula. The allocation formula will operate on the following basis:

	Per cent.
Average expenditure outturn over the previous 5 years, expressed at constant prices	45
The annual estimate of general population produced by the Office of Population Census and Surveys	10
Completed weighted caseload, averaged over a 3, growing to 5, year rolling period	35
Fine enforcement averaged over a 2, growing to 5, year rolling period	5
Time taken to deal with triable either-way and indictable only cases, averaged over a 2, growing to 5, year rolling period	5

The Lord Chancellor intends, over the coming years, to reduce the areas of expenditure which are wholly or partially excluded from the cash limiting formula. In a number of instances this will be subject to further consideration, in conjunction with the service, of suitable alternative procedures. There are also a number of further matters he wishes his Department to consider. All of these will be subject to consultation with the service. Copies of a paper setting out the full details of the allocation formula to apply from 1995–96 onwards, the issues for further consideration and the allocations to apply for 1995–96 have been placed in the Library of the House and sent today to members of the Magistrates Courts Consultative Council, the clerks to all MCCs and the chief executives of all paying authorities.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Lord President of the Council which of the special advisers serving in his office during the last five years were subject to positive security vetting.

Mr. Newton: All special advisers are currently required to have positive vetting.

TRANSPORT

Thames Transport

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what conclusions the River Thames working group has reached from its study into transport on the Thames.

Mr. Deva: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what conclusions the River Thames working group has reached from its study into transport on the Thames.

Mr. Norris: The River Thames working group has now completed its work examining the potential for increasing traffic on the River Thames and its report will be published tomorrow. The Thames is a unique river with its own special characteristics, opportunities and problems. The group has concluded that there is scope for increasing freight volumes and for improving tourist services and suggests what is needed to allow this to happen. I will place a copy of the report in the Library tomorrow.

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which of the special advisers serving in his Department during the last five years were subject to positive security vetting.

Dr. Mawhinney: All special advisers are currently required to have positive vetting.

Payment of Bills

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of invoices to his Department were paid within agreed terms or 30 days for the last financial year.

Mr. Norris: A total of 93.6 per cent.

Buses (Wheelchair Accessibility)

Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidance is given to bus and minibus manufacturers and operators by his Department on the provision of adequate restraint of wheelchairs in buses and minibuses, on the provision of seat belts to restrain wheelchair occupants and on the suitability of various types of wheelchair for carrying occupants in buses and minibuses; what information he has on the extent to which such guidance has been adopted by bus and minibus manufacturers; and what representations he has received with respect to amendments to any existing guidance or codes of practice covering the above issues.

Mr. Norris: Guidance is given in a code of practice entitled "The Safety of Passengers in Wheelchairs on Buses". This code of practice is used by vehicle inspectorate certifying officers when examining vehicles, designed for the carriage of passengers in wheelchairs, for public service vehicle certification. The code deals with the restraint of both wheelchairs and their occupants and takes account of the various types and sizes of wheelchair available, including those powered by electricity. The only deviation which has been allowed from the terms of the code is in respect of low-floor buses and we will review the recommendations of the code when trials on these buses are complete.

Information on the extent to which manufacturers have taken up this guidance is not available but we are aware that, in addition to PSVs, local authorities and voluntary groups have adopted the recommendations of the code for vehicles which they operate.

Research

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what sum was spent by his Department on research in each of the last 10 years; what percentage this was of the total annual budget; what is the research budget for the forthcoming year; what percentage this is of his total budget; and what additional new research is to be undertaken.

Mr. Norris: The figures requested are given in the following table:

Year	Net research expenditure	Research as a percentage of total expenditure
1985–86	25.0	0.9
1986–87	24.6	0.9
1987–88	26.4	1.0
1988–89	27.2	1.0
1989–90	28.6	0.8
1990-91	30.5	0.7
1991–92	36.4	0.7
1992–93	39.7	0.6
1993–94	39.0	0.7
1994–95	38.0	0.6
1995–96	39.0	0.9

Gospel Oak to Barking Line

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what arrangements will be made after privatisation to fund resignalling of the Gospel Oak to Barking line between South Tottenham and Woodgrange Park; and what is the estimated cost for such works.

Mr. Norris: Investment in rail infrastructure is a matter for Railtrack in consultation with the franchising director and train operating companies. This relationship will not be affected by privatisation.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what resignalling, infrastructure repair and improvement works programme for the South Tottenham to Gospel Oak section of the Gospel Oak to Barking line prior to the flotation of Railtrack are planned and authorised by his Department; what arrangements will be made after privatisation to fund such projects where there are economic, social and environmental benefits to the local community; and what is the estimated cost for such planned or projected works.

Mr. Norris: I understand that the Barking to Gospel Oak line is being looked at in the context of plans Railtrack is currently developing for the whole of the North London line, in consultation with the train operating company, North London Railways. The signal cabling between South Tottenham and Wanstead Park is currently being replaced and is scheduled for completion by 12 December. Investment in rail infrastructure is a matter for Railtrack in consultation with the franchising director and train operating companies. This relationship will not be affected by privatisation.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the delays to the existing passenger train service caused by the absence of signals between South Tottenham signal box control area and Wanstead Park on the Gospel Oak to Barking line when additional trains are routed over the line; and if the resignalling installation planned between South Tottenham and Woodgrange Park as part of the Liverpool Street resignalling project remains in the resignalling programme currently authorised by his Department.

Mr. Norris: The signal cabling between South Tottenham and Wanstead Park is currently being replaced and this has resulted in trains being delayed by 30 seconds. No other delay assessments have been carried out. No plans currently exist for full resignalling between South Tottenham and Woodgrange Park.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what restrictions exist on the weight or type of train permitted to use the railway between Woodgrange Park and South Tottenham on the Gospel Oak to Barking line or between South Tottenham and Gospel Oak; why such restrictions exist; what remedial works are planned to eliminate such restrictions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: I understand that the route is classified at 90 tonne gross laden weight for four axle bogie vehicles but, due to lack of capacity on six bridges, the classification is reduced to 75 tonnes. Railtrack plans to strengthen or reconstruct these structures over the next four years.

Buses

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will support the retention of the traditional double-decker omnibus; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: Yes. a European Commission proposal for a directive on bus and coach construction is expected next year. We will be seeking any necessary amendments to ensure the survival of not only the double-decker but any other type of vehicle whose economic future may be threatened by the provisions of the directive.

Bridges

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps have been taken to conduct a general condition survey of all road bridges over and under both operational and disused railways in the north London area, following the failure and collapse of Crouch Hill bridge over the former railway alignment in north Islington; what Government funding is available to local authorities, Railtrack or any other authority responsible for maintenance and repair of bridges more than 30 years old; and what information he has as to why the bridge collapsed.

Mr. Norris: The authorities responsible for the structures in question are required to ensure that they are maintained in a safe condition and to carry out regular inspections as appropriate.

The bridge at Crouch hill is owned by the local highway authority, the London borough of Islington. The partial collapse of the bridge occurred while strengthening work was under way. Investigation of the cause of the collapse is a matter for the borough and those involved with the strengthening operations.

Central Government funding is available to local highway authorities to assist their programmes of bridge assessment and strengthening. This can include funding of the assessment of structures owned by Railtrack.

Railway Regulator

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many examinations by the railway regulator into track access charges and train leasing costs have been made; when he expects the regulator to report; and if the regulator's conclusions will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Watts: The rail regulator informs me that his office is nearing completion of a review of Railtrack's track access charges for both franchised passenger services and freight services. Consultation papers, "Framework for the Approval of Railtrack's Track Access Charges for Franchised Passenger Services" and "Framework for the Approval of Railtrack's Track Access Charges for Freight Services", were published by the office in June and October respectively. A policy statement, "Railtrack's Track Access Charges for Franchised Passenger Services: Developing the Structure of Charges", was published in November. Copies of all these documents have been placed in the Library of the House. The regulator intends to publish final policy statements on the levels of passenger and freight access charges in January.

The regulator has not undertaken any examination of train leasing costs, which are not subject to his approval.

Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the introduction of automated first registration and licensing involves a transfer of an undertaking from the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency to motor dealers within the meaning of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981.

Mr. Norris: This is an operational matter for the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Stephen Curtis to Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody, dated 13 December 1994:

Thank you for your recent question about the application of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 to the Automated First Registration and Licensing Project. Interpretation of the law is for the Courts and this matter has not been tested in this way. However as always I would be very happy to discuss such matters with members of the staff and their representatives if they consider it would be helpful.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the numbers of commuters likely to benefit form the channel tunnel rail link; and how much subsidy per head he intends to authorise.

Mr. Watts: The Government intend to secure substantial capacity on the channel tunnel rail link for domestic passenger services. The four consortia invited to bid for the role of promoter have been asked to submit bids on two bases: to provide capacity for eight and 12 trains per hour each way during the peak. The precise service specification will be determined in the light of the bids received. The amount of subsidy will be determined as a result of the competition currently under way and of the competition which the Government intend to hold at a later stage to select an operator to run domestic services.

Air Traffic Control

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how much funding is required to complete the new Scottish air traffic control centre;

(2) when the new Scottish air traffic control centre will be operational;

(3) on what date the oceanic control centre equipment known as flight data processing system, FDPS II, will be in operation; and where this new equipment will be housed;

(4) what arrangements are being made to handle the expected increase in air traffic over air space covered by the Scottish air traffic control centre.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 12 December 1994]: The new Scottish centre—NSC—is being built at a cost of approximately £200 million to meet the predicted increase in the level of air traffic movements over Scotland and the north Atlantic. The CAA plans to have the NSC operational by 2000.

The CAA aims to have the new flight data processing system—FDPS—installed and operational in the NSC by 1998, subject to the satisfactory conclusion of a contract under the private finance initiative.

Re-sectorisation of the Scottish air space is being carried out to ensure that there is adequate capacity available until the new Scottish centre commences operation.

Passenger Transport Grant

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what level of metropolitan grant will be payable to the English passenger transport executives for 1995–96; and what total grant will be payable by all passenger transport executives to passenger train operators for 1995–96.

Mr. Watts [holding answer 12 December 1994]: We intend to lay before Parliament, early next year, a special grant report in respect of the metropolitan railway grant for 1995–96 in England and Wales.

Total grant payable to the English PTEs will be calculated pursuant to that report, based on the costs of passenger train operations in all the PTE areas.

PRIME MINISTER

Inward Investment, Chester

10. Mr Brandreth: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to visit the City of Chester to discuss inward investment.

The Prime Minister: I have no immediate plans to do so. However, I am aware of the success that Chester has enjoyed in recent years in attracting inward investment to the city.

Ministers

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister (1) how many Ministers there were in the Home Office in 1978; how many there are now; and to what extent the current responsibilities and work of the Department are different from those in 1978;

(2) how many Ministers there are in the Department of Trade and Industry; how many there were in the Department of Trade and Industry in 1978; and to what extent the current responsibilities and work of the Department are different from those at that date;

(3) how many Ministers there are in the Department of the Environment; how many were in the corresponding Department in 1978; and to what extent the work and responsibilities of that Department have changed since that date.

The Prime Minister: This is a matter of public record. The current details of ministerial responsibilities are contained in the Cabinet Office's "List of Ministerial Responsibilities", which is available in the Library of the House.

Honours System

Dr. Wright: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 2 December 1994, Official Report, column 923, if he will identify (a) the 15 people who have had an honour cancelled since 1979 and (b) the nature of the disrepute in each of these cases.

The Prime Minister: No. The names have been published in the London Gazette.

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 13 December.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 13 December.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

Nagorno-Karabakh

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe with particular reference to Nagorno-Karabakh; what further action Her Majesty's Government propose taking within the UN Security Council in relation to peacekeeping forces in Nagorno-Karabakh; and whether Her Majesty's Government have been invited to participate in any way in relation to peacekeeping in Nagorno-Karabakh.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the statement I made last week, Official Report, 7 December 1994, columns 220–22. In relation to Nagorno-Karabakh, we welcome the outcome of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe's Budapest summit as a positive step towards a peaceful resolution of that tragic conflict.

We will fully support the co-ordinated efforts of the CSCE Minsk group and the Russian Federation to work with the parties to the dispute in achieving a political agreement which will make it possible to establish a multinational peacekeeping operation. We will be ready to support appropriate action in the United Nations Security Council when that agreement has been reached.

We have undertaken to provide a small number of signals personnel for a possible CSCE monitoring mission in Nagorno-Karabakh. Any further contribution would have to be considered in the light of our other commitments, and of the conditions under which a peacekeeping operation was to be established.

Ecclesiastical Appointments

Dr. Wright: To ask the Prime Minister what is the total number of ecclesiastical appointments for which he is responsible; and if he will list them.

The Prime Minister: I have already advised the hon. Member of the main categories of appointments, including church appointments, for which I am responsible. But the total number, including those appointments on which I advise Her Majesty the Queen, cannot be accurately calculated since I have discretion in some cases as to how many appointments I make; and in the case of church appointments, some vacancies fall casually and unpredictably to the Crown by virtue of the royal prerogative.

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Prime Minister which of the special advisers serving in his office during the last five years were subject to positive security vetting.

The Prime Minister: All special advisers are currently required to have positive vetting.

ENVIRONMENT

Private Sector Rented Accommodation

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the average private sector residential rent in (a) Southampton, (b) Portsmouth and (c) Hampshire; and, in each case, what is the total number of private sector residential tenancies.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Information is not available on the average private sector residential rent in Southampton, Portsmouth and Hampshire. Details of the number of private sector residential tenancies in these areas are contained in table 20 of the 1991 "Census County Report: Hampshire", part 1.

Domestic Waste Disposal

Mr. Scott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authorities in England dispose of their domestic waste (a) by incineration and (b) by the use of landfill sites.

Mr. Atkins: Information on the waste disposal practices of individual local authorities is not held centrally.

Approximately 20 million tonnes of domestic waste arise annually in England and Wales. Of this, around 85 per cent. is landfilled and 10 per cent. is incinerated. There are currently 21 incinerators for the disposal of municipal waste operating in the United Kingdom.

Energy Efficiency

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information and data from the 1991 English house condition survey on energy consumption, energy efficiency and condition of housing he has provided to the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Data on the subjects mentioned by the hon. Member are contained in the report of the survey, which is a public document.

Single Regeneration Budget

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each metropolitan district and London borough the value of the funding for the first year of the single regeneration budget, the bid for funds from the first year of the single regeneration budget, the totals received under the urban programme in 1992–93, 1993–94 and 1994–95 and the totals for section 11 funding in 1992–93, 1993–94 and 1994–95.

Mr. Curry: The bids received for funding new projects under the single regeneration budget and the 201 successful bids announced on 6 December represent comprehensive responses by partnerships to local needs, which in some cases cross local authority boundaries. As a result, the information requested is not available in the form sought, but I sent details of all the successful bids to the hon. Member on 5 December.

Details of funding provided under the urban programme and section 11 in each metropolitan district and London borough is given in the tables. The section 11 grant allocations for 1994–95 include Home Office funded projects and those funded from the single regeneration budget.

Notes:

The figures include payments to local authorities, grant-maintained schools, further education colleges and sixth form colleges.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of the successful single regeneration on budget bids in the west midlands region was for housing projects which would previously have qualified for funding under the estates action programme.

Mr. Curry: Of the 13 successful west Midlands bids for the single regeneration budget, six contain housing projects which would previously have been eligible to be considered for estate action funding. These housing projects will receive £23 million of the total west midlands SRB funding of £156.686 million.

English Nature (Grants)

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance he has given English Nature on the issuing of grants to voluntary bodies; and if he will list the nature of the work undertaken by those bodies that have been assisted.

Mr. Atkins: English Nature is provided with comprehensive advice on grant giving in its financial memorandum. Summaries of grants given and the work undertaken by grant-aided bodies are included in English Nature's annual reports.

VAT (Fuel)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what information he has about the proportion of disposable income which will be used by households to maintain a temperature of 16 deg C inside their homes over the winter months as a result of the imposition of VAT of 17.5 per cent. on fuel, taking account of the compensation package; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what assessment he has made of the environmental and public health impacts of the imposition of VAT at 17.5 per cent. on domestic fuel bills.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: My right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has announced that the proposed increase in VAT on domestic fuel bills will not now take place.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what account had been taken of the information and data obtained for the 1991 English house condition survey when calculating the compensation package associated with value added tax on domestic fuel bills.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: It is not possible to specify the account which was taken of any particular source of information among the many that were considered as the package of help for VAT on fuel was prepared. The package directed additional resources to vulnerable groups, especially pensioners, who were among those highlighted in the English house condition survey.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to include energy efficiency in the housing fitness standard following the imposition of VAT on domestic fuel bills; and what proportion of disposable income he considers reasonable for maintaining a temperature of 16 deg C within homes.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: We have no proposals. The proportion of disposable income reasonable for maintaining a temperature of 16 deg C will depend on the disposable income of the individual household.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many parliamentary questions tabled in the last Session of Parliament were not answered on the grounds that the information sought was not held centrally by the Department.

Mr. Gummer: Twenty-five.

Rio Conference

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what additional measures he intends to introduce to assist in meeting the carbon dioxide reduction targets agreed at the 1992 Rio conference following the Government's decision to abandon the planned second tranche rise in VAT on domestic fuel and power.

Mr. Atkins: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms Ruddock) on 12 December 1994, Official Report, column 435.

National Parks

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) which local authorities appoint representatives to serve on national park committees; and how many people each appoint;

(2) how many people he appoints to each national park committee;

(3) if he will list all the constituencies which form part of national parks.

Mr. Atkins: The information is set out in the table. Information relating to national parks in Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Housing

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list (a) the sum paid out in housing benefit (i) to council and (ii) to non-council tenants and (b) the sum tenants received in housing revenue account subsidy in each local housing authority area in 1993-94; and what is the size of the surplus or deficit in each local housing authority.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave him on 12 December 1994, Official Report, column 433.

Hampshire

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total sum claimed in (a) expenses and (b) attendance allowances by councillors on Hampshire district councils and Hampshire county council in the most recent year; and how many councillors in total serve on these councils.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Details of expenses and attendance allowances payments made by local authorities to councillors are not held centrally, but 102 councillors serve on Hampshire county council, and a total of 586 on the Hampshire district councils.

Housing Association Rents

Ms Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the percentage change in rents for new housing association assured tenancies between 1989 and 1994; and what has been the change in the retail prices index over the same period.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave the hon. Member for Lewisham, East (Mrs. Prentice) on 30 November 1994, Official Report, column 724.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to keep the system of local authority funding under review.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: It is already our policy to do so.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will increase credit approvals and capital grants to local authorities in 1995–96 to maintain current expenditure levels.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Capital allocations to local authorities in 1995–96 will reflect the Government's general policy on public expenditure control. However, central Government support is only one means through which local authorities can undertake capital expenditure; they can also finance it out of usable capital receipts from the sale of assets, and from revenue. Authorities therefore have some scope to fund higher levels of capital expenditure if they choose to do so.

National Non-domestic Rate

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he has given to allowing the national non-domestic rate to be placed under local authority control.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: I have no plans to return the setting of non-domestic rates to local authority control.

Local Authorities (Pensioners)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he is taking to alleviate the additional costs placed on local authorities for compensation to pensioners.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: My right. hon. Friend the Secretary of State laid the Local Government (Compensation for Redundancy) Regulations 1994 before the House on 5 December. These allow local authorities to compensate pensioners whose payments were reduced following the Court of Appeal judgment in Allsop v. North Tyneside MBC. Where authorities choose to make such payments, they must do so from their own available resources.

Fire Safety

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement regarding the responsibilities of landlords in ensuring fire safety in houses of multiple occupation.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The Housing (Management of Houses in Multiple Occupation) Regulations 1990—SI 1990 No. 830—require managers of HMOs to ensure the repair, maintenance and good order of means of escape from fire, including display signs, and apparatus, systems and other things provided by way of fire precautions. The manager is also required to take reasonable precautions for the general safety of residents, which can include fire precautions. Failure to comply is punishable by a fine not exceeding level three on the standard scale, which is currently £1,000.

Local housing authorities have the power to serve a notice under section 352 of the Housing Act 1985, as amended, requiring the person having control of or managing the house to provide adequate means of escape from fire and other fire precautions. Failure to comply is punishable by a fine not exceeding level four on the standard scale, currently £2,500. Local authorities may carry out works in default and recover their expenses from the person on whom the notice was served.

Landlords may also have a general duty under section 3 of the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974 to conduct their undertaking in such a way as to ensure, so far as is reasonably practicable, that persons not in their employment are not exposed to risks to their health or safety, and this can include tenants in HMOs. The risks can include fire risks. Failure to comply is punishable by a fine not exceeding £20,000.

Rented Housing

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate has been made of the number of new homes available for rent which need to be built in the area of each housing authority in England.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The Department does not make such estimates. Local housing authorities make assessments of the full range of housing needs when they draw up their housing strategy statements for their areas. Authorities are expected to publish their statements.

Non-domestic Rating

Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what changes are now proposed to the current system of appeals against non-domestic rating assessments in England and Wales, in the light of responses to the consultation papers.

Mr. Curry: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, together with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales, has decided to streamline the current arrangements and make them simpler for business to use. The changes will apply to appeals against the new rating lists which come into effect on 1 April 1995.

There was a full and helpful response to the consultation papers we issued in September. There was a warm welcome for our proposals that the Valuation Office agency should notify occupiers direct of their proposed new rateable value in January, instead of leaving them to find it out when they receive their rate bill for 1995–96; to abandon the six-month limit on submission of appeals following a material change of circumstances, or relevant tribunal or court decision; and to shorten from six months to three the period after which the VOA has to pass an unresolved appeal on to the valuation tribunal. We will therefore proceed with all these reforms.

We had also proposed a tightening up of the current system of time limits for appeals against the values originally shown in the list, which has not worked well. Respondents endorsed our analysis of the problem but many favoured the more radical step of abolishing the time limits altogether, on the grounds that their potential benefits were outweighed by the practical drawbacks. We found their representations persuasive. We have therefore decided that ratepayers should be able to appeal on any of the permitted grounds at any time during the currency of the list.

These new arrangements will be far easier for business, particularly small business, to deal with and will help to ensure speedier settlement of appeals. We will be bringing forward regulations to implement them in the new year.

Compulsory Competitive Tendering Personnel Services

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his proposals for extending compulsory competitive tendering to local authority personnel services.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The Government announced on 10 November 1992 their intention to extend compulsory competitive tendering to local authority and other defined authorities' corporate and professional services, including personnel services. My officials have subsequently had valuable discussions with a joint services working group which included representatives of the local authority associations and the Audit Commission and Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy on how the CCT regime might be applied to personnel services.

Following these discussions, we are today issuing a consultation paper inviting comments on the Government's detailed proposals for extending CCT to personnel services. This follows similar consultations for local authorities' housing management, legal, construction and property, IT and finance services. It represents the last of the services which are being considered for inclusion in the CCT regime.

Copies of today's consultation paper will be placed in the Library. It proposes a definition which captures a range of authorities' personnel services, including training and human resource management, but does not encompass the day-to-day line management functions undertaken by many staff.

Authorities will wish, for a variety of reasons, to retain certain elements of personnel work in-house, both to enable an authority to fulfil its democratic responsibilities and to act as an expert client for bought-in services. We propose that local authorities be permitted to carry out up to 65 per cent. by value of personnel work using their own staff without going through competition. Authorities will be able to retain at least £300,000 worth of defined activity work in-house free of competition. This is intended to recognise and encourage the mixed economy of in-house and contracted-out service provision which is a feature of personnel services.

As with previous consultations on professional services, the consultation paper also gives details of modifications which we intend to make to the statutory framework for competitive tendering. This will ensure that authorities will continue to be able to deliver services in a way which meets their own operational objectives.

Following careful consideration of comments received on the proposals included in this consultation document, I will submit to the House the statutory instrument required under the Local Government Act 1988 to give effect to our proposals. I anticipate that, subject to the conclusions we draw from consultation and to parliamentary approval of the subsequent order defining the activity, CCT for personnel services will take effect from 1 October 1996 in metropolitan districts, London boroughs and certain other defined authorities.

For shire local authorities, personnel CCT will take effect once the Local Government Commission's review of local authority structure is complete and, where appropriate, changes have been made. The implementation timetable for the new police authorities will be the subject of separate consultation.

My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales are issuing separate consultation papers. The proposals contained therein follow much of what I have outlined above, although implementation dates will again take account of the programme for local government restructuring in both those countries.

Experience with the services already subject to CCT has shown that competition brings not only financial savings but also significant improvements in the management, efficiency and quality of public services. I fully expect that CCT will bring the same benefits to personnel services.

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about compulsory competitive tendering in relation to local government review and reorganisation and about the introduction of CCT for legal services, construction and property services and further manual services.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: On 2 August, my Department issued and invited comments from local authorities, industry and others on draft regulations and a draft guidance paper for shire county and district authorities, containing detailed proposals for the operation of compulsory competitive tendering in shire authorities during the period of local government review and reorganisation. These amplified the proposals announced by my predecessors on 29 March 1993, Official Report, column 55, and 17 December 1993, Official Report, column 1096.

The Government's main objective in determining these arrangements is to strike the right balance between maintaining and extending the benefits which CCT has brought to local authorities and the users of their services and easing administrative burdens on local authorities undergoing reorganisation.

One hundred and forty-seven organisations commented on the proposals. I have considered these, and have now made regulations under sections 19 and 26(4) of the Local Government Act 1992. The regulations will be laid next week, and my Department will then also issue the guidance paper to local authorities, a copy of which I shall place in the Library. Both the regulations and the guidance paper take account of the many comments and helpful suggestions received.

The guidance paper confirms that CCT for professional support services will start to come into effect two years after the coming into being of individual reorganised authorities, giving them good time in which to decide upon their new organisational structure, consider how they wish to organise their business and review their approach to the provision of support services.

As regards shire counties or districts which are unchanged following local government review, the proposal reflected in the August consultation drafts was that CCT for professional services would start to come into effect from April 1998. However, I have concluded that I wish to reconsider this timetable, in the interests of securing the benefits of competitive tendering as soon as possible in "status quo" authorities. I shall therefore consult local authorities further in the new year on alternative proposals. Any new arrangements, if adopted following consultation, will ensure that status quo authorities will have at least as much time to prepare for and implement CCT following the decisions on their future, as the two years provided for reorganised authorities following their establishment.

The 1992 Act regulations and the guidance paper confirm the timetable arrangements previously announced for the implementation of housing management CCT. Local authorities are making good progress with their preparations, including consultation with their tenants. I have, however, decided to drop the proposal in the August consultation drafts to link the HMCCT exemption for the reorganised authorities to preparation of a detailed specification which their direct service organisations would have to meet.

For other services already subject to CCT, the requirement to invite external tenders will be lifted in authorities undergoing reorganisation, for the period between the making of statutory reorganisation orders and 18 months after successor authorities take over, in recognition of the pressure of work on outgoing and successor authorities in this period. This exemption does not apply to short-term and low-value contracts which do not normally involve significant administrative effort. These are defined as work which will last for less than 12 months or be less than £200,000 in annual value. I have considered local authorities' arguments for widening this exemption, but have not been persuaded that this would be appropriate. As indicated in the August consultation drafts, all local authorities must at all times maintain DSO accounts, meet the specified financial objectives and maintain services fully to specification.

The other arrangements provided for in the 1992 Act regulations and guidance paper are as set out in the August consultation proposals. I shall place in the Library a list of the consultation responses received. Copies of individual responses can be obtained through the Library.

On 2 November, the House approved orders under section 2(3) of the Local Government Act 1988, to extend CCT to legal services, construction and property services, and three further manual services—security work, supervision of on-street parking and management of vehicles. I have now made regulations under section 6(3) of the 1988 Act, which set out the timetable for these services to become subject to CCT, and the proportions of legal services and construction and property services to be subject to completion.

These regulations give effect to the Government's decisions which my predecessor announced on 14 June 1994, Official Report, column 346, and 19 July 1994, Official Report, column 109, and which I set out to the House on 2 November 1994, Official Report, column 1606, other than as regards the implementation timetable for "status quo" shire authorities, on which, as I have indicated, the Government wish to consult further with local authorities. Further 1988 Act regulations will be made to give effect to the decisions taken on this aspect of the arrangements, following the further consultation.

Nickel and Vanadium Emissions

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those large combustion plants which emit nickel and vanadium, the fuel they burn, the total annual emissions permitted for each plant of nickel and vanadium, the actual total annual emissions of nickel and vanadium for each plant in the last three years and the maximum emission rate of nickel and vanadium for each plant.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer Thursday 8 December 1994]: All large combustion plants burning oil, coal or orimulsion will release vanadium or nickel. The table provides as much information as the inspectorate has been able to assemble without disproportionate expense. This information covers 1993.

Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution authorises releases of these substances in different ways depending on the detail of the application for authorisation under the Environmental Protection Act 1990 and the local circumstances. Some of these substances are given specific limits, but, in all cases, there is a residual duty under the Act to use best available techniques not entailing excessive cost to prevent the release of all prescribed substances, which include release to air of vanadium, nickel and their compounds, and to render harmless any other substance, which is not prescribed.

Sites of Community Interest

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations he has had with his counterparts in France, Ireland, Spain and Portugal concerning equivalence of progress on the designation of sites of community interest in the Atlantic biogeographical region, pursuant to article 1(c)(iii) of the EU habitats directive.

Mr. Atkins: A meeting attended by representatives of the Commission and relevant member states of the Atlantic biogeographic region to establish a common understanding for the application of the directive to the region and on aspects of implementation was held in Edinburgh from 12 to 14 October. Member states reported their progress on the identification of candidate sites of Community interest. Community-wide discussions on these topics are held at regular meetings of the adaptation committee for the directive, chaired by the Commission.

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which of the special advisers serving in his Department during the last five years were subject to positive security vetting.

Mr. Gummer: All special advisers are required to have positive vetting.

Radioactive Waste Disposal

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the contract recently awarded to Safeguard International to assume the responsibilities of the national radioactive waste disposal service was put out to competitive tender.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I have been asked to reply.

Arrangements for the provision of this service are a management matter for the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Fire Advisory Panel

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the remit of the proposed fire advisory panel will include advice to the Government on national standards.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The Government are currently considering the 61 conclusions and recommendations in the report of the review of fire safety legislation and enforcement in the light of responses to the recent public consultation exercise. No decisions have been taken on any of the recommendations, including those relating to the proposed new advisory panel.

Morgan Report

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to implement the recommendations of the Morgan report relating to the role of local councils.

Mr. Maclean: The Government issued their response to the Morgan report in December 1992. A copy was placed in the Library. We see no need to implement the specific recommendations in the report about the role of local authorities in crime prevention.

Dyfed Powys Police

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the funding of the Dyfed Powys police in both cash and real terms in each year since 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The following table shows the total amounts of Home Office grant, in cash terms and at 1993–94 prices, paid to the Dyfed Powys police between 1987–88 and 1993–94 in respect of both current and capital expenditure.

Home Office grant payments—Dyfed Powys police

	£ million Grant paid	Grant at 1993–94 prices
1987–88	12.154	17.067
1988–89	12.899	16.977
1989–90	15.056	18.522
1990–91	16.038	18.267
1991–92	18.925	20.281
1992–93	20.848	21.486
1993–94	22.828	22.828

The balance of the funding is made up of revenue support grant, which is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales, national non-domestic rates and a precept on billing authorities for the proportion of the budget met by the community charge or the council tax.

Armley Prison (Young Offenders)

Mr. Michael: to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) remanded and (b) sentenced prisoners aged under 21 years have been received into Armley prison since 1 August 1994; what was the number of such prisoners detained in Armley prison at the most recent convenient date; and why prisoners of this age are being held at Armley rather that at Moorland young offender institution.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Alun Michael, dated 13 December 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about young offenders at Leeds prison.

There are currently no prisoners aged under 21 years detained at Leeds. Such prisoners have been held at Leeds on two occasions since August 1994.

In one case, a sentenced prisoner aged 20 who had been reclassified as adult was held at Leeds, in view of his record of behaviour in custody. He had taken hostages and committed affray and was unsuited to young offender conditions. He was released from custody in September 1994. The other case involved a remand prisoner who claimed he was 21. He was only held at Leeds for two days until a check with the Registrar of Births proved that he was under 21 and he was transferred to Doncaster.

British Citizen Children

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many cases over the past three years immigration enforcement action with a view to removal from the United Kingdom has been commenced against custodial parents of minor British citizen children; in how many such cases a custodial parent has been removed from the United Kingdom whether accompanied or not by the British citizen child or children; what is the breakdown by nationality of parents of British citizen children against whom such enforcement action has been commenced; and at what level of seniority decisions are taken to commence enforcement action which affect the rights of British citizen children.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The level of seniority at which decisions to commence enforcement action against the parent(s) of a British citizen child may vary according to the type of case, but in all such cases the decision to remove the parent(s) is taken at ministerial level.

Secure Remands (Juveniles)

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how the Government intend to defray the costs of local authorities accommodating juveniles subject to court ordered secure remands.

Mr. Howard: It is intended that the Home Office will pay fees to local authorities in accordance with a tariff which will be established in consultation with interested parties, including the local authority associations. My Department will initiate discussions about the basis of the tariff in due course.

Police Funding Formula

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the police funding formula for South Yorkshire; and what assessment he has made of its effect.

Mr. Maclean: Under the Government's proposals announced on 1 December, £146.22 million will be available to the South Yorkshire police in 1995–96.

The new police funding formula has bee constructed by considering the determinants of the need for policing. The approach is similar—but more developed—to that of the formula which has been used since 1990 to distribute additional manpower to forces. Police needs are identified as falling into six main areas—maintaining a stable presence in the community, responding to calls for assistance, dealing with crimes, traffic management, maintaining public order, and community relations. Police pensions are also taken into account.

The new analyses were considered in the context of factors that have previously been used to assess expenditure needs. We concluded that, for 1995–96, the size of approved police establishments should be included in the formula. As a result, the extent of change next year will be limited.

Immigration Rules

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will investigate whether Bulgarian replacement crews due to arrive in Glasgow on 8 December are adhering to all immigration rules in respect of the Bulgarian fishing vessels Afala, Aktinia, Kaprela, Ofelia and Rotalia in United Kingdom waters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Under the immigration rules people seeking entry to join a vessel as members of its crew are eligible for admission if they are under contract to join a ship due to leave British waters. If the immigration officer is so satisfied he will grant leave to enter.

Merseyside Police

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what financial support (a) he provided to Merseyside police in 1993–94 and (b) is proposed for 1994–95; and if he will make a statement.

Mr Maclean: Details of Home Office grant payments to Merseyside police in respect of current and capital expenditure are as follows:

£ million

	Current expenditure	Capital expenditure
1993–94 (actual)	103.267	3.044
1994–95 (estimated)	109.622	3.708

Police Authorities, Wales

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was (a) the cash increase and (b) the percentage increase in grants and moneys to each of the police authorities in Wales in the most recent year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: There are no separate standard spending assessments—SSAs—for police authorities in Wales for this or previous years, on which to base year-on-year comparisons. County council SSAs include provision for police services. Expenditure on policing is determined by county councils in the light of their statutory responsibilities, local needs and available resources. Fifty-one per cent. of actual net police expenditure—both capital and current—is met by Home Office grant. The increase in police grant payable to each Welsh police authority between 1992-93 and 1993–94, in cash and percentage terms, is as follows:

Authority	1992–93 £ million	1993–94 £ million	Cash difference £ million	Percentage difference
Dyfed Powys	20.848	22.827	+1.979	+9.5
Gwent	21.852	21.770	–0.082	–0.4
North Wales	29.332	31.105	+1.773	+6.0
South Wales	67.177	69.310	+2.133	+3.2

From 1 April 1995 police authorities will become freestanding authorities with their own cash-limited police grant and SSA allocations, the proposals for which were announced on 1 December.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make available more grants to the North Wales police authority in order to facilitate the provisions of more police officers and special constables on the beat on housing estates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Proposed allocations of grant to police forces were announced by my right hon. and learned Friend in reply to a question from the hon. Member for Uxbridge (Mr. Shersby) on 1 December at columns 844-45. It is for the chief constable in consultation with his police authority to decide how the available resources should be deployed in the force area.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to meet the police authority in North Wales to discuss its budget provisions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans at present to meet the North Wales police authority. The setting of the force budget is a matter for the police authority.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers are currently held in HMP Winchester; and how long these individuals have been held under Immigration Act powers.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: As at 8 December 1994, a total of five people who had sought asylum were detained at HM prison Winchester. All these cases have spent between two to six months in detention at HM prison Winchester.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 23 November, Official Report, columns 159–61, how long each of the detainees referred to in table C had been in police cells.

Mr. Nicholas Baker [holding answer 12 December 1994]: Figures for the length of detention of those detained in police cells on 18 November 1994 are not available retrospectively and details relating to those currently detained could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the number of applications for asylum (a) made at ports and (b) made in the country in each month in 1993;

(2) what was the number of applications for asylum (a) made at ports and (b) made in the country in each month in 1994.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The information requested is given in the table.

War Crimes Act 1991

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which audit body is responsible for value for money spent on investigations under the War Crimes Act 1991; what the budget is for these investigations; and what spending is already committed.

Mr. Maclean: The Metropolitan police war crimes unit is responsible for investigations carried out under the War Crimes Act 1991 in England and Wales. The unit's expenditure is subject to audit by the Metropolitan police service internal audit branch and the National Audit Office.

Provision for police specific grant included £500,000 to support the Metropolitan police in their war crimes investigations in 1994–95. After precept, this amount generated a sum of £962,000. A total of £589,850 had already been spent by 31 October 1994 and the remaining is committed expenditure.

Entry Visas

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the present waiting time for interview for entry visas for the United Kingdom at British high commission offices in Pakistan, Sri Lanka and India for (a) husbands, (b) wives and (d) fiancés and fiancées.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Information on waiting times to first interview for applicants in the settlement queues in Pakistan and India is published in table 2.5 of the Home Office Statistical Bulletin issue 25/94 "Control of Immigration: Statistics UK First and Second Quarters 1994" published on 20 October 1994, a copy of which is in the Library. Information on Sri Lanka is not collected centrally.

Energy Expenditure

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total expenditure on energy for offices and buildings by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The Home Office leases one property used, for security reasons, as the London residence of the Home Secretary of the day. The total expenditure on energy—gas and electricity—at the property in each of the last three financial years was:

1992–93: £1,628
1993–94: £4,699

Disclosure of Evidence

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to his answer of 2 December, Official Report, column 915, when he expects to complete his consideration on the disclosure of evidence; and what plans he has for announcing the outcome.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: We are making arrangements to give effect to the judgment of the Divisional court in ex parte Hickey and others, which concerned the procedure by which decisions are taken in cases where it is represented to us that a miscarriage of justice has occurred. Separately, the case of Mr. Malone, one of the applicants to the Divisional court, was referred to the Court of Appeal on 8 December.

DEFENCE

Drug Testing

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to introduce random compulsory drug testing in the armed forces.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to introduce random compulsory drug testing in the armed services.

Mr. Soames: The House will be aware that we have for some time been working on plans to introduce random compulsory drug tests in the armed forces.

The Government attach very high priority to tackling the problem of drug misuse. This is reflected in the proposals set out in the recent Green Paper "Tackling Drugs Together". In the spirit of the Green Paper, a number of measures are already taken in the armed forces to educate recruits and service personnel about the dangers of drugs, and the unlawful possession or supply of a controlled substance is contrary to service as well as civilian law.

Following detailed studies, a broad policy framework was agreed last year for the introduction of a compulsory drug testing regime in each of the three services, should that be judged necessary. I can now announce that, following an anonymous trial of testing procedures in the Army, we have decided as a further deterrent to introduce compulsory drug testing in the Army.

With immediate effect, Army personnel may be required to provide urine specimens for testing at any time and with no prior warning. Personnel who are tested positive or who refuse to provide a specimen will in the case of officers be required to resign and soldiers will normally be discharged. Lance corporals and below may in certain circumstances be given a second chance and allowed to remain in the Army for counselling.

The Royal Navy is initiating compulsory drug testing trials, which will allow decisions to be taken as to whether there is a need to introduce a drug testing regime. The Royal Air Force does not need to introduce compulsory drug testing for the moment, but it is keeping its policy under review. In the meantime the RN and RAF will continue to apply other measures to deter drugs misuse.

Quangos

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many quangos his Department was responsible for (a) in 1979 and (b) in the latest year for which a number is available;

(2) if he will list (a) those quangos his Department has abolished since 1979 and (b) those quangos established since 1977.

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Scarborough (Mr. Skyes) on 25 November 1994, Official Report, column 458. No records are available prior to 1979.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of quangos to which he is responsible for appointing members are employed by companies which supply his Department.

Mr. Soames: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many members of quangos to which he is responsible for appointing members have previously served as councillors representing (a) the Conservative party, (b) the Labour party and (c) the Liberal Democrat party;

(2) how many members of quangos to which he is responsible for appointing members have stood as candidates for boroughs, city, district or county councils for (a) the Conservative party, (b) the Labour party and (c) the Liberal Democrat party;

(3) how many members of quangos to which he is responsible for appointing members have stood as parliamentary candidates for (a) the Conservative party; (b) the Labour party and (c) the Liberal Democrat party;

(4) how many known members of (a) the Conservative party, (b) the Labour party and (c) the Liberal Democrat party currently serve on quangos to which he is responsible for appointing members;

(5) how many members of quangos to which he is responsible for appointing members currently serve as councillors representing (a) the Conservative party, (b) the Labour party and (c) the Liberal Democrat party.

Mr. Soames: Members of Ministry of Defence non-departmental public bodies are appointed on the basis of suitability and merit. Information on members' political allegiance and record is neither sought nor held and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

United Nations Peacekeeping

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations he has had with the Foreign Secretary in drawing up clear operational guidelines for future United Nations peacekeeping.

Mr. Soames: The United Kingdom has played an active part in discussions aimed at enhancing the capacity of the United Nations to mount peacekeeping operations. In addition, the British Army is developing a manual on peacekeeping on which there has been consultation with the United Nations. My Department is in regular contact with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on these matters.

Consultants

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will (a) list those consultancy contracts awarded by his Department in 1989, 1990, 1991, 1992 and 1993 and (b) the purpose of each individual contract.

Mr. Freeman: The Department's central contracts branch has placed in excess of 500 contracts with consultants in each of the last few years. In addition to this figure, consultancy contracts are placed as part of specific projects and as low value orders of under £10,000. Under the Department's arrangements for the delegation of contractual authority, such contracts are placed without reference to the central contracts branch and so cannot be identified separately.

In view of this and the large number of centrally placed contracts involved over the last 15 years, an answer to this question could be provided only at disproportionate cost and effort.

Animal Testing

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 2 December, Official Report, column 898, if he will list (a) the type of animals used for experiments and (b) the nature of the experiments for 1989, 1990, 1991, 1992 and 1993.

Mr. Soames: The species of animals used by the Department for experiments were rats, mice, guinea pigs, rabbits, sheep, goats, pigs, miniature pigs, marmosets and rhesus monkeys.

These experiments were designed to:

Investigate gravitational effects;

demonstrate the results of exposure to different pressures of air or oxygen;

assess the potential harm of chemical or biological agents;

devise medical countermeasures;

demonstrate the efficacy of and safety of medical counter-measures;

All the experiments involving the use of animals fully meet the spirit and letter of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986.

Exercise Iron Tempest

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many close air support missions with cannon were flown by Jaguar aircraft over Salisbury plain training area during Exercise Iron Tempest.

Mr. Soames: The planned close air support mission by two Jaguar aircraft on 10 December was cancelled due to poor weather, and no such missions were therefore flown.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to keep the United Kingdom's nuclear deterrence under constant review.

Mr. Soames: We continue to keep our defence policy as a whole under review. We believe, however, that our nuclear forces continue to provide the ultimate guarantee of this country's security and remain an important element of NATO's strategy of war prevention.

Official Service Residences

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what savings he plans to make from the official service residences.

Mr. Soames: The review by Sir Peter Cazalet of representational entertainment in the armed forces, which is examining the requirement for senior officers to entertain and the means by which the entertainment should be carried out, will in particular consider whether there are alternative and more cost-effective means than the use of official service residences and other service married quarters, and, in the light of that, whether any properties can be disposed of. I shall report to the House in due course on the outcome of this work.

Redundancies

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations he has had with the Secretary of State for Employment in formulating a policy for the provision of high-grade training for service personnel made redundant.

Mr. Soames: The successful improvements introduced into the services resettlement programme, following "Options for Change", were developed with the full co-operation and assistance of the Department of Employment. In addition to participating in the strategic planning of the programme, Department of Employment staff work closely with my Department to provide a range of services which ensure that those leaving the armed forces have available the advice, training and job search opportunities to help best exploit their service skills in moving to a second career.

Research

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what sum was spent by his Department on research in each of the last 10 years; what percentage this was of the total annual budget; what is the research budget for the forthcoming year; what percentage this is of his total budget; and what additional new research is to be undertaken.

Mr. Freeman: The sums spent on research and development by the Department for the last 10 years were reported in the statistical supplement to the 1994 "Forward Look of Government-funded Science, Engineering and Technology." The expenditure on research and development and the percentage that this expenditure was of total departmental expenditure are as follows:

1985–86	2,018.2	11.1
1986–87	1,941.5	10.5
1987–88	1,910.7	10.1
1988–89	1,879.8	9.8
1989-90	2,028.6	9.8
1990–91	2,062.9	9.5
1991–92	2,267.0	9.8
1992–93	2,220.9	9.4
1993–94	2,461.1	10.5
1994–95	2,314.6	9.9

The expenditure on research and development in the coming year has still to be determined, and will be reported in the statistical supplement to the 1995 "Forward Look".

Information on new research areas is given in paragraph 437 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1994"—Cm 2550.

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which of the special advisers serving in his Department during the last five years were subject to positive security vetting.

Mr. Soames: All special advisers are currently required to have a security clearance which will depend on the level of access they require to carry out their duties.

Military Equipment

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the share by value, and the total value in current and standard prices, of British production of (a) warships, (b) aircraft for military purposes, including the training of pilots, and (c) tanks and other armoured vehicles which was for (i) domestic and (ii) export purposes in each year since 1984.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I have been asked to reply.

The information is given in the following tables.

Notes:

These figures for exports of identified defence equipment are understated because of dual-use products, for example Land Rovers.

The estimates of additional military exports are based on figures from the Society of British Aerospace Companies. They relate only to those items where the official commodity classifications do not distinguish between military and civil aerospace equipment.

These are liable to alter from year to year in line with changes to the classifications.

Exports for collaborative projects are excluded.

Departmental Telephone Bills

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were his Department's telephone bills in each of the last five years.

Mr. Freeman: The Department's direct telephone running costs for the year's 1991–92, 1992–93 and 1993–94 were £67.1 million, £64.9 million and £61.4 million respectively. Figures prior to these dates are not available.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Attorney-General which of the special advisers serving in his Departments during the last five years were subject to positive security vetting.

The Attorney-General: There have been no special advisers in the Departments for which I am responsible during the last five years.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which of the special advisers serving in his Department during the last five years were subject to positive security vetting.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: All special advisers are currently required to have positive vetting.

Consultants

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his Department's policy regarding the use of executive search consultants in making appointments to public bodies; and if he will list (a) the appointments where such consultants have been used and (b) the cost in each case in the period April 1992 to December 1993.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: It is the policy of my Department to follow the guidance provided in the "Guide on Public Appointments Procedures" which advises that the use of executive search consultants is one option which may be appropriate for certain full and some part-time posts.

Executive search consultants were used for the appointments of the Director General of the Research Councils and chief executives of the Engineering and Physical Sciences Research Council, Natural Environment Research Council and the Particle Physics and Astronomy Research Council. The total cost was £78,960 including VAT. This fee was negotiated to cover all four appointments and it is not possible to disaggregate the figure.

Research Council

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what decisions were taken on the fourth framework programme at the Research Council on 1 December.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: The Council reached agreement on the remaining aspects of the fourth framework programme. This will enable the Commission to issue calls for proposals on most, if not all, of the outstanding specific programmes in December. We believe that the framework programme presents United Kingdom researchers with a worthwhile challenge to which they will be able to respond fully, as they have done in the past.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Casual Staff

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of the costs of recruiting, appointing and training casual staff appointed to replace casual staff whose period of placement has expired.

Mr. Ian Taylor: Casual staff are recruited where the requirement for staff is likely to be for less than 12 months. Exceptionally, their appointment can be extended. The need to replace casual staff with other casual staff does not therefore usually arise. Recruitment costs of casual staff are minimal.

Manufacturing Output

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his oral answer of 23 November, Official Report, column 583, what has been the change in manufacturing output since (a) 1973 and (b) 1979 together with the change in imports of manufactures.

Mr. Needham: The information is available from the Central Statistical Office's central shared database which can be accessed in the Library of the House.

Companies House

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he intends to publish the reports of consultants SRU Ltd. into (a) the privatisation of Companies House, (b) the concept of competing company registrars, and (c) the contracting out of Companies House; and what view was expressed by SRU Ltd. on whether its report into the contracting out of Companies House should be published.

Mr. Heseltine: I expect to publish SRU's report on the possibility of contracting out Companies House services when I announce a decision on the future of Companies House.

Tile Manufacturing

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 30 November, Official Report, column 705, what criteria he has established to assess the likely impact on the United Kingdom tile and sanitary ware industry of investment projects; and if he will publish details of the assessment he has made of the likely impact of the investment project in Merseyside on existing United Kingdom tile manufacturing.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No specific criteria have been established for the tile and sanitaryware industry. All applications are appraised against published criteria. This includes not only the likely impact that an investment might have on United Kingdom industry but also the extent to which the national and regional economy would benefit from any offer of assistance. This information is commercially confidential and is not available for publication.

Insolvency Service

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what advice he has received on the effect contracting out of the Insolvency Service might have on the future disqualification and prosecution of bankrupts.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Stoy Hayward reported that the contracting out of the Official Receiver's case administration functions upon the making of the insolvency order would enable him to concentrate more on his investigatory role.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what advice he has received on the effects of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 on the contracting out of the Insolvency Service.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: No decision to contract out has been taken; it is, therefore, too early to consider the issue of Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations, the implications of which may not become clear until the nature of proposals in any bidding process could be assessed.

Fire Safety

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list all the organisations and individuals who submitted written responses to the proposals of the interdepartmental fire safety scrutiny team contained in the report "Fire Safety Legislation and Enforcement".

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To date, some 460 organisations and individuals have provided written comments on the report of the interdepartmental scrutiny of fire safety legislation and enforcement.

I have placed a copy of the list in the Library of the House.

British Coal Enterprise

Mr. Hardy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the contribution by British Coal Enterprise to the welfare and economy of coalfield areas; and if he will make a statement on its future.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The job creation and economic regeneration efforts of British Coal Enterprise in areas affected by colliery closures are well known and recognised.

The Government and British Coal are currently exploring options for the services provided by British Coal Enterprise. No final decisions have been taken about its future.

EC Legislation

Mr. Steen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what liaison arrangements exist between his Department and overseas posts in order to provide him with information about the implementation in other member states of European Community legislation.

Mr. Ian Taylor: Overseas posts are under standing instructions to report on the general position on implementation of single market legislation in other member states; and on implementation of specific measures when requested.

Pearl Assurance Ltd

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many complaints have been received about Pearl Assurance Ltd. within the past year.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: It is not this Department's policy to disclose publicly information relating to individual companies.

Post Office

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the automation of Post Office business.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 5 December 1994]: The project to automate the payment of benefit at post offices has two main aims: to provide the post office network with a streamlined and modern business infrastructure; and to help the Benefits Agency ensure that losses through payment fraud are minimised. It will put new electronic terminals in 20,000 post offices and will play a key part in supporting an expanded range of products and services for the 28 million people who visit them each week. When complete it will put post offices at the leading edge of using technology to improve services to customers.

Following rigorous evaluation of formal bids from potential suppliers, five have been asked to develop their ideas further. Detailed proposals will be considered and tested over coming months, with a final decision on the choice of system and supplier being made next winter. We expect to see the first offices automated in the spring of 1996.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Energy Expenditure

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total expenditure on energy for offices and buildings by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Ancram: The total expenditure by Northern Ireland Departments and agencies in each of the three years is given in the table:

Departments	19.50	19.09	19.11
Agencies	0.49	0.59	1.17

Labour Statistics

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the latest figures for the number of employees in the (a) catering, (b) clothing manufacture, (c) linen and (d) road haulage industries.

Mr. Ancram: The latest available figures from the quarterly employment survey show that at June 1994 there were an estimated 22,990 persons employed in hotels and catering and 14,800 employed in the manufacture of footwear and clothing. More detailed figures on industrial activities such as linen and road haulage are available only from the census of employment. Results from the September 1991 census show that there were 1,866 persons employed in the linen industry and 4,243 in road haulage.

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people have been unemployed for more than (a) six months and (b) 12 months.

Mr. Ancram: The latest available figures, for October 1994, show that in Northern Ireland 65,326 people have been unemployed for more than six months and 53,049 have been unemployed for more than 12 months.

Ophthalmology Out-patient Clinics

Rev. Martin Symth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many referrals from general practitioners to ophthalmology out-patients clinics were made in 1990–91 and 1991–92.

Mr. Moss: The information details the number of general practitioner written referral requests to opthalmology out-patient clinics in Northern Ireland:

Year	Number of referrals
1990–91	10,452
1991–92	13,050

Hill Farming

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what acreage has been put into regeneration of the natural habitat in hill farming.

Mr. Ancram: By June 1994 about 220,000 hectares of hill land had been designated under the environmentally sensitive areas scheme. To date, 30,000 hectares of this area have been entered into agreements under which farmers agree to pursue farming practices which aim to protect and enhance the natural environment of their farms.

Pigs

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what grant aid is available to pig producers in Northern Ireland to convert sow tether and stall accommodation.

Mr. Ancram [holding reply 12 December 1944]: Grant assistance is available to pig producers in Northern Ireland under the sub-programme for agriculture and rural development for the conversion or replacement of existing dry sow accommodation at a grant rate of 30 per cent. of expenditure of up to £25,000.

Health Authority Finance

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what (a) surpluses and (b) deficits were recorded by each health authority in each of the last three years.

Mr. Moss [holding reply 12 December 1994]: As cash-limited organisations, health and social services boards are not permitted to overspend, that is, to make cash deficits. However, goods and services, for example equipment, building works etcetera, ordered in one financial year are frequently not received until the next. This can lead to "surpluses" in one year, when the allocation has been underspent, and "deficits" in the following year, when that year's allocation is overspent.

The "surpluses" and "deficits" for Northern Ireland's four health and social services boards for the periods 1991–92 to 1993—94 are as follows:

	Northern £	Southern £	Eastern £	Western £
1991–92	5,577,831	4,502,548	7,710,908	3,227,379
1992–93	1,012,744	(2,276,927)	9,394,771	2,346,866
1993–94	1,543,080	931,037	(1,755,150)	2,233,802

Notes:

Figures in brackets indicate "deficits". Figures quoted for 1993–94 exclude surpluses made by general practitioner fundholders.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Colombia

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what aid was provided to Colombia in 1990, 1991, 1992 and 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Aid provided to Colombia in financial years 1990–91, 1991–92, and 1992–93 was £3.66 million, £3.789 million and £2.433 million respectively. The provisional figure for 1993–94 is £2.454 million. Assistance included technical co-operation, emergency aid support, aid and trade provision activity, and anti-drugs technical assistance.

Colombia no longer qualifies for aid and trade provision support, but other programmes continue. Priorities agreed with the Government of Colombia for the technical co-operation programme include the modernisation of public sector administration and the sustainable management of renewable natural resources. Assistance in the latter sector has concentrated on coffee pest and disease control, and the post-harvest processing of fruit and vegetables.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what evaluation of the standards of human rights in Colombia his Department has undertaken during the last five years; what were the findings; how they affected the evaluation of aid to the Colombian regime; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Our ambassador in Bogota reports regularly on human rights in Colombia. Our embassy is in frequent touch with a wide range of governmental and non-governmental organisations in Colombia, as well as with our European Union partners on human rights issues.

Human rights violations in Colombia have complex causes. Illegal drugs production and trafficking, the activities of guerrilla organisations and military and para-military forces, failure to bring successful prosecutions, as well as conditions of poverty and social inequality all contribute to the high level of abuses there. The administration of President Samper is addressing these issues frankly and openly. The priority which the Government of Colombia attach to these issues is welcome. We wish them success in their attempt to improve human rights observance.

Human rights considerations have not significantly affected decisions on the nature of our modest bilateral aid programme with Colombia. The programme is entirely technical co-operation, operating mainly through non-governmental organisations and autonomous institutions.

Rwanda

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response he has made to the UN Secretary-General's Rwanda emergency normalisation plan.

Mr. Baldry: Britain has provided bilateral assistance for priority health care, refugee repatriation, infrastructure repair and help to Rwanda Government ministries. The European Union's new programme of rehabilitation assistance, worth approximately £52 million, will include help for Kigali airport, road repair, health and education. The United Kingdom share of this programme is about £9 million.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which countries have responded to the Rwanda trust fund: how much they have contributed; and what is the proposed United Kingdom contribution.

Mr. Baldry: We understand that to date the Dutch have contributed $5 million to the UN trust fund for Rwanda. We will consider whether to make a contribution as part of our preparations for the United Nations development programme round table on Rwanda in January 1995.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contribution is made by Her Majesty's Government to the training of civilian police in Rwanda.

Mr. Baldry: We have not been asked to help bilaterally in training civil police and have no plans to do so given the very different Rwandan and British policing systems.

European Aid

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures he has taken to ensure that the United Kingdom will be able to honour its share of the commitment made at the Edinburgh summit to increase European aid by 60 per cent. by the end of the decade.

Mr. Baldry: British contributions to both the European development fund and the EC aid budget are charged to the United Kingdom aid programme. The levels agreed for the aid programme in this year's public expenditure survey, for the years 1995–96 to 1997–98, include provision in each year for these costs. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary would expect to put forward proposals for later years, in future public expenditure surveys, on the same basis.

Aid Provision

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to what extent the human rights record of a country is a criterion for the provision of aid; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Aid allocation decisions take account of a range of criteria. These include human rights as part of good government. Other criteria include poverty and commitment to appropriate development policies.

Trade Unions

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of know-how fund money has been allocated by country to the Trades Union Congress or to trade unions to support the development of democratic trades unionism in the countries covered by the know-how fund for the years (a) 1991–92, (b) 1992–93 and (c) 1993–94.

Mr. Baldry: The know-how fund has allocated some £200,000 to trades union-related assistance in the region since 1991. Further funds have been allocated, and new projects are being planned.

The breakdown by country, expressed as a percentage of the total country programmes, is as follows:

Country	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94
Bulgaria	2.49	0.09	0.00
Czechoslovakia	0.11	0.53	0.00
Czech Republic	0.00	0.00	0.13
Hungary	0.02	0.00	0.00
Poland	0.27	0.99	0.00
Romania	0.58	0.00	0.45
Russia	0.00	<0.01	<0.01

Energy Efficiency Projects

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 22 November, Official Report, column 70, about energy efficiency projects, if he will list the members of the British Soviet business consortium awarded the energy efficiency training project for Russia in 1992–93.

Mr. Baldry: The Members of the British Soviet business consortium awarded the energy efficiency training project for Russia in 1992–93 were British Gas, British Coal, Scottish Power, NIFES, WS Atkins, Linden Consulting Partnership, BICC-Andover Controls, GEC-Satchwell Controls, Freeman Group, Babcock, Phoenix Burners-Nor Ray Vac, Lighting Enterprises Consultancy and March Consulting Group.

Eritrea

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what Overseas Development Administration assistance currently goes to Eritrea.

Mr. Baldry: In 1993–94 Eritrea received £5.8 million in bilateral assistance, including emergency aid. Eritrea is also a recipient of multilateral assistance to which Britain makes a significant contribution. Our share of the European Union's rehabilitation and development assistance since 1993 is £7 million. Eritrea also receives emergency aid from the European Union.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Royal Palaces

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage which (a) occupied and (b) unoccupied royal palaces have fire certificates.

Mr. Sproat: Under the terms of the Fire Precautions Act 1971, fire certificates are required only for premises employing more than 20 persons or more than 10 persons above the ground floor. Therefore, only specific areas of royal palaces require fire certificates.

(a) occupied royal palaces: At Windsor castle, certificates have been issued for the Round tower and the Saxon tower. Applications are being processed for two other areas.

Applications are being processed for eight areas in other places.

(b) unoccupied royal palaces: At the Tower of London a certificate has been issued for the new armouries. Applications are being processed for one other area at the tower and two areas at Hampton Court palace.

Millennium Fund

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to use the millennium fund to build a permanent museum or monument dedicated to those who suffered and died during the period of African enslavement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: It will be for the millennium commissioners to determine the purposes to which they apply their share of the national lottery proceeds in response to the applications they receive. Copies of the Millennium Commission's detailed guidance on how to make applications for lottery funds, along with those produced by the other distributing bodies, have been placed in the Library of the House.

Export of Works of Art Review

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when the report of the Reviewing Committee on the Export of Works of Art, 1993–94, will be published.

Mr. Dorrell: The reviewing committee's annual report, 1993–94, has been published today, and copies have been laid before Parliament.

Television Licence Fee

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what would be the cost of a 25 per cent. reduction in television licence fees paid by single pensioner households; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 12 December 1994]: The current cost of providing a 25 per cent. reduction in television licence fees for all single pensioner households would be about £60 million per annum.

National Lottery

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what steps he is taking to monitor the weekly expenditure of households in the United Kingdom on national lottery tickets.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 12 December 1994]: I understand that the family expenditure survey includes an explicit code to capture expenditure on the national lottery.

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage which of the special advisers serving in his Department since its establishment were subject to positive security vetting.

Mr. Dorrell: I do not currently have any special advisers, but all special advisers were required to have positive vetting.

Energy Expenditure

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what was the total expenditure on energy for offices and buildings by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Dorrell: My Department was established in April 1992 but did not occupy its own premises until May 1993. In the year 1993–94 we spent £72,089 on energy for offices and buildings. In the current year to date we have spent £39,902.

My agencies the Royal Parks agency and the Historic Royal Palaces agency are unable to identify the energy costs for offices and buildings as much of their energy expenditure is in respect of lighting and maintaining parks, gardens and grounds.

TREASURY

Smuggling

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make an assessment of the effect of the enforced retirement of substantial numbers of Customs and Excise officers on the continuing problem of beer and Scotch whisky smuggling.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The fundamental expenditure review—FER—carried out by Customs and Excise will mean that the Department reduces in size by about 4,000 over five years. All possible steps will be taken to avoid redundancy and it is envisaged that the reductions will be achieved through natural wastage and voluntary severance schemes.

The amount or resources devoted to detecting the smuggling of alcoholic drinks and tobacco products will not be affected by the FER. Indeed, there will soon be a modest increase in the number of excise verification officers deployed by the Department.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many Customs and Excise officers are involved in reducing drug smuggling and the unauthorised importation of alcoholic drinks in the financial year 1994–95; and how many officers will be involved in each of the next three years.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: In 1994–95 Customs expects to have deployed about 5,100 staff years on drugs control work. As well as including staff years from the customs function, this figure includes elements on investigation, intelligence, legal support, training and information systems.

Enforcement techniques established in Customs over recent years have increased the use of better targeted, intelligence-led interceptions in place of static routine checks. This has enabled a more effective enforcement effort while allowing freer movement of legitimate traffic. The customs fundamental expenditure review shows that further moves in this direction can be made.

To combat smuggling of excise goods from other EU member states, Customs has allocated some 240 staff to single market excise work, most of whom are specially trained excise verification officers. The EVO effort is intelligence directed, and is supported by specialist investigation staff and the control measures taken by Excise and VAT visiting officers.

The resource will not be affected by the fundamental expenditure review. Indeed, there will be a modest increase in the number of EVOs deployed by the Department. However staff numbers for the next three financial years have not yet been finally determined.

Beer

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from other countries of the European Union about the movement towards parity of duty on beer.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No representations have been received from other countries of the European union about the movement towards parity of duty on beer.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the volume of beer purchased at French ports by customers on day visits from the United Kingdom; and what is his estimate of the effect of such sales on the domestic beer industry.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Customs estimates that before allowing for additional consumption, the total value of personal beer imports from the EU by legitimate cross-border shoppers is equivalent to less than 1 per cent. of the United Kingdom market.

Manufactures

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the net rate of return on exports of manufactures, as defined in the Central Statistical Office "First Release" (94) 205, for each quarter from 1975.

Mr. Nelson: Estimates for net rate of return on exports of manufactures are unavailable. The net rate of return for manufacturing companies defined in the CSO "First Release" is derived from the gross operating surplus and net capital stock employed by such companies. The CSO does not collect information on whether the operating surplus and capital stock employed relate to manufacturing for domestic markets or for export. Many businesses would be unable to provide a meaningful split, particularly of capital stock employed.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what grounds he is forecasting a continuing decline in the United Kingdom share of world trade in manufactures in his "Financial Statement and Budget Report".

Mr. Nelson: The United Kingdom is forecast to increase its share of export markets in 1994 and 1995. However, United Kingdom export markets are forecast to grow a little slower than world trade because trade in Europe—our main export market—is projected to rise more slowly than trade between Asian economies.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how the Treasury calculates the profitability of exports of (a) manufactures and (b) services; and how these calculations compare with the estimate of profitability of domestic manufacturers.

Mr. Nelson: Export profit margins for manufactures are calculated from the ratio of manufacturing export prices to estimated manufacturing costs. Estimates of export profit margins for services are not available. It is estimated that manufacturers' export profit margins have risen faster recently than their margins on production for the domestic market.

Imports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what evidence he has to show that the increase in non-oil imports in 1994 compared to 1993 mentioned in paragraph 3.5 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report", is due to import substitution rather than a falling off in United Kingdom demand for goods of the same description; and if he will publish the forecast change in import penetration in each of the principle import-competing and export industries in 1994 compared with 1993 and 1992.

Mr. Nelson: Import price competitiveness for manufactured goods, which accounts for around 80 per cent. of trade in non-oil goods, is estimated to be more than 6.5 per cent. better than in the first three quarters of 1992. Historical experience suggests that improvements in price competitiveness lead, over a period of time, to lower import penetration than would otherwise have occurred. The Treasury does not publish forecasts of import penetration for individual industries.

Exchange Rate

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the economic conditions which in the Government's assessment has to be fulfilled before a rate of exchange can be described as competitive.

Mr. Nelson: A nation's competitiveness depends on much more than its exchange rate. Our ability to sell goods and services into world markets and achieve a sustained rise in living standards depend fundamentally on improving productivity and controlling costs. Policies directed at permanently low inflation and competitive markets provide the best environment in which to achieve this.

Inflation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if it is the policy of Her Majesty's Government to shadow the deutschmark to bring down the rate of inflation.

Mr. Nelson: The Government's monetary policy is clearly set out at paragraph's 2.03 to 2.08 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1995–96". Minutes of the discussion at the Chancellor's monthly monetary meetings with the Governor of the Bank of England are also published. Movements in the exchange rate are considered as part of general assessments of monetary conditions in setting monetary policy. The Government recognise the value of a stable exchange rate but do not set target rates.

Inheritance Tax Exemptions

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 30 November, Official Report, column 760, what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the publicity to make the public aware of access arrangements.

Sir George Young: The level of publicity to be given to the agreed public access arrangements required in return for conditional exemption is negotiated on a case-by-case basis by the heritage advisory agencies which have the appropriate experience and expertise. Owners of conditionally exempt land are required to submit annual reports to the responsible heritage body covering the undertakings they have given, including the publicity given to the public access arrangements. In addition, the heritage advisory agencies make on-site visits to conditionally exempt land. The Inland Revenue also separately reviews all such cases at five-yearly intervals. There is no evidence that publicity given to public access arrangements is deficient.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the number of countryside sites where public access has been granted by the landowner in return for exemption from inheritance tax in (a) 1992–93, (b) 1993–94 and (c) 1994–95 to date.

Sir George Young: I refer to the answer I gave the hon. Member on 30 November, Official Report, column 760. As I explained, figures for designations of land alone on a year-by-year basis are not available at acceptable cost.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 30 November, Official Report, column 760, if he will list the counties where public access has been granted by landowners in return for exemption from inheritance tax.

Sir George Young: A list for conditionally exempt land alone is not available at acceptable cost. The counties in England where public access has been granted by owners of land and buildings in return for conditional exception from inheritance tax or capital transfer tax are as follows:

Berkshire
Buckinghamshire
Cheshire
Cornwall
Cumbria
Derbyshire
Devon
Dorset
Essex
Gloucestershire
Hampshire
Herefordshire and Worcestershire
Hertfordshire
Humberside
Isle of Wight
Kent
Lancashire
Leicestershire
Lincolnshire
Merseyside
Norfolk
Northamptonshire
Northumberland
North Yorkshire
Nottinghamshire
Oxfordshire
Shropshire
Somerset
Staffordshire
Suffolk
Surrey
Sussex
Warwickshire
West Yorkshire

Overseas Debt

Miss Lestor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how much debt owed by developing countries has been cancelled by the Paris Club since the introduction of the Trinidad terms in 1990;

(2) how much debt owed by severely indebted low-income countries has been cancelled by the Paris Club since the introduction of the Trinidad terms in 1990.

Mr. Nelson: The following figures are World bank estimates of debt forgiveness since 1990 by the Paris Club, in net present value terms:

		US$ billion
(a)	All Developing Countries	2.2
(b)	Severely Indebted Low Income Countries SILICs (as of end 1993)	1.7

Tax Relief

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in what circumstances tax relief is available for expenditure in connection with public duties of the taxpayer or of his or her spouse; what limit applies to the amount; and for which individuals exceptional arrangements are made.

Sir George Young: There are various tax deductions and reliefs available to individuals in connection with public duties, as for other employees and officeholders. More information is in the Inland Revenue "Guide to Benefits and Expenses"—booklet 480—copies of which are available in the House Library.

VAT (Public Transport)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the revenue likely to be generated by the imposition of VAT on non-essential public transport during the financial year beginning 1 April 1994.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: None. The changes come into effect from 1 April 1995.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if his proposals to extend value added tax on public transport apply to (a) boat trips on (i) inland waterways, (ii) estuaries and (iii) coastal waters, (b) private railways, (c) coach tours and (d) road trains.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 12 December 1994]: The proposed restrictions to the VAT zero-rating for public passenger transport will not affect boat trips—including the Isle of Wight ferry—which are currently zero-rated and which take place on the open sea, inland waterways or other waters to which the general public have access. Coach tours will also be unaffected. Similarly, the VAT position of the other examples cited in the question will remain unchanged except where they are covered by admission charges to places such as theme or safari parks or working museums. In these cases, where admission charges are apportioned at present, they will become wholly liable to VAT at the standard rate.

Steam Railways

Mr. Luff: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he intends to apply value added tax to fares on steam railways operated by railway preservation societies.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have no plans to disturb the current VAT zero-rating for public passenger transport, including steam railways, where the service is confined to that of public transport in its widely accepted sense. I can confirm that the proposed restrictions to the zero-rating under the VAT (Transport) Order 1994 will not normally affect steam railways, and therefore most operators will be able to continue to apply the zero rate. The exception is when payment for admission to places such as theme or safari parks or working museums includes a steam engine ride. In these cases, where admission charges are apportioned at present, they will become wholly liable to VAT at the standard rate.

Tax Yields

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the yield in 1992–93 and 1993–94 and the latest estimate of yield for 1994–95 from (a) petrol duty, (b) derv duty, (c) vehicle excise duty, (d) VAT on petrol and derv rate, (e) VAT on vehicle sales and (f) car tax.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The tax yield is as follows.

Figures in £ billions	Petrol duty	Derv duty	VED	[1]VAT on petrol and derv	[2]VAT on vehicle sales	Car tax
1992–93	8.2	3.0	3.3	1.6	2.9	0.6
1993–94	8.8	3.7	3.6	1.7	3.3	0.0

[2] Non-reclaimable VAT.

The total revenue in 1994–95 expected from all hydrocarbons including minor oils is £14.6 billion from VED £3.8 billion.

Interest Rates

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the level of real interest rates (a) on 7 December and (b) on 1 December in (i) August 1992 and (ii) 1978.

Mr. Nelson: Real interest rates can be calculated in several ways, using either short or longer-term nominal interest rates, and either past or expected future rates of inflation.

Data on interest rates and inflation are available in the CSO publications "Financial Statistics" table 7.10 and "Economic Trends" table 3.1. Data on expected future inflation rates are published in the Treasury's monthly review of independent forecasters, and the Bank of England's inflation report.

As at close 1 and 7 December 1994 three-month and 10-year nominal interest rates were:

	3 month	10 year
1 December	6.19	8.58
7 December	6.38	8.74

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the effect of the ½ per cent. increase in lending rates on the cost of the PSBR for the rest of the current financial year; and what is his estimate of the PSBR for the next financial year.

Mr. Nelson: The effect of the ½ per cent. increase in lending rates on the cost of financing the public sector borrowing requirement for the current financial year will depend upon the level and structure of interest rates, the rate of inflation and the type of debt issued.

My latest estimate of the PSBR for 1995–96 is £21.5 billion.

VAT (Fuel)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the cost in interest of substituting borrowing for the deficiency caused by not raising VAT on heating from 8 per cent. to 17½ per cent. for (a) the rest of the present year and (b) the whole of next year.

Mr. Nelson: The cost of servicing any particular amount of borrowing will depend upon the level and structure of interest rates, the rate of inflation and the type of debt issued. My right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor announced to the House on 8 December measures to ensure that not raising VAT on fuel and power to 17½ per cent. will have no significant impact on borrowing either this year or next year.

Imports and Exports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the amount by which imports and exports of manufactures were under or over-recorded in 1993 compared with the old system of recording in the case of trade with the EEC; and what is his estimate currently.

Mr. Nelson: Revised adjustments for under-recording of United Kingdom imports and exports to and from other European Union countries were given in the August 1994 edition of "Economic Trends", which announced the outcome of a review of the Intrastat system carried out by the Central Statistical Office and Her Majesty's Customs and Excise. The effect on the statistics for trade in manufacturers was as follows:

United Kingdom trade with other European Union countries
Manufacturers (SITC Rev. 3 section 5 to 8)
(1993, million on a balance of payments basis)

	United Kingdom imports	United Kingdom exports	Balance
Pre review	55,533	52,098	–3,435
Post review	55,748	51,878	–3,870
Revision	+215	–220	–435

The review also established that there were faults in the old system of recording which caused, for example, total imports from other European Union countries to be overstated by an estimated £2,175 million in 1992. Estimates of the effect of the changed recording system at the level of manufactured goods are not available.

Customs and Excise

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the planned reduction in the number of Her Majesty's Customs officers based at each of the Welsh ports and airports.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 8 December 1994]: The reduction in the number of Her Majesty's Customs officers based at each of the Welsh ports and airports has not yet been decided.

Changes at particular ports and airports will be determined by the head of the executive unit in Wales. Factors to be taken into account will be the assessment of risk in locations together with his ability to make maximum use of flexible anti-smuggling teams.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many litres of alcohol Customs and Excise officers have intercepted; and what value of drugs and alcohol have been seized by Customs and Excise officers in Devon and Cornwall in each of the last three years.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The following amounts have been seized by Customs and Excise officers in Devon and Cornwall over the last three years:

Year	Litres of alcohol	Value of drugs £	Value of alcohol £
1992	54	10,772,849	685
1993	16,658	14,487,868	24,855
1994 (up to 30 November)	7,059	28,199,289	17,836

Public Sector Borrowing Requirement

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out the assumptions he made as to the increase in gross domestic product when forecasting the PSBR for 1995–96, 1996–97 and 1997–98.

Mr. Aitken [holding answer 12 December 1994]: The assumptions for GDP growth which underlie the PSBR projections are set out in table 3A.1 of the 1995–96 "Financial Statement and Budget Report".

Market Testing

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those services that have been market-tested by his Department and won by the private sector, indicating the organisation that won the tender and its value.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 12 December 1994]: In Her Majesty's Treasury, no services have been awarded to a private sector supplier as a result of market testing which involved an in-house team. However, following a strategic decision to contract out most internal audit work, contracts were awarded, following competition, to Price Waterhouse and Touche Ross.

Consumer Spending and VAT

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were at 1993 prices (a) for 1978 and (b) for the last available year (i) total consumer spending, (ii) the value added tax take and (iii) column (ii) as a percentage of (i).

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 12 December 1994]: Estimates of consumers' expenditure and value added tax are not readily available at 1993 prices. Information at current prices is available as indicated below on the CSO database which may be accessed via the House of Commons Library.

Consumers' expenditure—series AIIK

Total value added tax—series GTAS

Thin Capitalisation

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if it is his policy that the thin capitalisation proposals issued by the Inland Revenue on Budget day are intended to apply to the voluntary sector; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young [holding answer 12 December 1994]: The thin capitalisation proposals were not intended to have an adverse effect on the voluntary sector. It is now apparent that, in some cases, they could do so. I therefore intend amending the provision at the Committee stage of the Finance Bill to exclude charities and their subsidiaries from its scope.

Occupation Pensions

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list each of the occupational pension schemes covered by Government guarantees and give details of the main elements of each scheme.

Mr. Aitken [holding answer 12 December 1994]: Occupational pension schemes covered by Government guarantees are:

The National Rivers Authority (Closed Fund);

British Coal (Closed) Schemes and;

The Pensioners Sections of the Railways Pension Scheme.

Details of the pension benefits are available from the schemes themselves.

SCOTLAND

Health Boards and Hospital Trusts (Property)

Mr. Galbriath: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many houses on their property were in private ownership for each health board and hospital trust.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave him on 1 December at column 835.

Scottish Heart Transplant Centre

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what was the number of operations predicted for the year 1994 in the initial proposal for the Scottish heart transplant centre;

(2) how many operations the Scottish heart transplant centre at Glasgow royal infirmary is contracted to do each year.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Greater Glasgow health board's bid in 1991 for the heart transplant service predicted an activity of 25 patients for year one, rising to 50 patients per annum in subsequent years.

The contracted activity level for heart transplants in 1994–95 has been set at 25 based on the actual activity over the last two years—23 operations in each year.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many parliamentary questions tabled in the last Session of Parliament were not answered on the grounds that the information sought was not held centrally by the Department.

Mr. Lang: There was a total of 4,101 written and 425 oral parliamentary questions tabled for my Department between 26 November 1993 and 11 November 1994. Of these, 91 were answered on the basis that the information was not held centrally.

Schools Finance

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total figure for the financial balances held by all (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information sought is not held centrally. Nor will such information be available generally until devolved school management—DSM—arrangements are fully in place. The target date for final implementation of the DSM arrangements in Scottish schools is April 1998.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will announce his plans for funding the costs of local government reorganisation in 1995–96.

Mr. Lang: Following consultation with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities, I have decided that, with one exception, all the provision for the costs of local government reorganisation which I expect will be incurred in 1995–96 should be allocated to the new shadow councils rather than to the existing authorities. I plan to allocate a total of £36 million to the shadow councils. This sum is entirely additional to the 1995–96 settlement for the existing local authorities which I announced on 29 November. In terms of section 25 of the Local Government etc. (Scotland) Act 1994, the shadow councils may be funded either by grant or by borrowing consent. I am still considering which of these funding methods to use and I shall announce my decision as soon as possible. COSLA is being consulted about the distribution of the £36 million among the shadow councils.

The one exception is provision of £5 million to cover the estimated cost of the elections of the shadow councils in April. That provision is included in the 1995–96 settlement for the existing authorities. A new grant-aided expenditure—GAE—assessment will be created for this amount and the GAE will be distributed among the nine regional councils on a basis agreed with COSLA.

It is clearly important that, in order to achieve as smooth a transition to the new structure as possible, the existing authorities play their full part during 1995–96 in helping the shadow councils to prepare for reorganisation. However, I would not expect the existing authorities to incur additional costs next year as a result of reorganisation. My impression is that the preparation work which is already under way in many authorities is, in the great majority of cases, being carried out by existing staff. I expect that that will also be the case next year. Where the existing authorities do incur costs next year in preparing for reorganisation, I would expect these to be offset by a rundown in their staffing and other activity as 1 April 1996 approaches. In other words, I would expect to see, in general, changes in one cancelling out changes in the other. But if a situation were to arise in which an existing authority had to undertake a major piece of preparation work which, for example, involved the recruitment of extra staff or the commissioning of consultants, I would expect such work to be undertaken only with the agreement of the relevant shadow council or councils and with the costs being met by that council or those councils concerned.

I consider that the provision that I am making for reorganisation costs in 1995–96 and the approach which I have outlined with regard to its distribution will ensure that the process of reorganisation will proceed smoothly and efficiently in the lead up to the transfer to the new councils on 1 April 1996.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will announce the provision that he has made in his public expenditure plans for Government-supported expenditure and aggregate external finance in 1996–97 and 1997–98.

Mr. Lang: My plans for Government supported expenditure—GSE—and aggregate external finance—AEF— for 1996–97 and 1997–98 and the actual figures for 1995–96 which I announced on Budget day are shown in the following table. The plans for 1996–97 and 1997–98 will, in the normal way, be subject to review in future public expenditure surveys.

	1995–96 £ million	1996–97 £ million	1997–98 £ million
AEF	5,306.0	5,336	5,300

Community Care

The above amounts of GSE and AEF are inclusive of the following sums which are being transferred to local authorities in respect of their care in the community and the independent living fund responsibilities.

1995–96 £ million	1996–97 £ million	1997–98 £ million
172.1	211.6	245.0

Local Government Reorganisation

In determining my plans for GSE and AEF for the two forward years, I have assumed that the new councils will incur local government reorganisation related costs of £70 million in 1996–97 and £20 million in 1997–98. The 1996–97 figure is £15 million greater than I assumed in my 1993 public expenditure plans. Twelve months ago I estimated that redundancy costs of £15 million would be incurred in 1995–96. I have now transferred this provision to 1996–97. In all, I am assuming that redundancy costs totalling £43 million will be incurred as a result of reorganisation. I am making provision for £40 million of these costs to be met in 1996–97 and £3 million in 1997–98. I expect other reorganisation related costs to amount to £30 million in 1996–97 and £17 million in 1997–98.

The new local government structure will be cheaper to operate than the existing one and I estimate that savings of £40 million per annum will be achieved from 1997–98. I recognise, however, that this full level of annual saving may not be achievable in the first year of the new structure, given that councils are likely to require time to shed the surplus staff which they inherit from the existing authorities. My plans therefore assume a saving of £30 million in 1996–97.

Overall, therefore, my plans assume reorganisation related net costs of £40 million in 1996–97 and net savings of £20 million in 1997–98.

Orthopaedic Consultants

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of vacant consultant orthopaedic posts; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: We are aware of two vacant consultant posts in orthopaedic surgery. The establishment of senior registrars in the specialty was increased from 21 to 23 earlier this year.

Forestry Commission Land

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has to ensure that public access is maintained to Forestry Commission land which passes into private ownership.

Sir Hector Monro: We introduced arrangements in 1991 for securing continued public access to woodlands sold by the Forestry Commission. We have recently reviewed these arrangements and concluded that they should be strengthened. Further details are given in "Our Forests—The Way Ahead"—Cm 2644—a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which of the special advisers serving in his Department during the last five years were subject to positive security vetting.

Mr. Lang: During the last five years all special advisers in my Department have been subject to positive vetting.

Health (Revenue Allocations)

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what revenue allocations he has made to health boards, the Common Services Agency and the State hospital for 1995–96; what allocation provision he has made to those bodies for capital expenditure; and what provision for capital expenditure he proposes to make within the external financial limit for NHS trusts.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has allocated £2,595.3 million to health boards to meet their revenue expenditure commitments on hospital and community health services in 1995–96. The Common Services Agency has been allocated £104.6 million and the State hospital £12.9 million.

Taken with health boards' own cash releasing efficiency savings these allocations give an increase in available resources of 5.1 per cent. for health boards, 0.7 per cent for the Common Services Agency and 4.62 per cent. for the State hospital.

Capital provision of £18.4 million has been made for direct expenditure by health boards, the Common Services Agency and the State hospital. In addition, my right hon. Friend proposes to provide within NHS trusts' external financing limit for gross capital expenditure of some £212.4 million.

Details of the allocations are contained in the following table.

NHS in Scotland Allocations: 1995–96

Travelling People

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent discussions he has held with the representatives of travelling people in Scotland concerning those sections of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 which relate to trespass; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 7 December 1994]: None. My right hon. Friend has an advisory committee on issues concerned with travelling people, on which the traveller community in Scotland are represented.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if his advisory committee on Scotland's travelling people will draw up guidelines relating to those sections in the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 which relate to trespass; how they may be administered by local authorities and police forces; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 7 December 1994]: It would not be appropriate for the advisory committee to issue guidelines on those sections of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 which relate to trespass in Scotland. The Scottish Office has, however, recently issued a guide which gives basic information on the provisions of the Act as it affects Scotland. This has been sent to chief executives of local authorities, chief constables and to other interested parties. Interpretation of the new powers on trespass is essentially a matter for the police and the courts to determine. Notwithstanding the new provisions on trespass in the Act, the policy of toleration of illegal encampments will continue to apply where local authorities have not achieved the targets set by the Secretary of State for traveller site provision.

Hospital Construction, Lanarkshire

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has yet received plans from Lanarkshire health board for the construction of a new hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 5 December 1994]: No. Lanarkshire health board is currently considering plans for the facility that will afford future occupants maximum privacy and dignity.

Chapter 10.5 Scheme

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will continue to support the chapter 10.5 scheme;

(2) what recent representations he has received concerning the review of the chapter 10.5 scheme by the Scottish Office; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 8 December 1994]: Representations have been received recently from the Scottish General Medical Services committee and from a number of general medical practitioners.

The chapter 10.5 payments scheme—so called because it derives from chapter 10.5 of the 1989 White Paper "Working for Patients"—was introduced by the then Secretary of State in April 1990. Its purpose was to safeguard the position of doctors in the less populated parts of Scotland who it was thought might be unable to maintain or increase their income under the revised remuneration arrangements of the new GP contract which placed more emphasis than previously on capitation-based payments. A fund of £1.204 million per annum was established in Scotland. There is no equivalent scheme in England. In the event there has been less of a move towards capitation-based remuneration than expected. The position is currently under review.

Deprivation

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what recent representations he has received concerning the change in calculation of deprivation payments from an 8 Jarman index to a 7 Jarman index; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will assess the effects of the change in calculation of deprivation from an 8 Jarman index to a 7 Jarman index on the incomes of general practitioners in Scotland; and what comparisons he has made with the incomes of general practitioners in the rest of the United Kingdom.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 8 December 1994]: Representations have been received recently from the Scottish General Medical Services committee and from a number of general medical practitioners.

There was no change in overall expenditure on deprivation payments to GPs in Scotland as a consequence of the move from a Jarman 8 index to a Jarman 7 index in 1991. The change was designed to be cost neutral. The use of enumeration districts—around 300 people—as the basis of payment rather than post code sectors—around 5,000 people—allows for better targeting of payments.

I am satisfied that GPs in Scotland are not disadvantaged by the application of a Jarman 7 index in relation to their colleagues in England where the Jarman 8 index continues to be applied at electoral ward level of around 5,000 people.

In 1993–94 GPs in Scotland received some £3.8 million under the scheme which is currently based in 1981 census data. Negotiations are under way with the profession about updating the scheme using data from the 1991 census.

Astronomer Royal

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he hopes to fill the position of Astronomer Royal for Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 12 December 1994]: Advice will be given shortly to Her Majesty the Queen on an appointment to the Office of Astronomer Royal for Scotland.

Forth Bridge

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what provision he has made for public expenditure in each of the years 1995–96, 1996–97 and 1997–98 in connection with the planning for and construction of all approach roads and other building operations in connection with the proposed second Forth road bridge; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what financial provision he has made for all expenditure in connection with the proposed second Forth road bridge in 1995–96, 1996–97 and 1997–98; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 12 December 1994]: My right hon. Friend's spending plans include provision for further expenditure on the proposals under examination in the "Setting Forth" studies amounting to £4 million, £2 million and £2 million in the years 1994–95, 1995–96 and 1996–97 respectively. The deployment of these provisions will be dependent on decisions yet to be taken in relation to these proposals and it may be necessary to make additional provision in respect of land claims which may occur in the years in question. My right hon. Friend is currently considering detailed feasibility studies into all aspects of the proposals and the comments received on these studies.

WALES

Single-sex Wards

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will direct health districts to move to the provision of single-sex wards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Richards: Hospitals are already required to provide services which take account of an individual's privacy and dignity. The issue of single-sex wards is one that my right hon. Friend and I will consider when the present edition of the patients charter for Wales is reviewed.

Dual-sex Wards

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many dual-sex wards exist in each of the health districts of Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Richards: The information requested is not held centrally.

Cot Deaths

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many cot deaths there have been in Wales for each of the last 10 years, broken down by county.

Mr. Richards: The information requested is given in the table.

Energy Expenditure

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total expenditure on energy for offices and buildings by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Redwood: The required information for my Department is:

	1991–92 £	1992–93 £	1993–94 £
Welsh Office	622,399	553,262	513,016
ADAS agency Wales	[1]—	70,126	49,229
Planning Inspectorate agency	[1]—	2,298	2,348
Cadw agency	N/A	N/A	N/A

[1] Agencies not established.
N/A. Figures not available.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total expenditure on energy for each property owned or leased by his Department for the use of Ministers in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Redwood: My Department has no properties for sole use by Ministers. Ministers have rooms in properties in Cardiff and London. Total Welsh Office expenditure on energy for each of these properties for the last three years was:

	1991–92 £	1992–93 £	1993–94 £
Cathays Park, Cardiff	283,155	293,810	298,807
Gwydyr house, London	9,179	7,219	9,456

The Welsh Office is withdrawing from other buildings, saving money on energy in those as it does so.

Oriel Bookshop

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will discuss with the chairman of the Welsh Arts Council its intention to sell off the Oriel bookshop in Cardiff to HMSO; and if he will seek to ensure that, in any such change the role of the bookshop as a main outlet of Welsh language publications and music in Cardiff will be safeguarded.

Mr. Richards: The Arts Council of Wales issued invitations to tender for the management of the book selling operations at the Oriel bookshop in Cardiff on 9 September 1994. The Arts Council will be considering the report of its project board at its meeting on 15 December; some aspects of the report have been submitted to the Welsh Office for approval, and these are under consideration. It will be a matter for the Arts Council as to whether the project board's recommendations are accepted.

The successful tenderer will need to provide services at least equal to those provided by Oriel, including the provision of Welsh language books and periodicals.

Since the Arts Council is conducting the contracting-out process in accordance with Government guidance on market testing, and the choice of tenderer rests with the Arts Council, my right hon. Friend and I do not intend to meet the chairman to discuss the matter.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people currently serve on the boards of each of the NHS trusts as lay appointees; and what is the total cost of their emoluments.

Mr. Richards: The information requested is included in "Appointments by the Secretary of State for Wales", which is held in the Library of the House and is regularly updated.

Consultants

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was his Department's expenditure on (a) management and (b) other consultants in each year from 1990 to 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Expenditure on management and other consultants engaged by the Welsh Office is as follows:

Year	Total payments £000
1990–91	229
1991–92	1,109
1992–93	1,416
1993–94	1,454
1994–95[1]	427

[1] year to date

Since 1993, my Department has significantly reduced its use of consultants which is reflected in the year to date figure 1994–95.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will provide figures for 1993–94 and 1994–95 to date for the number of occasions on which management or other consultants have been engaged (a) by his office and (b) by non-departmental public bodies in Wales; and what were the total amounts of authorised payments for those consultants in both years.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 21 November 1994]: Details of management and other consultants engaged by the Welsh Office are as follows:

	Number of occasions	Total payments—£000s
1993–94	87	1,454
1994–95[1]	37	427

[1] Year to date.

Information for non-departmental public bodies is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Home Tuition

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how long it takes on average for each local education authority to arrange home tuition for children; what is the greatest and least time recorded by each local education authority to provide home tuition; and if the speed of provision has improved over the last three years;

(2) what has been the average time provided for home tuition by each local education authority in each of the last three years; and what was the greatest and least amount of time provided for children in each local education authority;

(3) how many children received home tuition in each of the last three years; and if he will list the numbers by local education authority, distinguishing between primary and secondary school pupils.

Mr. Richards: This information is not available centrally.

Pupil Exclusions

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many children have been excluded in each of the last three years from school (a) temporarily and (b) permanently, listing the schools by local education authority area.

Mr. Richards: Figures for each of the last three years are not available. Information on permanent exclusions from maintained schools in Wales was collected by the Welsh Office over a two-year period, starting with the summer term 1990, under the national exclusions reporting system. A total of 192 permanent exclusions were reported during this period. It is not possible to provide a breakdown of the figure because of assurances given as to confidentiality.

Hospital Tuition

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many children received hospital tuition in each of the last three years, if he will list (a) the hospitals where it was provided and (b) the amount of time provided on average along with the greatest and least time provided for children in each hospital.

Mr. Richards: Information on the education of children in hospital classes is not held centrally. There is presently one hospital school in Wales, the Harvey Jones adolescent unit, maintained by South Glamorgan local education authority. There are currently 13 children between the ages of 11 and 16 in the unit.

Wrexham Maelor Hospital

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps were taken to ensure work on phase 2 of the Wrexham Maelor hospital, Wrexham, was carried out according to schedule; and what checks were made on the subcontractors.

Mr. Richards: The project management of phase 2 of the Wrexham Maelor hospital was carried out by the Welsh Health Common Services Authority in accordance with the mandatory health building procedural guidance.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many complaints have been received from subcontractors on phase 2 of the Wrexham Maelor hospital, Wrexham, about non-payment from the prime contractor.

Mr. Richards: Payment disputes are a matter for the contracting parties. I understand that two subcontractors have complained about aspects of payment and one of them is currently pursuing the matter through court proceedings against the main contractor.

Dental Services

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will ensure the availability of free national health dentistry to all who require it; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Richards: This Government remain committed to a comprehensive NHS dental service and the Green Paper "Improving NHS Dentistry" reinforces our commitment > "to ensure that all patients who want NHS services have adequate access to them".

It is for health authorities to assess the adequacy of NHS dental services in their locality and it is for them to decide on the extent of community dental services they need to contract in light of local circumstances. Family health services authorities are encouraged to seek the Secretary of State's permission to employ salaried dentists in areas where there is a shortfall in service provision.

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which of the special advisers serving in his Department during the last five years were subject to positive security vetting.

Mr. Redwood: All special advisers are currently required to have positive vetting.

Health Service Staff

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the costs of (a) managers and administrators and (b) medical staff in the health service in Wales for each year from 1979 to 1994.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 21 November 1994]: The information requested is set out in the table:

Medical and front-line support

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 21 November 1994]: The information is given in the table:

[2] These figures include:

—medical and dental staff—working in the hospital and community health service, excluding hospital practitioners and clinical assistants.

—nurses and midwives—excluding pre-registration learners.

—professional and technical staff.

Since 1991, student and pupil nurses have been classified as students and are no longer included in NHS staff figures.

[3] These figures include GPs, principal and assistant dentists, ophthalmic medical practitioners and ophthalmic opticians. Staff directly employed by contractual staff—e.g., practice nurses—are not included since complete information is not collected centrally.

Tourism

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total value of section 4 grants distributed by the Wales tourist board in (a) 1991, (b) 1992 and (c) 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones [holding answer 12 December 1994]: The amounts for the years in question are:

EDUCATION

Performance Tables

10. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what prospects there are for the assessment of added value in schools arising from the introduction of testing and the publication of performance tables.

Mr. Forth: We are giving priority to the development of a reliable measure of value added by schools. The report by the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority taking this work forward has just been published and copies have been placed in the Library. My right hon. Friend has now commissioned the SCAA to undertake further developmental work.

19. Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proposals she has for making school performance tables a measure of value added.

Mr. Forth: We shall include value added in school performance tables as soon as reliable, easily understood measures are available. As the recent report by the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority recognised, such measures cannot be calculated until the same cohort of pupils has been reliably tested at different ages.

Grant-maintained Schools

16. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the latest figure she has for the number of schools that have now voted in favour of grant-maintained status.

Mr. Robin Squire: To date, a total of 1,153 schools in England have voted in favour of grant-maintained status.

29. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will list the circumstances in which she has required a second ballot on grant-maintained status.

Mr. Robin Squire: Under the Education Act 1993, a second ballot on whether a school should apply to become grant-maintained is required if fewer than 50 per cent. of eligible parents vote in the ballot, or the result is a tie.

My right hon. Friend has powers to declare a ballot void and require that a fresh ballot be held if it appears to her that the ballot has not been held in accordance with provisions in the 1993 Act, that the governing body has not acted in accordance with the statutory guidance, that there has been interference in the ballot process or that voting in the ballot has been influenced to a significant extent by false or misleading information.

To date, six ballots have been declared void using the powers in the 1993 Act and those they superseded in the Education Reform Act 1988. In one case, this was as a result of the dissemination of false or misleading literature. Ballots held at the other five schools were declared void because of irregularities in the electoral roll.

Self-defence Courses

17. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans she has to introduce self-defence courses for girls in schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: None. It is for schools to decide what to offer their pupils outside of the minimum statutory national curriculum which applies to all pupils, regardless of gender.

School League Tables

18. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans she has to provide new data in school league tables.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend will be consulting in due course on the content of the 1995 performance tables, taking account of feedback on this year's tables. In the longer term performance tables will include the national curriculum assessment results of 11-year-olds and, as soon as reliable and easily understood measures have been developed, data on value added.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment she has made of the extent to which the Government's school league tables reflect the true record of schools, with particular reference to Rochdale.

Mr. Forth: The information in the performance tables was provided by or checked with the schools concerned prior to publication. We have not been notified of any errors in the data in respect of schools in Rochdale.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what support he has received from educational organisations for the introduction of league tables for schools.

Mr. Forth: In commenting earlier this year on proposals for the 1994 round, many organisations acknowledged that the annual performance tables provide information that parents and others want about the performance of schools and colleges. A range of different views were expressed about the coverage and presentation of the data.

School Funding

20. Mrs. Angela Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will make a statement about funding for schools for the coming year.

Mr. Robin Squire: Education standard spending will increase by 1.1 per cent. in 1995–96. Local authorities will decide what to spend on the various services for which they are responsible, including schools.

Pupil Numbers, Liverpool

21. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many children in Liverpool are currently educated in schools with classes of over (a) 30 children and (b) 35 children; and how many such classes there are.

Mr. Robin Squire: In January 1994, 14,250 pupils were in 439 classes of more than 30 and, of these, 960 pupils were in 26 classes of more than 35. But the great majority of Liverpool pupils were in classes smaller than these.

Discretionary Grants

22. Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations she has received regarding the availability of discretionary grants.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend has received representations from a variety of sources about the availability of discretionary awards.

Further Education, Rotherham

23. Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will make a statement on the funding of further education in Rotherham.

Mr. Boswell: The funding of further education in Rotherham is a matter for the Further Education Funding Council.

Nursery Education

24. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps she is taking to further the spread of pre-school education and playgroups.

25. Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will make a statement about her future plans for the expansion of nursery education.

26. Ms Hodge: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans her Department has to expand nursery provision for children under the age of four.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has established a task force to draw up proposals to implement my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's commitment to provide a pre-school place for all four-year-olds whose parents wish them to take it up. We are looking at a range of options to achieve the Prime Minister's target. As the expansion is achieved we want to ensure that it will add to the choice parents have among a range of provision—public, private and voluntary.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what progress has been made in her policy in respect of universal nursery education.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education is looking at a range of options and is consulting widely with practitioners and existing providers of pre-school provision with a view to drawing up detailed proposals to fulfil my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's commitment to provide, over time, a pre-school place for all four-year-olds whose parents wish to take it up.

Technology Colleges

27. Mr. Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many schools have now obtained technology college status.

Mr. Robin Squire: To date, 50.

Expenditure Priorities

28. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what advice she gives local education authorities in respect of their priorities for expenditure.

Mr. Robin Squire: It is for local authorities to make their own decisions about spending priorities within the total resources available to them. We do, however, encourage spending in particular areas through our specific grants programmes and through the allocation of credit approvals.

City Technology Colleges

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will make a statement on the record of (a) city technology colleges and (b) the CTC in Birmingham, in the school league tables.

Mr. Robin Squire: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Plymouth, Devonport (Mr. Jamieson) on 5 December 1994, Official Report, column 125. The table shows something of the progress that the city technology colleges are making. Of the 10 CTCs which had pupils taking GCSEs in 1994, four bettered the average of their local education authority on the measure of five or more GCSEs at A to C, four improved their results over last year, and all exceeded the local LEA average for pupils gaining one or more grades A to G.

Kingshurst CTC in Solihull takes pupils from Solihull and from Birmingham. The college's GCSE results are above the national average, on a par with the Solihull average, and well above the average for Birmingham.

State Schools (Private Industry)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment he has made of the policy of attracting private industry into state schools; and if she will be considering a new approach to providing vocational education in schools.

Mr. Forth: The Government's education policy has consistently encouraged greater interaction between business and schools. The latest data show that 90 per cent. of maintained secondary schools and over half our primary schools now have links of some kind with business, and the range and nature of the interaction is growing broader. General national vocational qualifications are already providing a new approach to vocational education in schools. More than 1,500 schools are now approved GNVQ centres. In October, a GNVQ scholarship scheme was launched with sponsorship from 12 major companies.

Language Training

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans she has to improve the linguistic abilities of children; and if she will examine the best practises in language training in other EEC countries.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend aims to raise linguistic competence principally through the national curriculum, which requires all pupils between the ages of 11 and 16 to study a modern foreign language. She also provides grant to the Centre for Information on Language Teaching and Research, whose working brief is to promote a greater national capability in languages. In addition, she recently announced plans to extend the specialist schools programme to include modern foreign languages.

My right hon. Friend is informed of practice in other member states through our participation in European Community activities such as the Lingua programme.

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what discussions she has had with the Home Secretary on section 11 funding for the next financial year.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend keeps these matters regularly under review with ministerial colleagues. She was pleased that her Department has been able to contribute £5 million in each of the 1995–96 and 1996–97 financial years towards the additional funding for section 11 grant announced by my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary on 22 November Official Report, column 64.

Capital Expenditure

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations she has had from the Confederation of British Industry on the length of the capital expenditure programme replacement cycle.

Mr. Robin Squire: None.

Research

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what sum was spent by her Department on research in each of the last 10 years; what percentage this was of the total annual budget; what is the research budget for the forthcoming year; what percentage this is of her total budget; and what additional new research is to be undertaken.

Mr. Forth: The sums spent on research and development by the Department for the last 10 years were reported in the statistical supplement to the 1994 "Forward Look" of Government-funded science engineering and technology. The expenditure on research and development and the percentage that this expenditure was of total Departmental expenditure are as follows:

1985–86	70.7	2.9
1986–87	68.9	2.7
1987–88	105.4	3.7
1988–89	73.4	2.1
1989–90	75.1	1.5
1990–91	87.8	1.6
1991–92	53.0	0.8
1992–93	43.4	0.6
1993–94	22.3	0.2
1994–95	[1]23.1	0.2

The R and D figures do not include research carried out or funded by the Department's funding agencies.

Total departmental expenditure covers central Government expenditure and grants to local authorities within the Department of Education's programme.

The expenditure on research and development in the coming year has still to be determined, and will be reported in the statistical supplement to the 1995 "Forward Look".

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education which of the appointments made to public bodies by her Department were advertised in the period from April 1992 to December 1993.

Mr. Boswell: The Department placed no advertisements for the members of public bodies during the period in question. It did, however, place an advertisement for the first chief executive of the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority, as responsibility for that appointment lay with the Secretary of State.

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education which of the special advisers serving in her Department during the last five years were subject to positive security vetting.

Mr. Boswell: All special advisers have been positively vetted.

Higher Education (Application Refusals)

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is her estimate of the annual number of students whose applications to take courses at colleges of higher education are refused.

Mr. Boswell: Higher education colleges received some 162,000 applications for entry to full-time undergraduate courses by the polytechnics central admissions system during the 1992–93 applications cycle. On the broad assumption that each applicant made on average 3.2 applications, this is equivalent to some 51,000 total applicants. Some 32,000 students were admitted to the relevant courses in the academic year 1993–94. This suggests that an estimated 19,000 or 37 per cent. of applicants may have gained entry elsewhere, withdrawn from the system, deferred entry or been refused places. These figures include applicants who will not have been considered suitable for higher education.

Student Awards

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education whether there is any difference under the Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations 1994 in the assessment of parental income in respect of a student whose parents are (a) marred or (b) cohabiting on the assumption that the parents in either case have identical financial circumstances and no other dependants.

Mr. Boswell: Under the Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations the assessment of the parental income of married and cohabiting parents in identical financial circumstances will usually be the same, unless one of the cohabiting parents is wholly or mainly financially dependent on the other.

Schools Expenditure

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the total figure for the financial balances held by all (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department is at present collating the information on balances contained in the outturn statements prepared by local education authorities for the financial year 1993–94 under section 42 of the Education Reform Act 1988, and I will write to the hon. Member when this work is complete.

Older People (Learning)

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what contribution her Department has made in 1994 to follow up the European Year of Older People and Solidarity between Generations in 1993.

Mr. Boswell: The Department for Education is committed to working with employers and other providers of education and training to maximise participation and attainment by people of all ages, as the national targets for education and training make clear.

Specifically, the Department provides a programme of grants to a number of voluntary bodies—including the Pre-Retirement Association—for work with older learners. The Department also funds the family literacy initiative, which promotes inter-generational learning.

HEALTH

Scarborough and North East Yorkshire Trust

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions she or her Department has had with the chairman of the Scarborough and North East Yorkshire Health Care NHS Trust, following his remarks in the course of a mental health review meeting in January 1994; what plans she has to seek his resignation; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) on 20 October at columns 310–11.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what level of financial support the National Association of Health Authorities and Trusts receives from her Department.

Mr. Sackville: In the current financial year, the Department has, to date, agreed to payments totalling £58,500 towards the cost of specific projects undertaken by the National Association of Health Authorities and Trusts. The Department does not offer financial support to the association's general running costs.

GP Fundholding

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will make a statement on representations by Angela Fulter, director of the King's Fund, on the use of general practitioner fundholders' resources for the purchase of property and property improvements to fundholder premises;

(2) what arrangements she is intending to make for the return to the taxpayers of financial resources used by fundholders for the purchase of property and property improvement to fundholders' premises, where fundholder general practitioners dispose of their practices' pecuniary interests on retirement.

Mr. Malone: Under the National Health Service (Fund-holding Practices) Regulations 1993, general practitioner fundholders may use efficiency savings to improve practice premises where this is for the benefit of patients. These rules are kept under review. Fundholding general practitioners may not use efficiency savings to purchase new premises.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence she has of fundholding general practitioner practices selling premises purchased out of public funds for windfall profits.

Mr. Malone: None.

Prescriptions

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her best estimate of the average number of prescription items used each year by people over state retirement age.

Mr. Malone: In 1993, some 176.5 million prescription items were dispensed free of charge by community pharmacists and appliance contractors in England to people who declared on their prescription form that they were either a woman aged 60 and over or a man aged 65 and over. This equates to an annual average of 17.6 prescription items per head for each person of state retirement age or over, resident in England.

Burnley Health Care NHS Trust

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 6 December, Official Report, columns 133–34, what considerations she took into account when deciding to correspond privately with the former chairman of Burnley Health Care NHS Trust.

Mr. Malone: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State took all relevant factors into account, in particular her duties in respect of the National Health Service Trusts (Membership and Procedure) Regulations 1990 and reports of recent events at Burnley Health Care NHS Trust, in deciding to write privately to the former chairman.

NHS Patient Statistics

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were treated by the national health service on an (a) out-patient and (b) in-patient basis in 1979, 1986, 1990 and 1993.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table:

General and acute specialties

Thousands

	Out-patients first attendances	Ordinary admissions and day cases finished consultant episodes
1979	6,771	[1]5,099
1986	7,835	[1]6,446
1990–91	7,593	6,936
1993–94	8,832	8,205

Notes:

[1] Figures have been adjusted to take account of the change from discharges and deaths to finished consultant episodes.

Sources:

1979 and 1986, SH3 returns; 1990–91 and 1993–94, KH09 and KP70 returns.

Life Expectancy

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was life expectancy for men and women at one year, in 1979, 1986, 1990 and 1993.

Mr. Sackville: Data on life expectancy at birth in England and Wales for men and women in 1993 are not available. Life expectancy data for the years 1979, 1986, 1990 and 1992, the last available year, are shown in the table:

Year	Males	Females
1979	70.3	76.4
1986	72.1	77.9
1990	73.1	78.8
1992	73.8	79.2

"The Health of the Nation"

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on which dates the Cabinet Committee on "The Health of the Nation" met between October 1992 and October 1994; and on which dates its sub-committees met during the same period.

Mr. Sackville: Details of the timing of meetings of ministerial committees are not given.

Non-executive Directors

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list (a) the vocational and (b) party political background of the non-executive directors of (i) Brighton Healthcare NHS Trust, (ii) South Downs Healthcare NHS Trust, (iii) the Brighton family health services authority and (iv) East Sussex district health authority; and which of them live in the area covered by the body concerned.

Mr. Malone: The names and occupations of non-executive directors of Brighton Healthcare NHS Trust and the South Downs Healthcare NHS Trust are as shown.

Brighton Healthcare NHS Trust

Mr. J. Whicker: Retired bank director
Mr. R. Stiles: Chartered surveyor
Ms S. Innes: Consultant, The Open College
Professor C. Carnall: Director of Graduate Studies
Vacancy

South Downs Health NHS Trust

Mr. Q. Barry: Solicitor
Mrs. J. Langston: Youth worker
Lady H. Trafford: Company director
Mr. R. Brett: Bank area director
Mr. R. Davenport: Information systems manager

NHS trusts do not have a defined catchment area in which directors could be deemed to live.

The appointment of non-executive members of district health authorities and family health services authorities is a matter for regional health authorities which have details of vocational background and addresses of appointees.

Information on the political affiliation of appointees is not collected.

Long-term Care

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what savings have been made since April 1993 for the national health service by the transfer of funding of continuing care of elderly people to local authorities;

(2) what consideration she has given to using the savings from the transfer of funding of continuing care to local authorities to be available for the use of councils in providing this service.

Mr. Bowis: As a pre-condition of the community care special transitional grant, local authorities have been required to reach agreements with health authorities on their respective responsibilities for long-term care. When reaching these agreements we have made it clear that any changes to long-term care responsibilities should be agreed between the two agencies, including, if appropriate any transfer of resources under section 28A of the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1977.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to ensure that people with acute health needs in continuing care are cared for in hospital and not in a domestic setting.

Mr. Bowis: On 12 August we issued, for consultation, draft guidance on national health service responsibilities for meeting long-term health care needs. The guidance reminded health authorities that they have a responsibility for securing care for people with continuing health care needs. Such care can be provided in a variety of settings, including hospitals or appropriate facilities in the independent sector.

Orthopaedic Posts

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of vacant consultant orthopaedic posts; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: There were 31 vacant consultant posts in trauma and orthopaedics in England at 30 September 1993. As a snapshot of vacancies on a single date, they may not fairly reflect the average number of vacancies over the year as a whole.

Multiple Births

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many sets of (a) twins, (b) triplets, (c) quadruplets, (d) quintuplets and (e) sextuplets were born in England in 1993; what was the total number of maternities in England and Wales; and how many multiple births of each type were conceived as a result of (i) in-vitro fertilisation, (ii) gamete intra-fallopian transfer and (iii) other forms of assisted conception.

Mr. Sackville: There were 668,511 maternities in England and Wales in 1993, of which 8,302 resulted in twins, 234 in triplets, 12 in quadruplets and one in sextuplets.

Information on multiple births in 1992 following assisted conception—the latest year for which figures are available—is contained in the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority's annual report. Copies of this report are available in the Library.

NHS Staff Salary Costs

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 3 November, Official Report, column 1267, if she will now update the information on NHS staff salary costs to include figures for 1993–94 and a recalculation of figures for previous years on the new 1993–94 basis.

Mr. Malone: Information on 1993–94 national health service staff salary costs will be placed in the Library. Information on previous year figures at 1993–94 prices was included in the reply I gave the hon. Member on 3 November at column 1267.

Research

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what sum was spent by her Department on research in each of the last 10 years; what percentage this was of the total annual budget; what is the budget for the forthcoming year; what percentage this is of her total budget; and what additional new research is to be undertaken.

Mr. Malone: The sums spent on research and development by the Department of Health over the last 10 years were reported in the statistical supplement to the "Forward Look of Government-Funded Science, Engineering and Technology 1994", and earlier editions of the "Annual Review of Government Funded Research and Development". These figures are set out in the table, together with the percentage of the total Department's spending represented by the research.

Year	DH research spending (£ million)	Percentage of total DH spending spent on research
1985–86	20.1	5.56
1986–87	28.8	7.40
1987–88	28.4	6.88
1988–89	33.7	8.04
1989–90	38.7	5.65
1990–91	47.0	6.83
1991–92	56.2	7.90
1992–93	53.0	6.86
1993–94 (estimate)	54.1	3.88
1994–95 (estimate)	50.1	3.14

These figures exclude spending on the national health service and on NHS research and development. The constituent parts of total departmental spending have changed over the last 10 years, making comparison difficult across different years.

Department of Health expenditure on research and development in the coming year has still to be determined, and will be reported in the statistical supplement to the 1995 forward look.

New and future Departmental strategic research initiatives within the Department's centrally commissioned programme include studies in primary care, mental health services, community health services, personal social services, public and environmental health, information technology, skill mix, effectiveness of purchasing models and prescribing.

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which of the special advisers serving in her Department during the last five years were subject to positive security vetting.

Mr. Sackville: All special advisers are currently required to have positive vetting.

Patients' Complaints

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 24 November, Official Report, columns 323–24, when she will publish data for 1993–94 on patient complaints.

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 12 December, Official Report, column 472.

EMPLOYMENT

Career Development Loans

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many inquiries about career development loans were received (a) during the 1993–94 financial year and (b) in response to his Department's advertising campaign.

Mr. Paice: During the 1993–94 financial year 90,275 career development loan inquiries were received, of which 36,390 were in direct response to the CDL advertising campaign.

Labour Statistics

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of (a) men and (b) women are economically active at age 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65 years and over.

Mr. Oppenheim: The available information from the labour force survey is given in the following table:

Economic activity rates by age—spring 1994 (not seasonally adjusted) Great Britain

Per cent.

Age (years)	Males	Females
55	82	64
56	79	59
57	74	57
58	75	51
59	70	45
60	66	34
61	57	30
62	50	25
63	46	21
64	39	18
65 and over	7	3

Labour force survey.

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his current estimate of the number of people who leave the work force each year; and if he will differentiate between those who leave due to retirement, ill-health, unemployment and other reasons.

Mr. Oppenheim: Of those people classified as economically inactive—that is, not employed or ILO unemployed—in the spring 1994 labour force survey for Great Britain, 1,020,000 people said that they had been in employment a year earlier. Reasons given for leaving their last job were: retirement, 22 per cent.; ill-health, 16 per cent.; redundancy, dismissal or a temporary job ending, 15 per cent.; other reasons, 47 per cent.

Further, of those people classified as ILO unemployed in spring 1994, 760,000 people said they had been in employment a year earlier. The reasons given for leaving employment were: redundancy or dismissal, 32 per cent.; temporary job ending, 18 per cent.; other reasons, 50 per cent.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total number of staff employed by the Health and Safety Executive in each of the last five years.

Mr. Oppenheim: The total number of staff employed by the Health and Safety Executive in each of the last five years is shown in the table:

Year (1 April)	Number of staff employed by HSE
1990	3,698.0
1991	3,877.0
1992	4,321.0
1993	4,537.5
1994	4,544.5

Note:

Figures show full-time equivalent staff.

Part-time staff counted as 0.5.

Apprenticeships

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what consideration he has given to the German model of a firm employment status for apprentices and industry-agreed allowances for trainees; and what plans he has to recommend it in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Paice: It is up to employers offering apprenticeship training to decide on employed status and wage levels. Under modern apprenticeships the aim is to offer apprentices employed status as soon as possible and to ensure that realistic wages or allowances are set which reflect the cost of training to the employer and the expectation on behalf of the trainee of higher wages when qualified.

Pay Differentials

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what study he has made of the effect of reduced pay differentials in Germany.

Mr. Oppenheim: The Department has made no such study.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to encourage employers to lower pay differentials.

Mr. Oppenheim: None. Pay is a matter to be determined by the employers and employees concerned. Employers are best able to judge what pay is needed to recruit, retain and motivate their employees at all levels.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the role of pay differentials in the development of trust between workers and management.

Mr. Oppenheim: None. Pay is a matter for the employers and employees concerned.

Managerial Pay Awards

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what discussions he has had with the Prime Minister about managerial pay awards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Oppenheim: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State periodically discusses pay at all levels and its implications for the economy and jobs with my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and colleagues. As the Government have made clear on a number of occasions, the remuneration of directors is a matter for companies and their shareholders, within the framework of company law.

Management and Work Force Co-operation

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to encourage co-operation between management and work force in United Kingdom industry; and if he will review his policy.

Mr. Oppenheim: The Government believe that co-operation between management and workers is best promoted on a voluntary basis. Only in this way can companies develop flexible arrangements which suit the needs of their business and their employees. Legislation, such as the European works councils directive, is too rigid and not the way to encourage good practice. Compulsion would restrict flexibility, add to costs and stifle innovation.

The Government continue to encourage voluntary employee involvement practices. Our joint campaign with the Confederation of British Industry, "Managing for Success", offers guidelines on involving employees in aspects of business performance.

The Government published a booklet, "The Competitive Edge", describing good practice and successful examples of employee involvement, in May this year. A copy is available in the Library.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Cuba

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the USA Government to seek the normalisation of relationships with Cuba; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We believe that United States-Cuba relations are primarily a matter for the two Governments concerned, not third parties.

United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his preferred number of members of UNESCO's board.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are of the opinion that international bodies operate more efficiently and cost effectively with small governing bodies. We were therefore not happy with the decision taken at the recent 145th session of the executive board to recommend an increase in the size of the board from 51 to 58. We would have preferred the executive board to recommend a decrease in its size. Failing that, we would have liked to see the status quo maintained.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what he estimates would be the cost of renewing the United Kingdom's membership of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We estimate that the cost of renewing the United Kingdom's membership of UNESCO would be £11 million per annum.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his preferred level of subsistence payments to the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation based members.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We believe that subsistence rates for the UNESCO executive board meetings should be paid only to members from least developed countries and the level reduced to bring it in line with the arrangements in the other UN specialised agencies. At present, all UNESCO executive board members receive a daily subsistence rate based on 140 per cent. of the UN rate plus $5 for the duration of the twice-yearly executive board sessions.

Rwanda and Zaire

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements have been made to protect humanitarian aid workers operating in the refugee camps in Rwanda and Zaire.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The non-governmental organisations working in the Rwandan refugee camps have, with the advice and assistance of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, made their own security and contingency arrangements. We maintain regular contact with British NGOs and UN agencies over the security in the camps and are continually monitoring the situation.

The UN Secretary-General recently outlined several options for international action to address the security situation in the camps. The Security Council has asked him to investigate the practicalities of the proposals and we await his further response.

East Timor

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he received a letter and petition about East Timor from the justice and peace group of St. Charles' church, Gosforth; and when he proposes to reply to it.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have been unable to trace any letter from the justice and peace group of St. Charles' church. A petition with a large number of signatories from the Gosforth area was received in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on 20 May 1994. No reply was sent because in the absence of any covering letter it was unclear to whom it should be addressed. If the hon. Member would like to forward a copy of the justice and peace group's letter, I would be happy to reply.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been Her Majesty's Government's response to the proposal of the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany for the establishment of an international nuclear weapons register; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: We and other NATO allies have explained our reservations about this proposal to the German Government.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the establishment of an international nuclear weapons register;

(2) what discussions he has had with his NATO counterparts on the proposal of the Federal Republic of Germany to establish an international nuclear weapons register; and if he will make a statement on their progress.

Mr. Hurd: We have discussed the German proposal with NATO allies. We have concluded that the proposal would not make the positive and practical contribution to nuclear arms control which the German Government hoped.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been Her Majesty's Government's response to President Yeltsin's invitation to all five nuclear weapons states to enter strategic nuclear arms control talks.

Mr. Hurd: We took careful note of all President Yeltsin's references to nuclear arms control in his speech at the United Nations General Assembly. We have not received any detailed representations from the Russians.

Disarmament Conference

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recommendations his Department is making regarding the current review of the agenda of the conference on disarmament; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: We participate actively in the review of the agenda of the conference on disarmament. We want the agenda to reflect a sensible balance between nuclear and conventional issues.

Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it is Her Majesty's Government's policy to seek a consensus decision on the extension of the non-proliferation treaty at next year's extension conference.

Mr. Hurd: We will be seeking an indefinite and unconditional extension of the non-proliferation treaty. We would welcome it if that decision could be achieved by consensus.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his Department's assessment of the progress that has been made towards the achievement of the objectives of articles I and II of the non-proliferation treaty since its entry into force.

Mr. Hurd: We believe that there has been widespread compliance with both articles since the treaty entered into force in 1970. But we have at times been concerned about suspected nuclear weapons development programmes which would have been in breach of treaty obligations.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his Department's assessment of the progress that has been made towards the achievement of the objectives of article IV of the non-proliferation treaty since its entry into force.

Mr. Hurd: We believe that there has been considerable progress towards the wide use of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment Her Majesty's Government have made of the compatibility of a significant increase in the capability of the United Kingdom's strategic nuclear forces with its obligation under article IV of the non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Hurd: The effect of recent changes to the United Kingdom's nuclear forces will be to reduce the explosive power of our operational nuclear inventory by more than 25 per cent. below the 1990 level.

Nuclear Tests

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards including a clause in a comprehensive test ban treaty that would permit nuclear tests to be conducted under exceptional circumstances.

Mr. Hurd: We would expect a comprehensive test ban treaty, in line with a number of international treaties in this field, to include a clause allowing parties to exercise their national sovereignty by withdrawing if they decided that extraordinary events related to the subject matter of the treaty had jeopardised their vital national interests.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards including a clause in a comprehensive test ban treaty that would permit state parties to withdraw from the treaty after five or 10 years if they felt that further testing was required.

Mr. Hurd: The conference on disarmament is examining many proposals, including on withdrawal from a CTBT after a certain period, but no decisions have yet been taken. We have made clear our desire to secure an indefinite, effective and verifiable treaty which bans all nuclear tests.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his Department's policy regarding the choice of the implementing authority for a comprehensive test ban treaty; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: The CTBT authority will need to implement an effective and verifiable treaty. It is too early to decide on the details of the authority's organisation and operations.

Negative Security Assurance

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the Government will consider removing the condition attached to the United Kingdom's negative security assurance which exempts non-nuclear weapons states that are in an alliance or association with a nuclear weapons state from that assurance.

Mr. Hurd: No. We would not wish to forswear the possible use of our nuclear deterrent in the case of an attack on the United Kingdom, its dependent territories, its armed forces or its allies by a non-nuclear weapons state in association or alliance with a nuclear weapons state.

Casablanca Conference

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the Casablanca conference, its outcome and British involvement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I led a delegation of over 50 British business men and officials to the economic summit for the middle east and north Africa held in Casablanca from 30 October to 1 November. We fully share the objective of promoting regional economic development and, in particular, encouraging private sector involvement. We and our EU partners will continue to support this initiative through our participation in the follow-up conference to be held in Amman next year, and through the regional economic development working group which the EU chairs.

Arms Trade

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions are currently taking place with (a) the United Nations, (b) the European Union or (c) other international forums on means of restricting the arms trade.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom strongly supports international efforts to promote responsibility in arms exports. Last month in the first committee of the UN General Assembly, the EU tabled a draft resolution proposing a UN code of conduct on conventional arms transfers. But after considerable opposition from other delegations, the draft resolution was withdrawn. An EU working group on conventional arms exports meets regularly. We are currently involved in multilateral negotiations on proposed new arrangements to promote transparency and responsibility in transfers of conventional arms and sensitive dual-use goods.

Western Sahara

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the registration of voters in the Western Sahara has now been completed; what assessment he has made of the extent to which parties accept that this has been done in a fair way; and when the referendum on the future of the Western Sahara will take place.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The deadline for the submission by the parties of applications to vote passed on 25 October. Individuals can still register their applications. Polisario has expressed concern at the large number of last-minute applications submitted by the Moroccan authorities. The UN is still identifying the voter applicants. Despite the UN Secretary-General's recent announcement that additional UN offices will be opened to process applications, this exercise is expected to take several months. It is unlikely that the referendum will be held before next summer.

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which of the special advisers serving in his Department during the last five years were subject to positive security vetting.

Mr. Baldry: All the special advisers in my Department during the past five years have been subject to positive security vetting.

Entry Clearance

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he intends to lay before the House the first report by Lady Anson, the independent monitor of refusal of entry clearance where there is no right of appeal.

Mr. Hurd: I have arranged for Lady Anson's first report to be laid before both Houses today and copies to be placed in the House Libraries. I welcome the report and note Lady Anson's recommendations, which will be carefully considered. Some have already been implemented.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Coarse Fishing

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received concerning changes to the protective close season for coarse fishing; and if he will make a further statement.

Mr. Jack: We have received some 250 objections, from angling bodies, conservation organisations and individuals, to various aspects of the National Rivers Authority's proposals for the introduction of uniform arrangements in England and Wales for a close season for coarse fish. These included objections to both the proposed abolition of the close season on those stillwaters which are at present subject to such restrictions and to the proposed imposition of a close season on waters where currently no such rules apply. The NRA has now submitted its proposals for confirmation. In deciding whether to confirm the proposals, we will take into account both the NRA's case for proposing these changes and the objections to them that we have received.

British Fishery Protection Service

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if British fishery officers are authorised to work outside the United Kingdom.

Mr. Jack: Yes. British sea fishery officers have powers under the Sea Fish Conservation Act 1967, as amended, to enforce fisheries legislation on all vessels within British fishery limits and on UK fishing vessels anywhere outside those limits.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the British fishery protection service is authorised to work outside the limits of the waters under the jurisdiction of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Jack: All commissioned officers of the Royal Navy's fishery protection squadron are empowered, as British sea fishery officers, to enforce European Union fisheries legislation on all vessels within British fishery limits and on UK vessels anywhere outside these limits. The Royal Navy's fishery protection squadron may also undertake operations relating to the protection of UK vessels from harassment within or outside British fishery limits.

Slaughterhouses

Mr. Olner: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total number of slaughterhouses in England with EU export certificates for each standard region of the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Browning: MAFF's records of slaughterhouses in England are maintained by state veterinary service region. At 8 December 1994 the number of slaughterhouses fully approved under EC directives 64/433/EEC for red meat and 71/118/EEC for poultry meat and therefore eligible to export to other member states of the European Union was 75 and 135 respectively. The breakdown by English region was:

Region	Red meat	Poultry meat
Eastern region	17	44
South Eastern region	7	15
South Western region	16	12
Midlands and Western region	20	42
Northern region	15	22

Embassies

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what contacts his Department has with the British embassy in Paris and the staff there dealing with agricultural matters;

(2) what contacts his Department has with the British embassy in The Hague and the staff there dealing with agricultural matters.

Mr. Jack: Our agricultural attachés in all EU countries provide an important service in monitoring and reporting on developments in agriculture, food and fisheries matters. They also play a vital role in conveying the views of the United Kingdom Government to the Governments in their host countries. My Department is, therefore, in frequent contact with attachés on a wide range of agricultural and related issues.

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which of the special advisers serving in his Department during the last five years were subject to positive security vetting.

Mr. Jack: During the last five years all special advisers to the Minister have been subject to positive vetting.

Lindane

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research he has conducted into the pesticide lindane in relation to breast cancer.

Mrs. Browning: The Ministry has not conducted specific research on lindane in relation to breast cancer. However, the independent advisory committee on pesticides has reviewed a very substantial body of evidence on the toxicology of lindane in the course of a recent review of its non-agricultural uses. The committee concluded that the approved non-agricultural uses represent no unacceptable risk to human health. The committee is currently reviewing the agricultural uses of lindane. The relevant evidence will be studied in the course of this review. The Department of Health committee on carcinogenicity will be looking into the relationship between organochlorine pesticides, which include lindane, and breast cancer in March 1995. However, most of the data which will be considered relates to another organochlorine, DDT.

Animal Transportation

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 7 December, Official Report, column 290, (1) what were the whereabouts of the official Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food veterinary surgeon during the period in which the animals were left in unattended lorries in France on the night of 1 December;

(2) if the veterinary surgeon employed by the shipping company was in a position to feed and water the animals in the livestock lorries that were left without drivers in France on the night of 1 December.

Mrs. Browning: It was intended that a veterinary officer should fly with the drivers to meet the vessel at Cherbourg in order to monitor the arrangements at disembarkation. However, the flight did not take place so the officer remained in this country. The veterinary surgeon employed by the company was not in a position to feed and water the calves in the livestock lorries which were delayed in Calais as this could not be done without unloading the calves from the lorries.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how long the animals flown from Coventry airport to France, back to Coventry airport, and subsequently back to France again on the night of 6 December and morning of 7 December remained in the aircraft; what provision there was for them to be fed, watered and rested during the journey; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what steps he has taken to satisfy himself that all the animals flown from Coventry airport, to France, back to Coventry airport, and subsequently back to France again on the night of 6 December and morning of 7 December were fed and watered within 15 hours of the start of their journey and that all aspects of the journey plan for these animals were complied with.

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 12 December 1994]: I am informed that the calves journeyed from premises in Somerset to Coventry airport, where they were loaded under official supervision for a flight to Rennes. Local turbulence prevented the plane from touching down at Rennes, so it returned to Coventry airport, where the calves were unloaded under official supervision. The calves were then sent back to their home premises where they were immediately given suitable liquid food and subsequently inspected by a local veterinary inspector. He was satisfied with their condition but administered prophylactic treatment. The entire journey, including the aborted landing and return to the premises of origin, took 15½ hours.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the actions being taken by his Ministry to meet the aims of the private finance initiative.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have identified two areas where I believe there is scope for attracting private finance.

My officials, assisted by those of Property Holdings, are developing schemes for a new office building at Crewe and either a redevelopment of our present offices at Northallerton or a new building there. If these are successful the schemes will be taken forward under the private finance initiative with the private sector funding the projects and bearing any land acquisition, design, construction and ownership risks. On completion the Ministry will take leases on the new buildings based on partial or full occupancy.

Officials are also examining, with Property Holdings, the scope for using private finance to refurbish our increasingly aged Whitehall buildings. Expenditure is likely to be some years off because of the complexity of the scheme. Suitable temporary accommodation will need to be found for some of the staff whilst work is in progress. We would expect the provision of temporary accommodation to be part of the private finance package. Detailed costings are not available but the whole scheme is likely to be in the tens of millions of pounds range.

My Ministry will continue to require authorities responsible for flood defence and coast protection schemes to obtain private sector contributions towards the cost of capital works needed to facilitate current or future developments, and will strongly encourage authorities to do so where defences provide a particular direct benefit to a business.

Bovine Somatotropin

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he intends to publish his response to the consultation exercise on BST before the December meeting of the Council of Agriculture Ministers.

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 9 December 1994]: A list of those who responded has been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. A full set of responses has been available in the Library of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food since September 1994. The Government will not be issuing a formal response but all the replies have been carefully considered, along with the other representations received, and as indicated in the consultation letter, a copy of which is also in the House Library, will be borne in mind in the current discussions in Brussels.

Milk

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimates have been made as to the volume in litres of black market milk trading; what factors he believes are responsible for the current black market in milk; and if he will forecast what the consequences will be of the market in black milk with particular reference to its effect on the price and demand for milk.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 12 December 1994]: The Intervention Board is currently investigating information that it has received concerning allegations about illegal trading in milk. The extent of these alleged irregularities has not yet been established, so it is impossible to say how much milk is involved or the effect this matter may be having on the market for milk. Anyone involved in illegal trading in milk runs the risk of a heavy fine, payment of super-levy on undeclared sales of milk and, possibly, imprisonment.

Rabies

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will commission an independent and authoritative full economic audit of current policy and practice to prevent the spread of rabies to the United Kingdom following the report of the Agriculture Select Committee.

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 12 December 1994]: The Government are carefully considering the Agriculture Select Committee's report and will publish its response in due course.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefits

Mr. Wicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average amount of all social security and related benefits paid to those on (a) the lowest decile and (b) the second lowest decile of earnings; and what percentage of total earnings this represents for each year since 1979.

Mr. Burt: The available information is in the table.

The average amounts of social security and related benefits shown are for those in each of the lowest two deciles of earnings. The average benefit income is then presented as a percentage of average earnings for each decile.

Average amount of benefit income in the lowest two deciles of earnings and these amounts as a percentage of average earnings in the lowest two deciles.

	Average amount of benefit income in:		Average amount of benefit income as a percentage of average earnings in:
	Lowest decile of earnings £ per week	Second lowest decile of earnings £ per week	Lowest decile of earnings Per cent.	Second lowest decile of earnings Per cent.

1991–2	49	21	108	18

Notes:

1. The analysis is on a benefit unit basis: a benefit unit being a single adult or a couple together with any dependent children. All benefit units reporting some earnings have been ranked by their level of gross earnings; the lowest and second lowest deciles of earnings have been selected from these rankings. Earnings and benefit income are the averages of the amounts for the requested deciles. Earnings are gross of income tax and national insurance contributions. For employees, earnings relate to the usual gross amount. Earnings include income of the self-employed which relates to profit or loss over the latest 12-month period for which information is available.

2. Benefit income includes all income-related, and non-income-related benefits plus the value of free school meals, free welfare milk and free school milk.

3. The source of the data is the households below average income datasets for 1979, 1981, 1987, 1988–89, 1990–91 and 1991–92, where for example 1991–92 is the combined calendar years of 1991 and 1992. Data for the intervening years are not available.

4. All benefit income figures are rounded to the nearest pound and are expressed in April 1994 prices.

Retirement Pensions

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish figures estimating the cost of reintroducing earnings uprating for the retirement pension and other linked benefits beginning in April 1997 on the basis of the assumptions used in "Options for Equality in State Pension Age", giving annual figures in current prices over a 10-year period.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The table gives the estimated additional cost of uprating retirement pension and other linked benefits in line with earnings, from 1997. The consultation document "Options for Equality in State Pension Age" used an assumption of an increase in earnings 1.5 per cent. greater than prices. The same assumption has been applied to derive this estimate.

Funeral Expenses

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the (a) mean and (b) median payment for funeral expenses from the social fund for the latest period for which figures are available; how many applicants were successful in that period; how many of the grants made were between £875 and £1,000; and how many were over £1,000.

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is set out in the table. It is for the current financial year to 30 November.

Since 1988–89, the average funeral payment award has been rising by 6 per cent. per annum more than the rate of inflation and the total cost has risen from £18 million to over £60 million in 1993–94.

Number of funeral payment awards April-November 1994	44,428
Number of awards made between £875 and £1,000[1]	8,718
Number of awards over £1,000	19,791
Average award size	£919
Median award size[1]	£967

Note:

[1] These figures are estimates based on data which provide the number of awards by cash bands of £100. The available data on cash band do not take account of payments that are returned in the accounting period in which the awards were made.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will define the category of remote relatives being those who may no longer claim funeral expenses in terms of his announcement of changes to the social fund rules announced on 30 November;

(2) how many of the applicants receiving grants for funeral expenses from the social fund during the latest period for which figures are available he estimates would not have been eligible to claim if the limitation excluding remote relatives announced by him on 30 November had been in force.

Mr. Roger Evans: From April 1995, a funeral payment may not be awarded to a claimant where another close relative had equal or closer contact with the deceased, and either that relative is not in receipt of a qualifying benefit[1] or has capital exceeding the disregard for a social fund funeral payment.

A precise estimate of the impact of this change is not available. However we estimate that about 1,500[2] relatives and acquaintances will be affected.

[1] Funeral payment qualifying benefits are income support, family credit, disability working allowance, housing benefit and council tax benefit.

[2] Less than 2 per cent. of all awards using 1993–94 figures.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many social fund grants were awarded for between (a) £10 and £100, (b) £200 and £400, (c) £400 and £600, (d) £600 and £800 and (e) thereafter up to the sum of £2,000 for funeral expenses, by region in each of the last three years.

Mr. Roger Evans [holding answer 6 December 1994]: The information that is readily available is set out in the tables. It is by Benefits Agency territory.

Income Support

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) whether the restrictions to income support assistance with mortgage interest payments from (a) April 1995 and (b) October 1995 will apply equally to households claiming (i) a disability premium, (ii) a severe disability premium, (iii) a carer's premium, (iv) a disabled child premium, (v) disability living allowance, (vi) the higher rate care component of disability living allowance, (vii) a lone parent premium, (viii) a pensioner premium or (ix) people who are terminally ill;

(2) whether the restrictions on income support assistance with mortgage interest payments from (a) April 1995 and (b) October 1995 will apply equally to households where the claimant or partner is over 60 years of age;

(3) whether the restrictions in income support with mortgage interest payments from (a) April 1995 and (b) October 1995 will apply equally to households in which the claim has resulted from marital breakdown or the death of a spouse.

Mr. Roger Evans: The reduction in the capital limit to £100,000 from April 1995 will apply equally to all income support claimants except where a loan has been taken out to adapt a dwelling for the special needs of a disabled person. As now, any loan taken out for this purpose will not count toward the capital limit. A disabled person, for this purpose, is defined in the Income Support (General) Regulations 1987, S.I 1987 No. 1967, schedule 3 paragraph 7B. This definition will remain unchanged in April 1995.

The October 1995 changes will be subject to wide consultation and the position of particular groups will be considered during the consultation process. The position of pensioners will be protected.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what he estimates to be the full year cost of changes announced in the Budget and uprating statements of the cold weather payments and the home energy efficiency scheme.

Mr. Roger Evans: Cold weather payments will rise to £8.50 from 1 November 1995. The full year cost of this change will depend on the number of cold weather payments made, but if the same number of payments are made as in 1993–94, costs will increase by £3.15 million between 1994–95 and 1995–96.

The Department of Environment have agreed additional resources of £30 million in each of the next three years for the home energy efficiency scheme—a 43 per cent. increase in funding compared with expenditure in 1994–95.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the total annual cost for (a) cold weather payments and (b) the home energy efficiency scheme for 1994–95 and 1995–96; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Roger Evans: On the assumption of the same number of cold weather payments made in 1993–94, expenditure is estimated at £14.7 million in 1994–95, and £17.85 million in 1995–96.

The total annual cost of the home energy efficiency scheme including 2.55 per cent. management costs will be £75.2 million in 1994–95, almost double the amount available in 1993–94. In 1995–96, it will be £106.2 million, an increase of 43 per cent. on the previous year.

Children

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many children live in households receiving (a) income support or (b) family credit in the areas covered by Benefits Agency offices serving predominantly (i) Southampton, (ii) Portsmouth, (iii) Hampshire, (iv) Dorset (v) East Sussex, (vi) West Sussex, (vii) Kent, (viii) Berkshire and (ix) Surrey.

Mr. Roger Evans: The best estimated information available is set out in the table, but some figures, particularly those for family credit, are estimated from a small number of sample cases and should therefore be treated with caution.

Number of children[1] in households receiving Income Support and Family Credit paid by Benefits Agency offices predominantly serving[2] the areas shown

Area	Income support[3] thousands	Family Credit[4] thousands
Southampton	17	5
Portsmouth	16	4
Hampshire	73	23
Dorset	25	8
East Sussex	34	10
West Sussex	27	7
Kent	81	20
Berkshire	33	9
Surrey	22	6

Notes:

[1] Income support figures include children under 16 and dependants aged under 19 still living in the parental home. Family credit figures include children under 16 and aged 16 to 18 if still in full-time education.

[2] A Benefits Agency office has been regarded as predominantly serving an area where more than half of its case load resides in the area.

Mortgage Interest

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish figures broken down by claimant group for the number of recipients of income support assistance with mortgage interest payments who receive help for (a) less than two months, (b) over two months, (c) over six months and (d) over nine months, giving the most recent available figures.

Mr. Roger Evans: Details are only available for the number of claimants who were receiving mortgage interest payments at the point in time when the survey was carried out. These are set out in the table:

Income support claimants with mortgage interest payments

	Number of mortgage interest claimants by duration of current IS claim
	Less than 2 months 000	2–6 months 000	6–9 months 000	9 months or more 000

All cases	31	76	42	399

"Income Support Statistics Quarterly Enquiry" February 1994.

(1) Figures are rounded to the nearest thousand and may not sum.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the total annual savings accruing to his Department in each of the next five years from the proposed changes to the availability of income support for mortgage interest payments; and what assumptions he has made in making those calculations with regard to the number of people who will not be eligible under the new rules for such payments and the average level of income support no longer payable.

Mr. Roger Evans: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on Thursday 8 December at column 363.

Back-to-work Bonus

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether the proposed back-to-work bonus will be transferable from one spouse to another.

Mr. Roger Evans: The back-to-work bonus will normally be attributed and paid to the person who has made the claim for benefit under which entitlement to the bonus is accrued. In certain circumstances, for example where couples separate, it may be appropriate to transfer bonus amounts between partners. We are looking at the detailed mechanisms for achieving this.

Agency Heads

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 5 December, Official Report, column 2, what considerations led to his decision not to give the details of the terms of employment of heads of agencies.

Mr. Hague: The total remuneration for each agency chief executive appears in their agency accounts. Their entitlement to a performance bonus is largely dependent upon the achievement of a range of specific targets published in the individual business plans. However, the personal pay arrangements for individual members of staff remain confidential.

Income-related Benefits

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the effect on the numbers of claimants of (a) income support, (b) housing benefit, (c) family credit, (d) community charge or council tax benefit and (e) all income-related benefits of the freeze in the limits for capital or savings since 1988.

Mr. Roger Evans: The upper capital limit was raised in April 1990 from £6,000 to £8,000 in income support and family credit and to £16,000 in housing benefit and community charge benefit. Had the lower capital limit of £3,000 been increased in line with the retail prices index to 1994–95 prices, it is estimated that a further 10,000 claimants would become entitled to income support. The effect on the numbers of those claiming other income-related benefits is negligible.

Note:

Estimate based on data drawn from the 1990-91–92 family expenditure surveys, uprated to 1994–95 prices and benefit levels, making adjustments for numbers with capital reported on the 1993 statistical inquiry.

Numbers of claimants are rounded to the nearest 5,000.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the average housing benefit paid to private sector tenants in (a) Southampton (b) Portsmouth and (c) Hampshire; and, in each case, what is the total number of claimants.

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is set out in the table:

	Private sector Housing Benefit recipients	Private sector average weekly Housing Benefit £
Southampton	9,350	51.81
Portsmouth	8,530	50.29
Hampshire	40,510	49.92

Notes:

(1) Figures are for benefit units which may be a single person or a couple;

(2) The caseload and average for Hampshire include Southampton and Portsmouth;

(3) Private sector includes housing associations.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the effect of the abolition of the adult dependency increase paid with unemployment benefit on the number of claimants of income-based jobseeker's allowance in the first 182 days of a claim.

Mr. Roger Evans: It is estimated that, at any one time, 5,000 people would be entitled to income-based jobseeker's allowance as a result of there being no adult dependency increase in the contributory element.

Notes:

(1) Assumes 2.4 million unemployed; 500,000 unemployment benefit cases.

(2) Estimates rounded to the nearest 5,000.

(3) Based on 1993 and 1994 unemployment benefit statistics and the policy simulation model using 1990–91–92 family expenditure survey data.

(4) Assumes contributory entitlement lasts six months.

(5) Estimates do not include tax or behavioural implications.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the cost to public funds of the child maintenance review pack published by the Child Support Agency; and if he will make a statement as to the amount of money earmarked for the Child Support Agency in each of the last two years and, within that budget, how much was earmarked for literature, supporting documents, papers, forms, letters of explanation and other material.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr. Anthony Steen, dated 13 December 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the cost of Child Support Agency publications.

The following data show the costs for 1993–94.

Financial Year 1993–94
Operating costs: £109 million
Publications: £2.5 million
Financial Year 1994–95
Estimated budget: £185 million
Publications: £3 million

Six hundred and forty thousand Child Support Maintenance Review packs have been ordered since April 1993 at a cost of £328,000 over both financial years.

I hope this reply is helpful.

Fraud

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security at what financial threshold the decision is taken on the prosecution of an individual or organisation for social security fraud.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The Benefits Agency uses no financial threshold when deciding whether to initiate criminal proceedings. Each case is considered individually and the amount of benefit overpaid is only one of a number of factors taken into account.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the level of social security fraud.

Mr. Arbuthnot: In the year ending March 1994 Benefits Agency fraud investigators identified 312,000 irregularities and saved an estimated £654 million. Although the full extent of social security fraud is not known, we are examining ways of producing a reliable estimate of the sum which might be involved.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many of the members of the panel on assessment of incapacity who did not agree to publication of their names were or are employed by (a) the Benefits Agency medical service, (b) the Department of Social Security and (c) the Department of Health; how many had medical qualifications; when he decided that the names of members of the panel on assessment of incapacity should not be published without their agreement; what were his reasons for so deciding; if he sought the agreement of organisations responding to the consultation document on assessment of incapacity to the publication of their names in annex 2 to the report "The Medical Assessment for Incapacity Benefit"; and if he will seek the consent of members of the sub-group on mental health and incapacity, who agreed to publication of their names in the report "The Medical Assessment of Incapacity Benefit", to the disclosure of their membership of the sub-group.

Mr. Hague: Of the 10 panel members who did not want their names published, one is employed by the Benefits Agency medical service, one by the Department of Social Security and one by the Department of Health. Of the 10, six have medical qualifications. The panel members undertook their work as individuals and it was considered appropriate that the wishes of those who did not want their names to be made public should be respected.

The organisations listed in annex 2 of the report were responding to a public consultation and it was appropriate for their interest to be acknowledged.

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which of the special advisers serving in his Department during the last five years were subject to positive security vetting.

Mr. Hague: In accordance with current guidance, all special advisers are required to have positive vetting. This Department has complied with this during the last five years.

Public Appointments

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many public appointments (a) he is responsible for making and (b) require his approval, including those not listed in "Public Bodies", and if he will divide this figure into (i) appointments to executive bodies, (ii) appointments to advisory bodies and (iii) other appointments.

Mr. Hague: The information is in the table.

	Number of appointments the Secretary of State is responsible for making	Number of appointments that require approval from the Secretary of State
Executive bodies	11	2
Advisory bodies	[1]876	0
Other bodies	19	0

[1] This figure includes 798 members of local war pension committees.

Mr. Dorrell: During the last Session of Parliament only two questions received the answer that the information requested was not held centrally.

European Year of Older People

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what contribution his Department has made in 1994 to follow up the European Year of Older People and Solidarity between Generations in 1993.

Mr. Dorrell: My Department did not itself launch any special initiatives for the European Year of Older People and Solidarity Between Generations in 1993, or in the following year.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, what is the estimated number of remand prisoners who have been awaiting trial (a) for more than three months, (b) for more than six months (c) for more than 12 months and (d) for more than 18 months at the latest available date.

> The latest available provisional data is for 30 September 1994 and is shown in the attached table.

Inmates recorded as being untried held in custody on 30 September 1994 by time on remand[1]

	Number
For over 3 months up to and including 6 months	1,920
For over 6 months up to and including 12 months	1,270
For over 12 months up to and including 18 months	300
For over 18 months	220

[1] Not all of these defendants will have been in continuous prison custody since their first remand. This period excludes any time spent in non-Prison Service Establishments (eg police cells) before reception on remand into a Prison Service establishment; it excludes inmates who are awaiting trial and those being tried.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum applications have been awaiting decision for more than (a) six years, (b) five years, (c) four years, (d) three years and (e) two years.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: As at 30 November 1994—the latest date for which this information is available—the estimated number of asylum applications outstanding was 54,025. Information on the number of these cases waiting longer than two, three, four, five or six years is not available.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps have been taken to examine the length of detention periods of asylum seekers in relation to the EU human rights convention, article 5.4.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Powers of detention under the Immigration Act 1971 are used only where there is no alternative and where there are good grounds for believing that a person will not comply with the conditions of temporary admission.

Anyone refused asylum may appeal under the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993 and may apply for bail to the independent appellate authorities at any time while an appeal is pending. Bail may also be sought from the appellate authorities by any passenger who has been detained for longer than seven days pending further examination. These statutory provisions are supplemented by the general power of the courts to grant a writ of habeas corpus and to grant bail in any case before them.

Decisions to detain under the Immigration Act 1971 are authorised at Chief Immigration Officer level at least and are reviewed by an Immigration Service inspector within 24 hours. The need for detention is then reviewed locally at least every seven days and after one month at increasingly senior levels.

Gloucestershire Police Authority

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to be able to reply to the request, made on 16 September 1994, by Gloucestershire police authority for a special grant in respect of the Cromwell street murder investigation.

Marriages of Convenience

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to consider new guidelines for immigration officers to avoid a couple remaining separated for an alleged marriage of convenience.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: None.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what training immigration officers receive to enable them to decide if a marriage is one of convenience.

Criminal Justice and Public Order Act

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy that the enforcement of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 will be kept under review.

Inspector of Constabulary

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Constabulary with a statement of the duties which he expects of the inspector of constabulary.

Mr. Howard: As promised in the Government's White Paper on police reform, Cm 2281, I have provided the Chief Inspector of Constabulary with a clear statement of the duties and responsibilities which I expect the inspectorate should fulfil.

The statement emphasises the key role of the inspectorate as an independent watchdog monitoring police performance and ensuring that standards are maintained. I have made it clear that I will also be looking to the inspectorate to report to me on the progress being made by police authorities and forces in establishing local strategies for building effective partnerships between the police and the local community.

I have placed copies of the statement in the Library. I am also arranging for it to be circulated to all chief officers of police and to clerks of police authorities.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 13 December 1994]: The sums spent on research and development by the Department for the last 10 years were reported in the statistical supplement to the "1994 Forward Look of Government-funded Science Engineering and Technology". The Prime Minister: Following consultation with the Leader of the Opposition, and in accordance with section 10 of the Intelligence Services Act, I have appointed the intelligence and security committee as follows:

The right hon. Lord Howe of Aberavon QC
Mr Barry Jones MP
Mr Michael Mates MP
Mr Allan Rogers MP
Sir Giles Shaw MP

In accordance with section 8 of the Intelligence Services Act 1994, I have appointed Lord Justice Stuart-Smith as the Intelligence Services Commissioner for a period of three years. Sir Simon Dennis Brown has been appointed president of the intelligence services tribunal, John Colin McInnes vice-president of the tribunal and Sir Richard Kennedy Harvey Gaskell a member of the tribunal, by royal warrant, each for a period of five years. All appointments take effect from 15 December 1994.

TREASURY

Christmas Expenditure

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much public money will be spent on entertaining, Christmas decorations and other festive activities this Christmas season by his Department and Government agencies answerable to his Department; and of this sum how much will be spent in Ministers' private offices and official residences, including No. 11 Downing street and Dorney Wood.

Mr. Nelson: About £400 will be spent by the Treasury this year on purchasing and decorating four Christmas trees, the tree at the entrance to No. 11 Downing street accounting for approximately £100 of this sum. The only other Christmas-related expenditure borne by the Treasury is a party for representatives of the press to be hosted by the Chancellor at No. 11. This is estimated to cost in the region of £1,150.

European Communities (Finance) Bill

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has anything to add to his statement of 28 November concerning treaty obligations of Her Majesty's Government on the European Communities (Finance) Bill, Official Report, column 953.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The agreement reached at Edinburgh was a political commitment in which the United Kingdom Government gave our word to our EU partners. We expect our partners to keep their word; and they expect us to keep ours. If we were to break our word, the international reputation of the United Kingdom would be severely damaged. The own resources decision will constitute a treaty obligation when the Government notify adoption of it.

Economic and Finance Ministers Council

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the most recent Council meeting of the Economic and Finance Ministers of the European Union.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I represented the United Kingdom at the Economic and Finance Council of the European Union in Brussels on 5 December.

The Council broadly endorsed the Netherlands' convergence programme for 1995 to 1998 and the Commission's assessment of it.

The Council adopted a slightly amended version of the ECOFIN report to the Essen European Council on the employment aspects of the White Paper follow-up, subject to a Belgian reserve. I thoroughly welcomed the report with its analysis of the causes of structural unemployment and in particular the problems caused by high levels of social protection in some areas.

The Council endorsed the "Main Recommendations" of the Christophersen Group report on the trans-European networks aspects of the White Paper follow-up, omitting any reference to possible new Community financial instruments in the future.

The Council adopted the ECOFIN report to the Essen European Council on implementation of the broad economic guidelines requested by the Brussels European Council in December 1993, and carried out the multilateral surveillance required by article 103(3) of the treaty.

The Council agreed in principle to an 85 million ECU loan to the Ukraine subject to the signature of an IMF stand-by arrangement and to the rapid implementation of the EU/G7 action plan for the closure of Chernobyl. The Council noted the exceptional nature of the loan and agreed to a review of EU lending priorities. The Council reached political agreement on Commission proposals to provide macro-financial assistance to Algeria and Slovakia.

The Council agreed with the recommendations of the European Monetary Institute in its opinion that decisions on the transition to the third stage of economic and monetary union will be taken in full accordance with the relevant articles of the treaty and the protocol on the convergence criteria.

The Council heard a presidency progress report on improving the fight against fraud in the Community. The Commission emphasised the need for greater efforts in this area, and circulated a communication showing the areas where it would put emphasis in the coming year. I stressed that the fight against fraud was a top priority for ECOFIN and that strong conclusions would be needed at the forthcoming European Council. I underlined the need for rapid progress to be made on the Commission's programme, particularly on the third pillar legislation, and said that the recent report of the Court of Auditors on the 1993 budget had revealed unacceptable levels of fraud, waste and mismanagement, of great concern to the public.

The Council agreed to an adjustment of the financial perspective to take into account the enlargement of the union.

The Council heard progress reports on taxation of savings, the second VAT simplification directive, the carbon-energy tax and biofuels, but adopted no conclusions.

No formal votes were taken at the Council meeting.

Official Residences (Expenditure)

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many bottles of (a) whisky, (b) other spirits and (c) wine were bought from public funds for use at No. 11 Downing street and his other official residences in 1993–94; how much they cost; how many bottles were consumed in December 1993; and how many he estimates will be consumed at No. 11 Downing street and the other residences in December 1994.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I pay for all drinks consumed on private occasions. Information of this sort about drinks provided for official occasions could be provided only at disproportionate cost to public funds. The hon. Member is wasting an absurd amount of official time and public money by asking a series of parliamentary questions on topics of this kind.

VAT

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a regional breakdown of the projected revenue received from VAT on domestic fuel in (a) the 1994–95 financial year and (b) the 1995–96 financial year.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The latest assessment of regional expenditure is contained in the 1993 family expenditure survey. Any projections to 1994–95 or 1995–96 would be purely speculative.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the amount per week a married couple on average male earnings with two children is estimated to have paid in VAT, at today's prices, in the year 1978–79; and what he estimates a similar family will pay in 1994–95.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 13 December 1994]: A couple with two children on average earnings paid VAT of £7.05 per week in 1978–79, in 1994–95 prices, and an estimated £21.43 in 1994–95. Since 1978–79, the real take-home pay of such a family has risen by over £80 a week.

Credit Unions

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many credit unions were operating in England and in the United Kingdom for (a) 1980, (b) 1990 and (c) in each year since 1990.

Mr. Nelson: Credit unions in Northern Ireland are registered separately from those in Great Britain, and are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland. For credit unions in England and Great Britain, the information requested is as follows:

	Number of credit unions at end of year
	England	Great Britain
1980	43	57
1990	217	275
1991	255	327
1992	299	383
1993	330	427

Inland Revenue Stamp Office

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to provide continuing counter facilities for the Inland Revenue stamp office in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: No. The Cardiff stamp office public counter is little used and no stamp office facilities will be available in Cardiff after that office closes on 30 December 1994. Former Cardiff customers should be able to get their documents stamped and returned by post from another stamp office within the stamp office guide time of five working days.

Interest Rates

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the increase in interest rates on 7 December was at his request or on the recommendation of the Governor of the Bank of England.

Mr. Nelson: As is clear from the published minutes, the Chancellor of the Exchequer is responsible for all interest rate decisions. The Governor's advice at the 7 December meeting will be published on 11 January 1995.

Public Sector Borrowing Requirement

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated borrowing requirement to the end of the current financial year; what is the forecast distribution in terms of interest-bearing assets by length to maturity; and what is the additional cost to the Exchequer of securing the additional debt each year to the last maturity date in (a) nominal terms and (b) real terms, assuming nil inflation.

Mr. Aitken: The public sector borrowing requirement for 1994–95 is forecast to be £34.3 billion. The outturn for the first seven months of the financial year was £19.2 billion, implying borrowing of £15.1 billion between November and March.

The distribution of debt in terms of interest-bearing assets by length to maturity will depend on market conditions. The cost of securing the additional debt will depend on the form of the debt and on market interest rates.

VAT (Airlines)

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he has taken to resolve the issue of the hidden VAT which is incurred by airlines as a consequence of the Civil Aviation Authority's VAT status as a public body.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I am pleased to announce that, from 1 April 1995, the Civil Aviation Authority will be granted taxable status in respect of its supply of en route air navigation services.

This change will enable the CAA to recover the VAT paid in its en-route operating costs and capital expenditure, which is estimated as being in the order of around £30 million per annum. Over £20 million of this, representing VAT on en-route operating costs, will be passed directly to the airlines in the form of lower charges. The remainder, formerly incurred on the CAA's capital spending, can be used to fund the CAA's investment programme.

This change removes a source of potential discrimination against United Kingdom airlines, and will be widely welcomed by the airline industry.

Income Tax

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people were removed from the income tax net in (a) 1990–91, (b) 1991–92 and (c) 1992–93.

Sir George Young [holding answer 13 December 1994]: Information on numbers of taxpayers is published in table 2.1 of Inland Revenue Statistics 1994, a copy of which is in the Library.

Customs and Excise

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will list those ports and airports which do not have permanently staffed Customs checks and operate a system whereby entrants telephone Customs if they have anything to declare; and how many calls were received by Customs on its telephone in each month of 1993 and 1994;

(2) if he will list those ports and airports in which Customs checks are not permanently staffed.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 8 December 1994]: There are no Custom-free ports or airports. Over recent years customs enforcement strategy has progressively moved away from a static presence at all ports and airports towards more flexible checks operated by fast response teams targeted at both areas and time of highest risk. At major ports and airports these anti-smuggling teams are based on site; the smaller places being covered by mobile anti-smuggling teams based elsewhere. It would not be in the public interest to identify all these smaller ports and airports.

As a part of the overall Customs strategy, which encompasses both anti-smuggling and fiscal controls, there are some locations where entrants can telephone Customs if they have anything to declare for fiscal purposes. A list of such locations is shown in the table and where the information is available, the number of calls received by Customs for each of 1993 and 1994 is also shown.

Humberside international airport

Telephone introduced in April 1993, three calls received to date but no record of months.

Leeds Bradford airport

No record kept of the number of calls received but estimated by local management at round six per month.

Bristol airport The total calls received were as follows:

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Treasury Solicitors

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Attorney-General in what ways the Law Society professional code of conduct applies to Treasury solicitors.

The Attorney-General: The Treasury Solicitor's Department employs solicitors and barristers. As individuals they are all answerable to the profession to which they belong. When acting in the name of the department, the relevant professional standards apply to them.

Marshall v. Southampton and South West Area Health Authority

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Attorney-General (1) what advice was given to Government Departments about the effect of Marshall v. Southampton and South West area health authority (No. 1);

(2) if advice was given to all Government Departments about the effect of Marshall v. Southampton and South West area health authority (No. 1).

The Attorney-General: By convention, the Law Officers do not normally disclose whether advice has been given on a particular issue or the substance of any advice that they may have given.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Advisory Bodies

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the functions and objectives of (a) the Coal Task Force, (b) the Engineering Technology Advisory Committee, (c) the Industrial Development Advisory Board, (d) the Information Technology Advisory Board and (e) the Innovation Advisory Board.

Mr. Heseltine: The information requested is as follows:

(a) Coal Task Force

The task force has now been superseded by the Advisory Committee on Coal Research.

(b) Engineering Technology Advisory Committee

I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given on 6 December, Official Report, column 126.

(c) Industrial Development Advisory Board

IDAB is appointed under section 10 of the Industrial Development Act 1982 to advise me as Secretary of State on the granting of selective financial assistance under sections 7 and 8 of the Act.

(d) Information Technology Advisory Board

Responsibility for ITAB was a matter for the Engineering and Physical Sciences Research Council, however I understand that the Board was wound up in July of this year.

(e) Innovation Advisory Board

The Board was wound up in September 1993.

Arms Exports

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on what date the Cymbeline artillery locating system was given an export licence for export to Iraq.

Mr. Heseltine: It has been the policy of successive Administrations not to disclose details about export licences that have been issued. However, the Government reserve the right to release the information, in exceptional circumstances, where it is in the public interest. This is one of those exceptional cases.

Since 1985, export licences have been issued for the export of Cymbeline radars and spares to Iraq on: 28 June 1985, 18 and 20 June 1986, 1 September 1986, 8 January 1987, 11 August 1987, 16 May 1988, 22 November 1988, 19 January 1989 and 7 July 1989. Two of the export licences were revalidated on 2 March 1990. Existing licences were withdrawn by, and returned to, the DTI following the imposition of sanctions on Iraq in August 1990.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will indicate the amount of public subsidy to the export of armaments in the last five years for which figures are available and the projected figure for the next twelve months.

Mr. Needham: Sales of defence equipment sold on credit terms of two years or more and insured by ECGD are eligible for support under the Department's fixed rate export finance scheme.

In the four years up to 1992–93 a net public expenditure cost was incurred under the scheme as a whole but in the last financial year there were net receipts. The breakdown of these figures between defence and civil business is not collected and is not readily obtainable.

Sir David Steel: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy that the increase in export credits will not be used to facilitate arms deals with countries with poor human rights records.

Mr. Needham: The export licensing system, which is the responsibility of the DTI's export licensing unit takes account of issues such as the human rights record of overseas Governments. The insurance cover provided by the Export Credits Guarantee Department is conditional on export licences being obtained where required.

Junk Mail

Sir David Steel: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he has taken to prevent the sending of junk mail.

Mr. Ian Taylor: Persons who do not wish to receive unsolicited mail can register with the mailing preference service. This will normally filter out 90 per cent. of such mail. I have no plans to impose any further restrictions.

Nuclear Energy

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will set out the ways in which the Government's policy of ensuring that energy services are provided to customers in a commercial environment in which consumers pay the full cost of the energy sources they consume, as outlined in the White Paper on the prospects for coal, apply in regard to nuclear energy.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The White Paper "The Prospect for Coal" Cm 2235, explained that transitional arrangements in the form of the nuclear non-fossil fuel option and the fossil fuel levy were put in place at the time of electricity privatisation to enable the full costs of nuclear generation in England and Wales to be met. These arrangements are being assessed by the nuclear review.

Government Chemist

Dr. Moonie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the statutory powers and duties of (a) the Government Chemist and (b) the Laboratory of the Government Chemist.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The Government Chemist is named as referee analyst under the following pieces of legislation:

Food Safety Act 1990 and Food Safety (Sampling and Qualifications) Regulations 1990
Agriculture Act 1970
Medicines Act 1968 and Medicines (Animal Feeding Stuffs) (Enforcement) Regulations 1985
Farm and Garden Chemicals Act 1967
Agriculture (Poisonous Substances) Act 1952
Rag Flock and Other Filling Materials Act 1951
Poultry Meat (Water Content) (Scotland) Regulations 1983
Poultry Meat (Water Content) Regulations 1984
Natural Mineral Waters Regulations 1985
Materials and Articles in Contact with Food Regulations 1987
The Plastic Materials and Articles in Contact with Food Regulations 1992.

In addition, the Government Chemist is named as authorised analyst under the Hydrocarbon Oil Duties Act 1979. Under the Poisons Act 1972 there is provision for the appointment of the Government Chemist to carry out a function personal to him.

Where required the work to carry out analyses under these pieces of legislation is generally undertaken by the Laboratory of the Government Chemist.

The Laboratory of the Government Chemist is included as a point of reference in the following legislation:

Notification of New Substances Regulations 1982
Merchant Shipping (Life-Saving Appliances) Regulations 1986
Merchant Shipping (Life Saving Appliances for Passenger Ships of Classes III to Via) Regulations 1992
Food Safety (Sampling and Qualifications) Regulations 1990
The Public Supply Contracts Regulations 1991

Dr. Moonie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what conditions will be placed on the sale or transfer of the Laboratory of the Government Chemist to ensure its continuing independence and impartiality.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The Secretary of State will impose appropriate conditions; these are under consideration.

Dr. Moonie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what powers he has to enforce the carrying out of the statutory role of (a) the Government Chemist and (b) the Laboratory of the Government Chemist; and how these powers will be affected by sale or transfer of the laboratory.

Mr. Ian Taylor: Responsibility for making and terminating the appointment of the Government Chemist, who is currently also the chief executive of the Laboratory of the Government Chemist, falls to my Department. It is not intended that this will change on privatisation.

At present the Department has powers over the carrying out of the statutory role of the Government Chemist and of the staff under his direction through their terms and conditions of employment as civil servants. Upon privatisation, it is expected that the Government Chemist will continue to be appointed by the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry within the privatised laboratory and that the terms of the appointment will require that appointee to carry out the statutory functions.

Dr. Moonie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the value of contracts placed with the Laboratory of the Government Chemist in the financial year 1993–94 by (a) his Department, (b) other individual Government Departments and (c) individual executive agencies.

Mr. Ian Taylor: In 1993–94 the Laboratory of the Government Chemist received income from the following:

		£ million
(a)	Department of Trade and Industry	7.4
(b)	Her majesty's Customs and Excise	1.7
	Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food	1.3
	Ministry of Defence	1.1
	Department of Health	0.65
	Department of Environment[1]	0.45
	Department of Transport	0.15
(c)	Intervention Board	0.6
	Social Security Benefits Agency	0.2

[1] This includes income from organisations that were part of DoE at the outset of the financial year but changed their status during it.

In addition, a further £0.6 million approximately was received from other central Government customers, including departments and individual executive agencies, consisting predominantly of amounts below £0.1 million.

Dr. Moonie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much the Laboratory of the Government Chemist will spend on non-contract strategic research in the financial year 1993–94.

Mr. Ian Taylor: In 1993–94 the Laboratory of the Government Chemist spent approximately £250,000 on its own strategic research relating to selected areas of analytical science to enhance its technical capabilities. A similar outturn for 1994–95 is expected.

Dr. Moonie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what arrangements will be made for the pensions of current and former staff of the Laboratory of the Government Chemist following sale or transfer of the laboratory.

Mr. Ian Taylor: On privatisation, the new company will be required to provide broadly comparable pension arrangements. The Government Actuary will provide an independent analysis of comparability between existing pension arrangements and those proposed after privatisation. The pension arrangements of former LGC staff will not be affected.

Energy Advisory Panel

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the current members of the energy advisory panel; if he will give details of their background and expertise; and on what dates the panel has met since March 1993.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The current members of the energy advisory panel, with their relevant background, are as follows:

Electricity Trading Report

Mr. Trend: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the Director General of Electricity Supply's report, "Trading Outside the Pool".

Mr. Eggar: I welcome the director general's report and accept his conclusions. I note that further reforms in pool trading are anticipated. I look forward to further reforms in the way the uplift element of the pool price is handled and share the director general's wish to see progress in permitting local trades between generators and second tier suppliers - that is, trades on the customer side of a grid supply point rather than trades across the grid itself.

The director general has stated that he would be prepared to reconsider the issue of "Trading Outside the Pool" at some future date if circumstances warranted. I consider this a sensible and pragmatic conclusion.

Patent Office Agency

Mr. Trend: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, if he will make a statement on the outcome of the review of the Patent Office Agency.

Mr. Heseltine: I am pleased to announce that the review is now complete. A summary of the consultants' report, edited to omit commercially sensitive information, has been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. It is customary to review the status and performance of all agencies, as a matter of course, three years after their establishment. I am satisfied that the Patent Office has performed well during this period. It is meeting the legitimate expectations of users and improvements in quality of service were recognised by the award of a charter mark in 1993. Since relocation to Newport, Gwent, in 1991, the office has also reduced its cost base by about £7 million per annum, it has become a trading fund, and it has introduced a range of commercial disciplines. These will all contribute to securing its long-term future.

I have considered whether the Patent Office should be privatised and believe that this should remain an option for the longer term. I have also looked at the scope for large-scale contractorisation. But the nature and extent of the Patent Office's statutory functions would require special arrangements in this case to safeguard their proper exercise, and so render this option less attractive. I have therefore decided to confirm the status of the Patent Office as an executive agency. I will be setting new targets to take effect from 1 April 1995 which will require the Patent Office to continue its drive to improve efficiency and quality of service and these will encourage the Patent Office to contract out activities wherever this is compatible with its statutory role and good value for money. The aim is for the Patent Office to continue to provide a first rate service to its users. The office is a valuable asset in terms of its information resource and analytical expertise, and I will also support its endeavours to work with private sector partners to seek out new business opportunities both in the United Kingdom and overseas. Experience of the development of such partnerships as well as all options for ownership and delivery of service will be re-examined in any future review.

Postal Services

Mr. Trend: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will give details of responses to the Government Green Paper, "The Future of Postal Services".

Mr. Eggar: By the end of the consultation period on 30 September, there had been some 13,400 responses to the Green Paper. A further 2,000 responses were received after 30 September.

Responses fell into two categories. The first category came from individual members of the public and local organisations and tended to be short responses on the principle of privatisation. The second category—some 50 responses in all—came from organisations with more specific interests in the future of postal services, including representatives of users, competitors and postal employees.

Of the first category, over half of responses were pre-printed postcards or short standard form letters issued by organisations opposed to the Government's proposals. Among the significant majority of letters there was confusion as to the detail of what the Government were proposing and little acknowledgement of the safeguards proposed in the Green Paper.

The second category of more detailed responses was more difficult to summarise. Many of them took the form of lengthy documents analysing the options and other points of detail, with a wide variety of views being expressed. There was, however, an overall majority in this category in favour of privatisation of the Royal Mail and Parcelforce.

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which of the special advisers serving in his Department during the last five years were subject to positive security vetting.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 13 December 1994]: All special advisers are currently required to have positive vetting.

Consultancy Assistance Scheme

Mr. Pendry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the companies in the north-west which benefited from the marketing initiative under the consultancy assistance scheme of the now defunct enterprise initiative.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 12 December 1994]: The take-up of the consultancy initiative by north-west companies, and their satisfaction with the scheme, were amongst the highest in the country. Since it started in January 1988, over 19,000 north-west companies have benefitted from the consultancy initiative. More than 3,500 companies chose the marketing option, although their names cannot be revealed for reasons of commercial confidentiality.

Ian Greer Associates

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on how many occasions departmental officials met representatives of Ian Greer Associates in the last month to discuss matters relating to their client's interests.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 12 December 1994]: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

ENVIRONMENT

European Charter of Self-government

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Government will sign the European charter of self-government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The Government have no plans to sign the European charter of local self-government. Local government is not suitable for regulation by international convention.

Hares

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the population of hares in the United Kingdom in the period from 1979 to date.

Mr. Atkins: The Government-funded national hare survey, carried out during the winters of 1991–92 and 1992–93 estimated the British population to be somewhere between 680,000 and 954,000. There are no figures available for Northern Ireland.

Negative Equity

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many home buyers who took out a mortgage in (a) 1988, (b) 1989, (c) 1990 and (d) 1991 are now experiencing negative equity in each region.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: An estimate of the number of home buyers who took out a mortgage in each of the years 1988 to 1991, still affected by negative equity, by region, based on Department of the Environment house price data is as follows:

(thousands)

Region	1988	1989	1990	1991
South East	73.5	105.0	94.9	65.8
Greater London	18.2	24.8	24.4	11.3
South West	20.7	36.6	33.5	18.3
East Anglia	10.1	18.7	11.7	6.6
East Midlands	—	3.6	3.1	3.5
West Midlands	—	0.8	3.8	1.5
Wales	—	—	—	2.9
Yorks and Humberside	—	—	—	6.3
North West	—	—	—	—

Scotland	—	—	—	—
Northern Ireland	—	—	—	—
United Kingdom	122.5	189.5	171.4	116.3

Greenhouse Gases

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the effect of levying value added tax on standing charges for fuel on the United Kingdom's emissions of greenhouse gases.

Mr. Atkins: The introduction of VAT on domestic fuel and power at the standard rate was expected to reduce carbon dioxide emissions by 1.5 millions tonnes of carbon per annum. The effect on emissions of levying VAT on standing charges has not been separately assessed.

Water

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to promote competition in the water industry.

Mr. Atkins: We are keen to encourage competition wherever it is appropriate and the Competition and Service (Utilities) Act 1992 introduced a number of measures to facilitate it in the case of water.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the present amount of accumulated debt of each of the district authorities in England.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: I have placed the information requested about the amount of accumulated debt of each of the district councils in England in the Library of the House.

"Going for Green" Committee

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of meetings held, the secretarial and advisory arrangements, the budgeted and actual expenditure and the subjects of any reports and submissions produced by the "Going for Green" committee since its inception.

Mr. Atkins: The Government panel on sustainable development has met four times since it was established in January 1994. It intends to produce its first report early in 1995. Administrative support for the panel is provided by staff seconded to the Cabinet Office. Panel members receive expenses only.

Energy Efficiency Scheme

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of the budget of the home energy efficiency scheme is spent promoting the scheme to those eligible for funding under the scheme.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Some £500,000—about 0.7 per cent. of the total budget of the home energy efficiency scheme—is being spent in the current financial year on promotion. Current demand for the scheme indicates that knowledge of its existence is widespread, and that this level of promotion is both appropriate and consistent with the need to ensure that the available funds are used, as far as possible, to pay grants.

Housing

Mr. Hinchcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the impact of the proposed reduction in housing association investment on the number of homes available for rent.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Housing associations can provide homes for rent through the Housing Corporation's approved development programme in two ways: new homes for rent funded by the rental programme; and lettings freed up by the corporation's home ownership initiatives which are targeted at existing public sector tenants. The Housing Corporation estimates that through these programmes it will be able to provide over 46,000 new rented lettings in 1995–96. This compares with the estimate of 43,500 new rented lettings in 1995–96 published in December 1993.

Radioactive Waste

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) when he expects the radioactive waste management advisory committee to publish its 20 year review;

(2) when he expects the radioactive waste management advisory committee and advisory committee on the safety of muclear installations to publish their joint report on site selection and safety criteria for the deep disposal of radioactive waste.

Mr. Atkins: The reports, which I have not yet received, will be published in due course.

Housing Corporation

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the forthcoming finance, management and policy review of the Housing Corporation.

Mr. Curry: As part of the Government's programme of regular five-yearly finance, management and policy reviews of non-departmental public bodies my Department will conduct a thorough review of the Housing Corporation beginning on 3 January 1995. The first stage of the review will take the form of a prior options study. This will assess the extent to which the corporation's functions are necessary for the achievement of the Government's policies, and whether there is scope for privatising, contracting out, or transferring all or part of its functions to another body. The study will take into account Government's continuing support for a programme of new lettings at subsidised rents delivered through housing associations.

The progress made by the corporation since the previous review in 1990 will be examined and the results of that examination and of the prior options study will inform a detailed review of the corporation's policy and financial management systems.

To minimise the uncertainty the prior options study will cause, I expect that study to be completed within four months. The time required for the more detailed review cannot be foreseen, but I would expect it to last no longer than eight months.

In carrying out the study my Department will consult widely with housing organisations and others with an interest in the corporation's work.

Research

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what sum was spent by his Department on research in each of the last 10 years; what percentage this was of the total annual budget; what is the research budget for the forthcoming year; what percentage this is of his total budget; and what additional new research is to be undertaken.

Sir Paul Beresford [holding answer 13 December 1994]: Expenditure by the Department of the Environment on research and development in each of the last 10 years in £ millions and as a percentage of the total annual budget, is presented below:

Years	Research spend	Percentage of total annual budget
1985–86	39.6	0.198
1986–87	52.4	0.248
1987–88	54.2	0.244
1988–89	54.3	0.240
1989–90	61.9	0.260
1990–91	69.9	0.243
1991–92	89.0	0.239
1992–93	91.6	0.222
1993–94	90.5	0.230
1994–95	93.9	0.239

The expenditure on research and development in the coming year has still to be finalised and will be reported in the statistical supplement to the "1995 Forward Look of Government-Funded Science, Engineering and Technology". The changes in the content of my departmental research in the coming years will be described in the main part of the forward look

Dog Fouling

Sir Graham Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will introduce national poop scoop legislation for dog fouling;

(2) what estimate he has made of the level of dog fouling in the United Kingdom; and what information he has about it as a major source of filth and disease in urban areas;

(3) what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the existing system of byelaws in improving the environment concerning dog fouling.

Mr. Atkins: The Government accept the conclusion of the advisory group on litter that the present complex system of byelaw control for dog fouling in England and Wales is unsatisfactory We therefore propose to simplify the system so that local authorities can introduce poop scoop measures in designated areas, without reference to central Government. We also propose that there should be a fixed penalty scheme for dog fouling offences to help local authorities enforce the measures. We believe that these measures will go a long way to addressing the group's wish to see a national poop scoop offence created across England and Wales.

My Department has made no estimate of dog fouling in the United Kingdom. I understand that the pet advisory committee has estimated that approximately 1,200 tonnes of faeces are produced each day by dogs in the United Kingdom. In 1993 a survey by the Tidy Britain Group found that about one in six public places in the United Kingdom had dog fouling present. Within this sample, one in three off-street areas such as parks, playgrounds and car parks were fouled.

DEFENCE

Energy Expenditure

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total expenditure on energy for each property owned or leased by his Department for the use of Ministers in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Soames: The only property leased by my Department for use by Ministers is a flat in Admiralty house, Whitehall, which is occupied by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence. Energy costs for this property are not metered separately; they fall to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, which is responsible for the utilities costs of the whole building. The amounts attributable to the flat cannot therefore be separately identified.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total expenditure on energy for offices and buildings by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Soames: Statistics on energy expenditure are not maintained centrally for all the offices and buildings occupied by my Department's staff or for the agencies, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. For headquarters office accommodation, however, the costs were as follows:

	1991–92 £	1992–93 £	1993–94 £
Electricity	3,418,910	3,923,836	4,121,307
Gas	314,140	254,627	280,189
Water	590,975	543,146	424,877
Oil	642,733	703,405	530,000

European Fighter Aircraft

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what controls on future export sales form part of the European fighter aircraft international partnership agreement; and how these controls are to be exercised by the partner nations in the project.

Mr. Freeman: The arrangements for the sale of Eurofighter 2000 to third parties are set out in the general memorandum of understanding signed by the four partner nations and are reflected in the development contracts. In the development phase, industry must inform the partner nations before licence rights or sales to third parties can be granted, and the participating nations can require industry to refrain from granting such rights or impose conditions on the sale.

Expenditure

Mr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide figures for defence expenditure from 1978–79 to 1997–98 using the basis used for the calculation in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" 1995–96.

Mr. Soames: The information requested is as follows:

	£ million
1978–79	21,760
1979–80	23,092
1980–81	23,755
1981–82	24,224
1982–83	25,834
1983–84	26,549
1984–85	28,040
1985–86	27,822
1986–87	27,224
1987–88	26,567
1988–89	25,295
1989–90	25,559
1990–91	25,292
1991–92	26,188
1992–93	23,611
1993–94	22,757
1994–95	22,071
1995–96	20,627
1996–97	20,310
1997–98	20,219

(1) All figures are in £ million and are converted to constant 1993–94 prices using the GDP deflators published in the Financial Statement and Budget Report 1995–96. Outturn information is given from 1978–79 to 1993–94. The 1994-295 total is the estimated outturn and figures for 1995–96 to 1997–98 are the latest plans published in the FSBR 1995–96.

(2) Figures are adjusted for technical changes in the treatment of Armed Forces and civilian pensions described in the 1992 Autumn Statement Cm 2096, and other classification changes.

(3) Figures before 1992–93 include expenditure relating to the security and intelligence services. Comparisons with later years' figures cannot be made on a fully consistent basis.

(4) Totals include expenditure on the Falklands and Gulf conflicts but exclude Gulf burden—sharing contributions received in 1990–91 and 1991–92.

Military Training

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to share military training between Salisbury plain and Otterburn.

Mr. Soames: Because the Salisbury plain training area cannot accommodate all the training demands placed on it and has to be managed at a level which will not cause unacceptable environmental damage,it is intended that the Otterburn training area will, in future, be used for live firing of both MLRS and AS90. Although a proportion of AS90 live firing and tactical movement and MLRS manoeuvre training will continue at Salisbury plain, no MLRS live firing will be carried out there in the foreseeable future.

Public Relations

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State of Defence if he will set out his Department's expenditure on public relations in 1989–90, 1990–91, 1991–92, 1992–93 and 1993–94, and planned expenditure in 1994–95.

Mr. Soames: The earliest year for which figures are readily available is 1991–92. Figures which relate to expenditure on films, exhibitions, publications, equipment and headquarters staff and operating costs are:

Year	£
1991–92	5,490,000
1992–93	5,520,000
1993–94	5,450,000

The estimated expenditure figure for 1994—95 is £7,305,000 which includes expenditure on WWII commemorations.

Expenditure on public relations outside my Department's HQ is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Sexual Harassment

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he has taken to prevent sexual harassment in the armed forces.

Mr. Soames: It is made clear throughout the armed forces that ill-treatment of any sort is not tolerated. Any complaints of harassment are investigated and, if proven, appropriate action is taken. In April 1994, the Army issued guidelines on dealing with and preventing sexual harassment. The Royal Navy and Royal Air Force are in the process of drawing up similar guidelines.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how the EC code of practice on measures to combat sexual harassment has been brought to the attention of service personnel.

Mr. Soames: A single code of practice for civilian staff, covering all forms of harassment, including sexual harassment, is being prepared to update existing procedures. This new code takes account of the EC code of practice and when it has been finalised, its provisions will be incorporated into the services' guidelines on dealing with harassment.

Committee on Women

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library all minutes and working party reports of the committee on women in NATO forces from 1976 to the present time.

Mr. Soames: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

Benefits and Remuneration

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library details of the entire benefits and remuneration package enjoyed by men and women in the armed forces from 1976 to the present time.

Mr. Soames: Full details of the entitlements to, and levels of, allowance since 1976 are not held centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost. The key documents relating to the remuneration of members of the armed forces for the period requested are, however, already in the Library of the House. They include:

Reports of the Armed Forces Pay Review Body

Royal Navy Orders in Council made under Section 3 of the Naval and Marine Pay and Pensions Act 1865

The Army Pay Warrant

The Army Pensions Warrant

Queen's Orders for the RAF Pay, Allowances and Pensions made under Section 2 of the Air Force Constitution Act 1917

The Queen's Regulations for the Royal Navy, the Army and the Royal Air Force

Equality

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what working party reports on equality in the armed forces were prepared between 1976 and the present time; and what were the dates upon which they reported.

Mr. Soames: In the time available it has not been possible to establish whether any such reports were prepared, other than that referred to in my answer to the hon. Member of 30 November, Official Report, column 784. It is not my Department's practice to release internal planning documents of this kind.

Nerve Agent Pre-treatment Tablets

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what advice he has received regarding the standard prescribed dosage for nerve agent pre-treatment set tablets.

Mr. Soames: The nerve agent pre-treatment set standard dose of one 30 mg tablet taken eight-hourly was based on scientific and medical advice following studies to establish the efficacy and safety of the constituent drug Pyridostigmine bromide as a nerve agent pre-treatment. Those studies showed effective protection at this dosage with only occasional minor side effects, which cease when the tablets are stopped.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if civilians serving with the Merchant Navy and based in Plymouth were prescribed a course of nerve agent pre-treatment set tablets prior to and during Operation Granby; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: All personnel deployed to the Gulf theatre of operations, including those MOD civilians working in support of the Navy, were issued with NAPS tablets for their personal administration against the risk of chemical nerve agent attack. All personnel were briefed not to exceed the stated dose and were advised when to commence taking NAPS tablets.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the standard prescribed dosage of nerve agent pre-treatment set tablets was exceeded (a) during biological and chemical defence training in preparation for Operation Granby and (b) during Operation Granby.

Mr. Soames: During biological and chemical warfare training, personnel are instructed on the purpose and proper administration of nerve agent pre-treatment set tablets and are advised that the stated dose should not be exceeded. The standard dosage of one 30mg NAPS tablet to be taken every eight hours is shown clearly on the packet, which also advises that the standard dose should not be exceeded.

The actual taking of NAPS tablets does not form part of chemical and biological training, and we have no evidence to suggest that personnel exceeded the stated dosage during Operation Granby.

Tornado

Dr. David Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of the Tornado F3 aircraft serviced by Airworks Ltd at RAF St. Athan are no longer capable of operational duties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Of the Tornado F3 aircraft that entered the fatigue modification programme with Airwork, 16 require repair. All of these will be recovered to a fully operational state and returned to the RAF.

Married Quarters

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what expenditure was made by his Department on developing proposals for the creation of the housing trust for the disposal of married quarters.

Mr. Soames: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Milton Keynes, North-East (Mr. Butler) of 8 December 1994, Official Report, column 303, how much money the contract won buy the investment bank, Nat West Markets, for the development of further proposals for the transfer of the married quarters estate is worth.

Mr. Soames: The price of this contract is commercially confidential.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many units the married housing quarters estate owned by his Department consists of; and what proportion of the estate is currently empty.

Mr. Soames: As at 30 September, the married quarter housing estate owned by my Department consisted of 73,595 properties, of which 11,729 were vacant. Included in these figures were 2,744 properties in the process of sale, of which 2,014 were vacant. The majority of the other empty properties were undergoing or awaiting major maintenance, held for future deployments, or formed part of the management margin needed to ensure that accommodation is available for entitled service families.

Desert Storm Syndrome

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the recent United States Senate Committee for Veteran Affairs' report on Desert Storm syndrome; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: My Department is aware of a report dated 8 November 1994, written by the majority staff of the Senate Committee on Veterans' Affairs, entitled "Is Military Research Hazardous to Veterans' Health? Lessons Spanning Half a Century". As with all material relating to the alleged Desert Storm syndrome, my Department will be reviewing the scientific and medical basis for the report and evaluating the relevance of it, if any, to our own investigations into the claimed Gulf war-related illnesses among UK armed forces personnel.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Rents

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the full-year effect on social security expenditure of the proposal to cover only 50 per cent. of rent above the average for similar properties in an area for new claimants and those moving home after October 1995.

Mr. Roger Evans: Much will depend on the definition of the average and other factors, including the behaviourial effects of the proposals. However, the estimated savings to housing benefit from this proposal from October 1995 to October 1996 are around £40 million. The projected cost of housing benefit expenditure over this period will be published in the social security departmental report in the normal way.

Pensions

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) men and (b) women aged over 65 years who qualified for a state pension based on their own contributions did not qualify for the full rate of state pension; and what proportion those figures represent of the total of (i) men, (ii) women and (iii) men and women in receipt of state pension.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The information is in the table.

Mr. Arbuthnot: At 31 March 1994, the latest date in respect of which information is available, the average rate of additional pension payable as a component of retirement pension was:

£9.53 for women aged 60 to 64 years

£14.12 for men aged 65 to 69 years

Notes:

1. Figures do not include—

(a) women aged 60 to 64 and men aged 65 to 69 receiving additional pension as a component of invalidity pension,

(b) women aged 60 to 64 receiving additional pension as a component of widow's benefit,

(c) women aged 60 to 64 and men aged 65 to 69 whose entitlement to additional pension is fully extinguished by a contracted-out deduction arising from membership of a contracted-out occupational pension scheme or an approved personal pension scheme,

(d) persons with no entitlement to additional pension.

2. Figures are for persons resident in Great Britain.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of (a) men aged 65 years and (b) women aged 60 years received a state earnings-related pension at the latest available date.

Mr. Arbuthnot: At 31 March 1994, the latest date in respect of which information is available, 71.8 per cent. of men aged 65 and 35.2 per cent. of women aged 60 were in receipt of additional pension payable as a component of state retirement pension.

3. Population figures used are Government Actuary's Department 1992 based estimates.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) men aged 65 years and over and (b) women aged 60 years and over were in receipt of state pension in the latest available date.

Mr. Arbuthnot: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 25 October, Official Report, column 428 to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Broadgreen (Mrs. Kennedy).

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) men aged 65 to 69 years and (b) women aged 60 to 64 years were receiving an occupational pension at the latest available date.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The most recent estimates available[1] show that in 1992 there were 1 million men aged 65 to 69 years and 0.4 million women aged 60 to 64 years in receipt of an occupational pension.

[1] Estimates are derived from the 1992 Family Expenditure Survey; and "Occupational Pension Schemes 1991—Ninth survey by the Government Actuary".

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many women aged over 60 years are currently not eligible for state pension as a result of an insufficient national insurance contribution record.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The information requested is not available.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many women eligible for the state pension in the latest available year received the full state pension; and what percentage of women this represents of (a) the female population, (b) the female population aged over 60 years and (c) the female population in receipt of state pension.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the effect on Government revenues in a full year of the real increase in non-dependent deductions from housing benefit.

Mr. Roger Evans: The estimated savings from the real increase in non-dependant deductions in housing benefit from April 1995 are £35 million in a full year.

Source:

The 1990–91–92 family expenditure surveys uprated to 1994–95 prices and benefit levels. Figures rounded to the nearest £5 million.

Family Credit

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give reasons for waiting until October 1996 to pilot his proposed scheme for extending family credit to childless couples and individuals.

Mr. Roger Evans: The timing of introduction of the proposed pilot scheme is dictated by the need to develop and consult on the evaluation methodology and the criteria for selecting pilot areas; to draw up detailed rules for the new benefit and develop supporting IT systems; and to allow time for the introduction of jobseeker's allowance in April 1996. An earlier introduction would be operationally difficult and would risk confusion between the effects of the new benefit and those of the jobseeker's allowance itself.

National Insurance

Mr. Hawksley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many persons are eligible for a national insurance card.

Mr. Arbuthnot: Everyone who is registered for national insurance on the national insurance recording system is eligible to receive a national insurance number card. It is estimated that, at 5 December, there were 62,058,200 people registered on the system.

European Year of Older People

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what contribution his Department has made in 1994 to follow up European Year of Older People and Solidarity between Generations in 1993.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The year 1994 is viewed both in the United Kingdom and within the Community as a year of evaluation and consolidation of the achievements of the European year. We maintain close links with the voluntary sector and have provided the sum of £20,000 towards the setting up of a small secretariat to take this work forward.

Income Support

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what discussions he held with the insurance companies prior to his announcement of changes to the provision of income support for mortgage interest.

Mr. Roger Evans: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Southhampton, Itchen (Mr. Denham), on 7 December, Official Report, column 363.

VAT on Fuel

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the reasons for the recall of recently printed pension books relating to VAT compensation.

Mr. Roger Evans: As a result of the decision not to increase the level of VAT on domestic fuel to 17.5 per cent., the rate of retirement pension, and certain other benefits, from April 1995 has been revised. Some books containing payments at the incorrect rate had already been issued and these will be replaced.

Disabled People

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) on what date he intends to publish the Government's proposed Bill on discrimination against disabled people;

(2) if he will be publishing the Government's proposed Bill on discrimination against disabled people before the Christmas recess.

Mr. Hague: The Bill will be published shortly once the detailed contents have been finalised.

Child Support

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the practicalities of introducing a lower rate of assessable income for child maintenance in retrospective cases, as recommended by the Social Security Select Committee, fifth report of Session 1993–94, HC 470; and when he will report his findings to the House.

Mr. Lilley: I have today written to the Chairman of the Committee, providing the exemplifications it requested; and I have placed a copy of the letter in the Library.

Contributions Agency

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he intends to evaluate the introduction of the Contributions Agency, in line with the next steps principles.

Mr. Arbuthnot: I am pleased to announce that an evaluation report on the Contributions Agency has been published today. It shows clearly that the introduction of the agency has proved successful and is a sound base on which to build. The report sets out the many improvements that have resulted from agency status, both in the agency's specific areas of responsibility and in their positive impact on the work of this Department as a whole.

Copies of the report have been placed in the Library.

Inquiries about the report should be addressed to: Ms C. Thompson, Department of Social Security, Room 0903, The Adelphi building, 1-11 John Adam street, London WC2N 6HT.

Social Fund

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many social fund applications for (a) grants and (b) loans have been turned down in each local office in the Benefits Agency southern territory in each year since 1990–91;

(2) how many social fund applications for (a) grants and (b) loans were turned down even though the applicant fulfilled qualifying criteria due to local budgeting restriction in each local office in the Benefits Agency southern territory in each year since 1990–91.

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. John Denham, dated 13 December 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions asking how many Social Fund grant and loan applications were refused, and how many were refused due to local budgeting restrictions, for each local office in the Benefits Agency's Southern Territory since 1990/91.

Information for 1990/91 is not available in the format requested; this is because the Southern Territory has only existed from April 1991 when the Benefits Agency was formed. However, I have provided details of the number of loan and grant applications refused in each of the Districts in the Southern Territory for the years 1991/92, 1992/93 and 1993/94 at Annex A; a copy has been placed in the Library. The number refused on the grounds of insufficient priority for the same period has been provided at Annex B and a copy has also been placed in the Library.

The new Social Fund Computer System (SFCS), introduced in 1993/94, collects additional statistics which were not held on the previous system. Many statistical items are collected differently and are not directly comparable with earlier years. The previous system recorded reasons for refusal per application whereas SFCS records reasons for refusal per item requested. In cases where a partial award is made, a reason for refusal will also be appropriate. As SCFS was introduced into Districts on a rollout basis throughout 1993/94, the figures for that year will be a combination of the information held on the two systems.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Notes:

1. Figures have been rounded to two decimal places.
2. In each step of the calculation the benefit has been rounded to the nearest 5p.
3. The Retail Prices Index (all items) and the Retail Prices Index (all items except housing ROSSI) as published by the Central Statistical Office have been used for prices uprating (ROSSI for income-related benefits).
4. Average Earnings Index (Whole Economy Unadjusted) as published by the Employment Department has been used to calculate the earnings uprating.
5. Average Earnings Index began in January 1963: it is not possible to provide earnings upratings in respect of periods commencing before that date.
6. Education allowance was inherited from the WW1 scheme (under which it was available on a discretionary basis) at the onset of WW2.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish a table which breaks down the data in table 16 of the Department of Health statistical bulletin 12/94, "NHS Hospital Activity Statistics: England 1983 to 1993–94", by regional health authority; and if she will also show the results in terms of number of each type of operation per 100,000 population in each age group in each region.

Mr. Sackville: Tables giving the available information will be placed in the Library. Information on finished consultant episodes broken down by region and by age is not available centrally.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list by name the start-up costs for each national health service trust hospital, by region.

Mr. Sackville: The information will be place in the Library.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total sum paid in the most recent year for which figures are available in (a) fees and salaries and (b) expenses to members of (i) NHS trust boards located in and (ii) health commissions serving Hampshire; and how many people serve on these bodies.

Mr. Malone: There are currently nine trusts in Hampshire. They each have a chairman and five non-executive directors with the exception of the Hampshire Ambulance and Andover District Community Trusts which each have a chairman and four non-executive directors. There are three district health authorities which each have a chairman and five non-executive members.

In 1993–94 the remuneration of chairmen and non-executive directors of the six trusts then established totalled £230,000. Members expenses and the remuneration of district health authority executive and non-executive members is not available centrally.

Secure Hospital Accommodation

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received from the judiciary about the availability of secure hospital accommodation for mentally affected defendants; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: There have been occasions where judges have expressed concern about the availability of hospital places for defendants requiring admission under the Mental Health Act 1983. These have been resolved through local action.

The difficulties have centred mainly on the availability of medium secure psychiatric places. Up to 1979, following the 1975 Glancy report, no medium secure places had been developed. There are now more than 700 purpose-built medium secure places in national health service hospitals in England and a further 600 places in interim NHS units and the private sector. We have allocated more than £45 million from central funds over the period 1991–95 to increase the number of NHS places to nearly 1,200 by the end of 1996.

Winter Warmth Campaign

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many inquiries have been made to the winter warmth campaign information line since its launch.

Mr. Bowis: A total of 94,403.

European Year of Older People

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what contributions her Department has made in 1994 to follow up the European Year of Older People and Solidarity between Generations in 1993.

Mr. Bowis: The Department funded an evaluation seminar and will shortly be publishing a report on the Year. This will include the results of an evaluation by an independent consultant whose recommendations we shall consider carefully.

We have provided £20,000 towards a new voluntary sector team—the United Kingdom European resource unit—to take forward the work of the year.

Hospice Expenditure

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of hospice expenditure in England and Wales is publicly provided.

Mr. Sackville: The information for England is not available centrally. Information relating to Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Toxocariasis

Sir Graham Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases for toxocariasis there are each year; and what assessment she has made of the main available source of the disease.

Mr. Sackville: The main source of toxocara infection is dog faeces. The Public Health Laboratory Service's communicable disease surveillance centre receives an average of about 50 laboratory reports of toxocariasis per year—not all caused by toxocara infection in dogs—the vast majority of these positives being reported because there has been some eye infection or disease. It is, however, acknowledged that there is probably a degree of under-reporting of this condition because the infection is self-limiting, and the infection may be either asymptomatic or very mild. The centre believes that it is not unreasonable to accept that there are between 100 and 200 new cases of toxocaral eye infection or disease—not necessarily causing severe damage to eyes—each year in the United Kingdom. Toxocariasis is not a notifiable disease.

Sir Graham Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has about the proportion of infants carrying antibodies to the parasitic worm, toxicara; and what action she plans to take to reduce the problem.

Mr. Sackville: It is estimated that between 2 and 3 per cent. of the general population possess antibodies to toxocara species, suggesting that about 1 million people in the United Kingdom have been infected at some time. No antibody surveys have been undertaken specifically among children aged less than 12 months. However a survey in Bedford, conducted among children aged three to seven years in 1981, found that 14.6 per cent. possessed antibody. These data suggest that the majority of infections are acquired in childhood.

Toxocariasis is an avoidable illness which can easily be prevented by dog owners worming their dogs regularly and by cleaning up their dog's faeces. Basic hygiene procedures, such as wearing gloves when gardening and washing hands after gardening or, with children, when they have been playing in the garden or parks should be followed. The Department of Health provides a grant to the charity Community Hygiene Concern which produces information for the public on toxocariasis and also supports the work of the Department of the Environment to encourage responsible dog ownership.

Complementary Medicine

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list those health authorities that purchase complementary medicine.

Mr. Sackville: Lists of services purchased by health authorities are not available centrally.

Powick Hospital, Worcestershire

Mr. Purchase: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were treated at Powick hospital, Worcestershire, with lysergic acid diethymide during the period 1964 to 1975; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: I refer the hon. Member to the Worcester and District health authority.

Excimer Laser Keratectomy

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has as to the incidence of side-effects on complications following excimer laser keratectomy.

Mr. Sackville: The College of Ophthalmologists has established a sub-committee to look at all aspects of laser treatment, including such side-effects of excimer laser treatment as haziness of the cornea, irritation of the eye, glare, subsequent long sight or persistent short sight.

The long-term side effects associated with laser treatment are not yet known.

Schizophrenia

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what approaches were made by the inquiry into the care of Michael Buchanan to, (a) local members of the National Schizophrenia Fellowship and (b) other local organisations about the issues raised by this case.

Mr. Bowis: The independent inquiry was established by the North West London Mental Health National Health Service Trust. The hon. Member may wish to contact the trust for information about the conduct of the inquiry.

Supervision Register

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what additional services are available to someone placed on a supervision register.

Mr. Bowis: Supervision registers are designed to help local services identify those patients who should receive the greatest priority for care and treatment. Whether an individual placed on a register requires additional services is a matter for clinical or professional judgment in each case.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provision exists for advising individuals (a) of their inclusion on a supervision register and (b) that information from the supervision register has been given to a third party.

Mr. Bowis: The guidelines on the introduction of registers make clear that patients who are placed on the supervision register should be informed orally and in writing at the time. They should be told why they are on the register, how the information on the register will be used and to whom that information may be disclosed.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what organisations have made representations regarding supervision registers for the mentally ill; and if she will list those which are in favour and those against.

Mr. Bowis: The Department consulted a number of organisations and individuals in the statutory and voluntary sector on the draft guidelines on the introduction of supervision registers and received a number of very helpful comments. Those who were consulted officially are shown in the table. Of those consulted only two organisations were against registers in principle, namely MIND and the Association of Metropolitan Authorities.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what monitoring is being carried out on the operation of supervision registers for the mentally ill.

Mr. Bowis: It is the responsibility of health authorities to ensure that mental health service providers with which they contract establish and maintain supervision registers. Progress on the implementation of supervision registers is being monitored closely by the National Health Service Executive.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what external advice she has received on the legality of supervision registers for the mentally ill.

Mr. Bowis: None. We are satisfied as to their legality.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the cost of setting up the supervision registers; and what the sources of funding have been.

Mr. Bowis: Supervision registers are an integral part of the care programme approach which was introduced in April 1991. The additional administrative costs involved in the introduction of supervision registers should be minimal and will be met from existing resources.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what circumstances the contents of a supervision register can be passed to the police.

Mr. Bowis: Supervision registers are health records. As with other health records, information should be disclosed to a third party such as the police without the patient's consent only if that disclosure can be justified in the public interest.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provisions exist for the review of or appeal against placement on a supervision register for the mentally ill.

Mr. Bowis: Patients who are placed on a supervision register can request a review to consider their withdrawal from the register. If the patient remains dissatisfied with the outcome of that review the normal channels of complaint and the right to a clinical second opinion apply.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people she expects to be placed on supervision registers for the mentally ill.

Mr. Bowis: Before the deadline for full implementation of registers it was estimated that between 5,000 and 10,000 people nationally were likely to be placed on registers. Early indications are that the estimate was correct.

Children (Nutrition)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether she has discussed with the Secretary of State for Social Security measures to combat malnutrition in children of poor families;

(2) what recent representations she has received about the diet of children of low-income families; and if she will make a statement;

(3) what plans she has to assist children of poor families suffering from malnutrition.

Mr. Sackville: A small number of the responses to the 1993 consultation on the nutrition task force's draft action programme referred to the potential difficulties of eating healthily on a low income. I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave the hon. Member for Bristol, East (Ms Corston) on 27 June, Official Report column 413–4 and 19 July at column 143–5 for more recent representations about diet and nutrition of children in different socio-economic circumstances.

Malnutrition is a term which covers a wide variety of single or combined deficiencies of nutrients and/or energy. Although there is some evidence that iron intakes are low in children there is no evidence that this is particularly a problem in low-income families. There is no other evidence of public health problems from inadequate nutrient intakes.

The welfare food scheme continues to provide a nutritional safeguard for children aged under five in families on income support.

The nutrition task force has set up a project team to consider ways of assisting people on a low income to choose a healthy diet. In establishing the team, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security was consulted.

In Vitro Fertilisation

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received about the effects of IVF treatment on the health of mothers and children; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Since 1994, Ministers have received four letters on the subject.

The summary of "The Report of the Medical Research Council Working Party on Children Conceived by IVF" by Pat Doyle and Valerie Beral, was published in the British Medical Journal, BMJ 1990, 300: 1229–33. The study showed that the numbers of malformations found were consistent with the range of expected values in national data on congenital malformations.

From 1988 the interim licensing authority for human in-vitro fertilisation and embryology, and from 1 August 1991 the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority have kept registers of IVF treatment, including records of developmental defects in babies conceived as a result of treatment. These have not shown untoward rates of abnormality.

Benzodiazepines

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what quantity of benzodiazepines was prescribed via community pharmacists in England and Wales in each year since 1987; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: The available data for England are contained in the table. Information relating to Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Benzodiazepines dispensing by community pharmacists. England 1987 to 1993

Year	Prescriptions (thousands)
1987	20,565
1988	18,682

1990	16,507
1991	15,662
1992	14,775
1993	14,143

Notes:

1. The data are from the Prescription Costs Analysis system and cover all prescriptions dispensed by community pharmacists and appliance contractors.

2. 1987 to 1990 data are based on fees. Data from 1991 are based on items.

3. The data on the Prescribing Analyses and Cost PCA system are for England only and cover all prescriptions dispensed by community pharmacists and appliance contractors.

Cots and Mattresses

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when her Department first became aware of the possible link between chemicals in cot and baby mattresses and sudden infant death syndrome; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The Department first became aware of the hypothesis that certain chemicals in cot and baby mattresses may be connected with sudden infant death syndrome in January 1989.

At that time a working group, chaired by Professor Turner, was asked to consider this hypothesis in detail, data from the scientific literature, and submissions and evidence from interested parties. It concluded that the hypothesis relating SIDS with microbial infestation and gas generation from antimony of phosphorus based additives present in cot furnishings was unfounded.

Dr. Kenneth Calman, the Chief Medical Officer, has set up an expert group to steer further work by the Department on cot deaths.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Energy Expenditure

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total expenditure on energy for each property owned or leased by his Department for the use of Ministers in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Sir John Wheeler: It is not possible to allocate the precise share of energy costs between the offices and the accommodation provided for official use by Ministers from the energy costs for these buildings.

Sight Tests

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the estimated savings made in 1992–93 as a result of the introduction of a charge for sight tests.

Mr. Moss: A total of £2.3 million.

Hospices

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of hospice expenditure in Northern Ireland is publicly funded.

Mr. Moss: Approximately 37 per cent. of the expenditure of voluntary hospices in Northern Ireland was met by funding from statutory sources in the financial year 1993–94.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the Northern Ireland hospice may expect to receive an increased level of support from public funds.

Mr. Moss: This is a matter for negotiation between the Northern Ireland hospice and the health and social services boards in Northern Ireland as part of the contracting arrangements for the purchase and provision of palliative care services.

Blind and Partially Sighted People

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people were registered (a) blind and (b) partially sighted at (i) 31 March 1986 and (ii) 31 March 1991.

Mr. Moss: Information is not collected centrally in the format requested. On 31 December 1985, 3,437 blind and 1,285 partially sighted people were known to health and social service boards while 2,974 blind and 1,087 partially sighted people were in contact with the boards during the year ended 31 March 1991.

Water Disconnections

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many water disconnections have taken place in each of the last three years.

Mr. Moss: The table shows the number of disconnections for non-payment of accounts in each of the last three financial years. The figures relate to commercial, industrial and agricultural premises.

Year	Number
1991–92	385
1992–93	211
1993–94	146

Disconnections to domestic properties occur only in circumstances such as dereliction and reconstruction.

Water Meters

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much has been spent on the installation of water meters in each of the last three years; and how many homes have been metered in those years.

Mr. Moss: The table shows the amount spent on the installation of water meters in each of the last three financial years.

Year	Amount £
1991–92	150,685
1992–93	174,503
1993–94	103,471

Water supplied to a property used solely for domestic purposes is not metered.

Overhead Cables

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the policy of the Department of the Environment planning service in relation to overhead electricity and telephone cables; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moss: The Department's policy is set out in policy PSU11 of the planning strategy for rural Northern Ireland, which was published in September 1993. Copies are available in the Library.

Respiratory Illnesses

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many hospital admissions there were for each month in 1991, 1992 and 1993 for (a) acute respiratory complaints and (b) bronchitis by local health authority and trust.

Mr. Moss: The information is set out in the tables attached, which take into account that there were no fully established trusts in Northern Ireland prior to April 1993.

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which of the special advisers serving in his Department during the last five years were subject to positive security vetting.

Sir Patrick Mayhew [holding answer 13 December 1994]: All special advisers are currently required to have positive vetting. My special adviser was positively vetted for security purposes prior to his appointment. The level of security clearance is regularly reviewed in accordance with standing instructions.

Regional Development

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list those public projects which received European regional development funding and were subsequently privatised over the last 10 years, indicating (a) the level of funding and (b) the dates when it was received.

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 24 November 1994]: The following amounts have been paid from the European Regional Development Fund in the last 10 years to the public projects listed which were subject to privatisation.

TRANSPORT

Bulgarian Ships

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will investigate the circumstances surrounding the arrival in Glasgow of replacement crews for the Bulgarian ships currently in Lerwick harbour, the Afala, Aktinia, Kaprela, Ofelia and Rotalia.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: I have been asked to reply.

Under the immigration rules, people seeking entry to join a vessel as members of its crew are eligible for admission if they are under contract to join a ship due to leave British waters. If the immigration officer is so satisfied, he will give leave to enter. I see no need for any further investigation in this case.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he will take to ensure that Bulgarian ship owners observe immigration rules in respect of seafarers currently employed on board the Aktinia, Kaprela, Ofelia and Rotalia in Lerwick harbour.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: I have been asked to reply.

Under the Immigration Act 1971, where a person arrives at a place in the United Kingdom as a member of the crew of a ship under an engagement requiring him to leave on that ship as a member of the crew, he may normally enter the United Kingdom without leave and remain until the departure of the ship. Checks will be made to ensure that crew members leave with their vessels, if they fail to do so action will be taken, as appropriate, to trace and remove them from the United Kingdom under powers in the 1971 Act.

Gospel Oak to Barking Line

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the Gospel Oak to Barking line will be fully resignalled between South Tottenham and Woodgrange Park; when the works will be completed; and whether this will take place before or after the proposed flotation of Railtrack.

Mr. Norris: No plan currently exists for full resignalling between South Tottenham and Woodgrange Park. The timing of works undertaken after its flotation will remain a matter for Railtrack.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how the revised signalling arrangements between South Tottenham and Woodgrange Park on the Gospel Oak to Barking line will operate to satisfy the requirements of the railway inspectorate division of the Health and Safety Executive, if the Gospel Oak to Barking line is not resignalled between South Tottenham and Woodgrange Park as part of the Liverpool Street resignalling project; and what is the minimum safe interval required between trains operating under the proposed arrangements.

Mr. Norris: All signalling arrangements employed have to satisfy the requirements of the Health and Safety Executive. I am advised that the required interval between trains is the time it takes for a train to pass along the line between the signal boxes at South Tottenham and Woodgrange Park. This is normally 17 minutes for a stopping passenger train and a little less for a non-stop train. These signalling arrangements are wholly in line with signalling regulations.

Rail Businesses

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 5 December, Official Report, column 38, if he will list the rail businesses, apart from Railtrack, which the Government intend to sell in 1995–96 and 1996–97.

Mr. Watts: The answer is as follows:

Trainload Freight Companies (TLFs)
Freightliner (containerised freight carrier)
Rail express systems (Res)
Rolling Stock Leasing Companies (ROSCOs)
BR Infrastructure Services (BRIS)
— Track Renewal Units
— Infrastructure Maintenance Units
BR Telecommunications (BRT) various businesses in BR Central Services

Highways Agency

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what extra costs or savings on the capital or revenue account have been generated by the withdrawal of the original Highways Agency proposal to concentrate on a single site; and if he will explain how these changes have arisen.

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Jim Cousins, dated 14 December 1994:

I have been asked to write to you in response to your Parliamentary Question about the Highways Agency restructuring proposals and in particular the extra costs or savings generated by the withdrawal of the proposal to concentrate on a single site.

My Board's decision on the restructuring of the Highways Agency were announced on 23 November following consultation on the original proposals put forward last July. The changes confirmed following the consultation process have resulted in a decision which provides better utilisation of our existing expertise without sacrificing the advantages of a reduced number of offices in terms of lower management and overhead costs and lower accommodation costs. The overall saving in staff redundancy and relocation costs due to the changes is estimated at £8.8 million. The changes also involve greater utilisation of existing offices, which it is estimated will reduce refurbishment costs by £1.2 million and property disposal costs by £2.7 million.

There has never been a proposal to concentrate the entire Highways Agency on a single site. One of the options estimated earlier in the planning process would have centralised most of our operations on a single site but with two other offices. This option was rejected at an early stage because the associated loss of staff expertise would have been too great.

Grant Office of the North East

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many staff he currently has in the grant office of the north east on road transport policy.

Mr. Watts: A total of 22.

Goods Vehicle Operator Centres

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidance is given to traffic area offices regarding (a) advertising in the press and (b) consultation with the public regarding applications to use premises for goods vehicle operator centres; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: Traffic area office staff dealing with licence applications are made aware of the statutory requirements for advertising applications for a goods vehicle operator's licence within a statutory period in an appropriate local newspaper, and the statutory provisions for making objections and representations; they are also provided with guidance on how to deal with any non-statutory matters that might arise. Inquiry procedure rules must be followed for those applications which are to be determined by the licensing authority at public inquiry.

London Underground

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the nature of the points problem in the Aldgate area of London Underground on the morning of 9 December; and how many times there have been points or signalling problems in the Aldgate area leading to train delays in the past 12 months.

Mr. Norris: These are operational matters for London Underground. I understand that the points at Aldgate failed to return to their normal position after being switched to reverse. The failure was rectified within 11 minutes and the service restored. Over the past 12 months, there have been 29 points or signal failures in the Aldgate area.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the duration of the trips referred to in his answer of 26 October, Official Report, column 616, which were undertaken by Ministers in his Department and on which they were accompanied by their spouses and paid for at public expense.

Dr. Mawhinney: The duration of the trip referred to in my answer of 26 October, Official Report, column 616, was two days.

EMPLOYMENT

Workstart

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to publish the findings from his Department's evaluation of the current Workstart pilot schemes.

Miss Widdecombe: The reports of the evaluation of the Workstart pilots have been published today and I have arranged for a copy of each to be placed in the Library.

North Norfolk Employment Schemes

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he intends to publish the findings of his Department's evaluation of the North Norfolk Action and Workstart pilots.

Miss Widdecombe: The evaluation of North Norfolk Action and Workstart are now complete. The reports showed that there was much of value in both pilots. The Budget speech of my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor contained two new measures of relevance to the pilots: the 1-2-1 pilot, based on an element of the North Norfolk Action pilot will be extended nationally from April 1995; and a further 5,000 Workstart places will be available from that date. Copies of the reports are available in the Library.

Industrial Tribunals

Mr. Aspinwall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress has been made on the internal review of the operation of the industrial tribunals announced by the then Under-Secretary of State on 29 April 1994, Official Report, columns 379–80.

Mr. Oppenheim: Following the completion of the internal review of industrial tribunals, the Government are today publishing a Green Paper, "Resolving Employment Rights Disputes: Options for Reform".

Since their inception in 1964, the role of industrial tribunals has steadily developed as their jurisdiction has expanded. The Government believe that industrial tribunals have proved to be a fair and effective means for adjudicating employment rights disputes. They are firmly committed to ensuring that they continue to provide an means of redress in accordance with the criteria laid down in 1968 and accepted by all Governments since then.

> "easily accessible, informal, speedy and inexpensive"

The industrial tribunal system has been subjected to growing pressures in recent years. Employment legislation has grown both in extent and complexity, the numbers of tribunal applications have doubled since 1989 and are expected to continue rising and hearing delays have increased unacceptably. The Department's internal review was commissioned to find ways of helping the tribunals to cope and to achieve greater efficiency and reduced delays.

The Green Paper sets out a range of proposals designed to increase the proportion of disputes settled voluntarily by the parties themselves or with third party assistance, to simplify and improve tribunal procedures and to improve the organisation and management of the administrative support.

The Government invite views on those proposals. Improvements which can be achieved through administrative action by the Department are already going ahead; decisions on whether and how to proceed with those requiring legislation will be taken in the light of the consultations. However, the Government have decided that tribunals should have discretion whether to obtain a view from an independent expert when deciding claims for equal pay for work of equal value.

It is the Government's intention that any efficiency savings should be applied to improving standards of service to the public.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many parliamentary questions tabled in the last session of Parliament were not answered on the grounds that the information sought was not held centrally by the Department.

Miss Widdecombe: Six. This represents less than 1 per cent. of all questions answered in the same period.

Jobcentres

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide figures for the use of jobcentres by employer organisations for each month in the financial year 1993–94.

Miss Widdecombe: Monthly information on the numbers of vacancies notified to jobcentres by employers and the number of people placed with employers by jobcentres is available from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Advertising

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the final cost of each advertising campaign listed in his answer to the hon. Member for Truro (Mr. Taylor) of 3 March, Official Report, column 861.

Miss Widdecombe: The final cost of each advertising campaign listed in the answer to the hon. Member for Truro of 3 March, Official Report, column 861, is shown in the following table:

	1993–94
Campaign	Budgeted spend £	Final cost £
Make It Your Business	2,000,000	2,012,000
1993 NTA	564,000	662,000

European Year of Older People

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what contribution his Department has made in 1994 to follow up the European Year of Older People and Solidarity between Generations in 1993.

Miss Widdecombe: In 1994, the Employment Department has supported the initiatives stemming from the European year of older people and solidarity between generations through the continuation of the campaign to promote the interests of older workers.

In March a booklet was released, aimed at employers, to reinforce the message that age has no bearing on the ability to do a good job. It was distributed to 16,500 employers whose work force exceeded 75 employees. The press coverage was widespread and continues to generate interest from employers, researchers and individuals. Over 5,000 requests have been received to date.

The Department has been involved with workshops and seminars run by bodies involve with, and who campaign for older workers. I attended seminars at the Policy Studies Institute, the Department's regional office in Bristol and a Carnegie Third Age symposium, the theme of all three being to persuade to employers to take a positive attitude towards older workers.

Recently, I visited People of Previous Experience, a European conference held in Bradford, and the Mature Workers Register in Bournemouth, two initiatives engaged in finding jobs for older workers in their local areas.

This year, research commissioned by the Department was published, which consisted of a comprehensive review of employment policies and practices toward older workers in 22 countries. These comprise all EU member states, plus 11 other countries worldwide. Further research has been commissioned, comprising a more detailed overview of policies and practices in France, Germany, Spain and Sweden.

It is planned to release a booklet for individuals which will contain advice and information about job seeking specifically aimed at older workers.

Plans are also under way to hold a series of regional seminars which will disseminate good practice in the employment of older workers among locally invited employers.

Jobseekers

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the effect of the provision in the Jobseekers Bill regarding penalties in respect of leaving employment after three months on the willingness of jobseekers to remain in employment.

Miss Widdecombe: Unemployed people should be encouraged to try work that may be unfamiliar to them. The employment on trial rule therefore exempts certain claimants from sanction if they take a job and then give it up within a specified period. We regard it as important that this incentive should apply at the point at which claimants are expected to consider work outside their usual occupations. For this reason, in jobseeker's allowance the rule will apply after three months' unemployment, which is the maximum permitted period during which search for jobs can be restricted to the claimant's usual occupation.

Training

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total value of grants received from the European Commission for training schemes and advice to companies and individuals in the last financial year.

Miss Widdecombe: Much of the largest source of European Community grants for training schemes and advice on training is the European Social Fund. In the last financial year, 1993–94, ESF grants totalling £528 million were received by training providers and others in Great Britain.

Women

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what Government structures exist to review the implementation of the UN's Nairobi forward-looking strategies for the advancement of women; and what such review has taken place and been published.

Miss Widdecombe: The Cabinet sub-committee for women's issues is responsible for reviewing and developing Government policy on issues of special concern to women, and for overseeing its implementation. The Employment Department has responsibility within Whitehall for co-ordination of policy on women's issues, including the Nairobi forward-looking strategies.

In preparation for the Fourth World Conference on Women to be held in Peking in September 1995, UN member states report on progress in the key areas of the Nairobi forward looking strategies. The UK's national report was published at the beginning of October. The report has been widely distributed and copies are available in the Library

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which Whitehall Departments have women's units; and what is their location, responsibilities and staffing levels.

Miss Widdecombe: Government policy is to integrate consideration of women's issues into policy development, rather than have specific "women's units". A large number of policy officials therefore have responsibility to ensure that women's concerns are properly taken into account. In addition, many departments have equal opportunities units within their personnel sections, which promote equality of opportunity regardless of sex, race and disability. It is not possible to disaggregate the exact numbers of such staff devoted to equal opportunities for women.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what Government structures exist to review the implementation of the UN convention on the elimination of discrimination against women; and what such review has (a) taken place and (b) been published.

Miss Widdecombe: The Cabinet sub-committee for women's issues is responsible for reviewing and developing Government policy on issues of special concern to women, and for overseeing its implementation. The Employment Department has responsibility within Whitehall for co-ordination of policy on women's issues, including the convention for the elimination of all forms of discrimination against women.

Since ratifying the convention in 1986, the Government have submitted two progress reports to the United Nations, in 1987 and 1991. Both these reports were published. A third report is currently being prepared, and will become freely available in March 1995.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current membership of the women's issues working group; and how many times the group has met over the past year.

Miss Widdecombe: The group's current membership is set out in the following table. The group has met twice since January 1994.

Sex Equality Branch

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the powers and responsibilities of the sex equality branch; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The branch is responsible for the Employment Department's objective to counter sex discrimination in the labour market and to promote women's interests in the workplace and beyond.

Construction Industry

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the figures for employment in the construction industry for each year since and including 1989, broken down into employees and self-employed.

Mr. Oppenheim: The information is given in the following table:

Labour Force Survey

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the impact of the proposed reduction in housing association investment on employment prospects in the construction industry.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department has made no such assessment.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many inspections were carried out by the Health and Safety Executive in each of the last five years in each category of premises inspected.

Mr. Oppenheim: Information about the number of planned inspections carried out by the Health and Safety Executive in each of the last five years is published in the Health and Safety Commission annual reports for 1991–92, annex 5 and 1993–94, annex 2, copies of which are available in the Library. A breakdown for each category of premises inspected is not available.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) men and (b) women together with the overall total, were in full-time employment (i) in each standard region and (ii) in Great Britain in December in each of the last 10 years; and in each case and for each year what proportion this figure represented as a percentage of the total population.

Mr. Oppenheim: The information can be obtained from the NOMIS database, which is available in the Library. However, the full-time, part-time regional breakdown should not be used prior to June 1991 as the information is invalid.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide available information on the proportion of people who (a) leave the register within three months, (b) leave the register to enter a job within three months and (c) leave the register to become economically inactive within three months and have been unemployed for (i) six months, (ii) one year and (iii) two years.

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 12 December 1994]: It is estimated that about half of all people who become claimant unemployed leave the count within three months and two thirds within six months. Information is not routinely available on the destinations of those leaving claimant unemployment but past surveys indicate that the majority of people go into jobs. Information on those who leave the count within three months of reaching certain duration thresholds is given in the following table:

People leaving claimant unemployment by duration (GB)

Duration of unemployment	Percentage who left unemployment within a further 3 months
Six months	36.5
One year	35.2
Two years	24.5

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which of the special advisers serving in his Department during the last five years were subject to positive security vetting.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 13 December 1994]: All special advisers are currently required to have positive vetting.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

"North America Now"

21. Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made by his Department with the "North America Now" campaign to boost British trade and investment with North America.

Mr. Baldry: Since its launch in March 1993, the "North America Now" campaign has produced a full programme of activities in north America and in the United Kingdom, which are helping British business to reinforce and improve its competitiveness in the world's wealthiest trading bloc.

The value of the United Kingdom's exports to north America in 1993 was 24.5 per cent. higher than in 1992.

Chemical Weapons Convention

22. Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it is Her Majesty's Government's policy to be one of the first 65 countries to ratify the chemical weapons convention.

Mr. David Davis: The United Kingdom is committed to the effective implementation of the chemical weapons convention and will ratify the convention once the necessary implementing legislation is in place. The legislation will be introduced as soon as parliamentary time and other Government legislative priorities permit.

Syria

23. Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultations he had before agreeing to the change in the status of Syria with respect to the EC.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The views of interested parties were taken into account before the decision was taken by the European Union to lift the arms embargo on Syria.

Kenya

24. Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about Her Majesty's Government's discussions with President Moi on his recent visit to London.

Mr. Baldry: President Moi visited London to address the CBI conference: Kenya—the future for investments and business. During the visit, he had full discussions on a range of subjects of bilateral and regional importance with my right hon. Friends the Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs and the noble Baroness Chalker. This provided an opportunity to encourage President Moi to continue the process of economic and political reform, on which Kenya has made significant progress over the past three years.

European Political Union

Sir David Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to meet his counterparts in the European Union to discuss greater political union.

Mr. David Davis: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary and I have regular discussions on a wide range of EU issues with our European counterparts at meetings of the General Affairs Council. The next meeting of the Council is scheduled for 19 and 20 December.

China

26. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last raised human rights abuses in China with the Chinese Government.

Mr. Goodlad: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary most recently raised human rights with the Chinese authorities when he met the Chinese Foreign Minister on 29 September in New York.

Israel

27. Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Britain's relations with Israel.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Our relations with Israel are excellent.

UN Secretary-General

28. Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the Secretary-General of the United Nations; and if he will indicate the main topics which were discussed.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary had a brief meeting with the UN Secretary-General in the margins of the conference on security and co-operation in Europe summit on 5 December. More substantive discussions were held during the Secretary-General's visit to London on 25 October. A number of regional issues were discussed at both meetings.

Bosnia

29. Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on British policy in Bosnia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Our policy, which we share with the other members of the contact group, remains to bring about a peaceful settlement in Bosnia by negotiation. We fully support the UN's efforts to achieve a ceasefire around Bihac and the rest of Bosnia. This would provide a platform for a resumption of political negotiations on the basis of the contract group plan.

35. Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received concerning the future role of NATO in Bosnia.

Mr. David Davis: I have received no formal representations on the future role of NATO in Bosnia. The United Kingdom fully supports NATO's continuing assistance to the efforts of the UN to provide humanitarian relief and to contain the conflict in Bosnia. These efforts cannot, however, be a substitute for an agreement by the parties on a negotiated settlement which we believe offers the only durable solution to the crisis.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is NATO's role in the war in Bosnia.

Mr. David Davis: NATO's role in the Bosnian conflict is to enforce the UN arms and trade embargoes and to support UN peacekeeping operations, in accordance with UN Security Council resolutions. It provides naval assets to the joint Western European Union—NATO Operation Sharp Guard. It also provides aircraft to enforce the no-fly zone in Bosnian airspace and, at UN request, to assist and protect UNPROFOR in the performance of its mandate.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what considerations led to the recognition of Bosnia-Herzegovina.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom recognised Bosnia-Herzegovina on 7 April 1992. This decision was taken following consideration of the report of the arbitration commission of the conference on Yugoslavia.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the historical, ethnic and cultural grounds for the nature of the United Kingdom's diplomatic relations with (a) Estonia and (b) the Bosnian Serbs.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have rebuilt the close relations we enjoyed with Estonia before 1940 based on our strong support for her independence and democratic and economic development. The United Kingdom does not have diplomatic relations with the Bosnian Serbs.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the countries which protested when the Bosnian Muslims launched attacks from Sarajevo and Bihac against the Bosnian Serbs.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are not aware of any such protests.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about the ethnic composition of Bosnia-Herzegovina before recent hostilities began.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: According to the 1991 census, the population of Bosnia-Herzegovina was:

	Per cent.
Muslims	43.7
Serbs	31.3
Croats	17.3
Others	7.7

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which countries have recognised Bosnia-Herzegovina as a state; at what dates; and what arguments were put forward for doing so.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Bosnia-Herzegovina has been recognised by: Bulgaria, date of recognition 15.1.92; Turkey, 6.2.92; Iran, 8.3.92; Libya, 16.3.92; all EU member states, 7.4.92; USA, 7.4.92; Croatia, 7.4.92; Egypt, 16.4.92; Saudi Arabia, 17.4.92 and Russia, 28.4.92.

We recognised Bosnia-Herzegovina following consideration of the report of the arbitration commission of the conference on Yugoslavia.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether NATO encouraged the Bosnian Muslims to mount an offensive against the Serbs from Sarajevo.

Mr. David Davis: No. NATO acts in the former Yugoslavia under an impartial UN mandate in support of the UN's peacekeeping, humanitarian and sanctions operations.

Burundi

30. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the effect the continuing instability in Rwanda will have on the situation in Burundi; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: We agree that the continuing instability in Rwanda will make attempts to find a lasting solution to the problems in Burundi more difficult. The fragile, and relative calm that exists at the moment is threatened by the activities of armed Rwandan bands, retaliatory military measures and the presence of many Rwandan refugees in Burundi. The international community remains very concerned and focused in these events and the UN is fully engaged in Bujumbura.

Middle East

31. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on recent developments in the middle east.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We welcome continued progress in the middle east peace process, including the establishment of diplomatic relations between Israel and Jordan, and the resumption of talks between Israel and the Palestinians on elections and Israeli redeployment in the west bank. We look forward to progress on the Syrian track, leading to a comprehensive settlement.

Japan

32. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on British relations, including trade relations, with Japan.

Mr. Goodlad: United Kingdom relations with Japan are generally excellent. Our exports rose 19 per cent. last year to £2.65 billion, and have so far risen a further 14 per cent. this year. The "Action Japan Campaign" helps British business take advantage of the opportunities in 10 key sectors.

Hong Kong

33. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the current position of discussions with China about Hong Kong.

Mr. Goodlad: The 31st plenary session of the Sino-British joint liaison group began in London today. It should build on the useful achievements of the plenary sessions held in June and September, and offer more evidence of enhanced co-operation.

Intergovernmental Conference

34. Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Foreign Ministers of the other European Union countries about the preparations for the 1996 intergovernmental conference.

Mr. David Davis: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary and I have had and continue to have regular discussions with our counterparts in the European Union on preparations for the 1996 intergovernmental conference.

Malaysia

36. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met representatives of the Government of Malaysia; and what was the agenda.

Mr. Goodlad: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary met the Malaysian Foreign Minister in April. There was no fixed agenda. They both attended the European Union—Association of South-East Asian Nations ministerial meeting in Karlsruhe in September, although there was no formal bilateral meeting on that occasion.

Entry Clearance Guidelines

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what guidance he has issued to entry clearance officers at British posts overseas about the appropriate gross incomes of women sponsors working full time in west Yorkshire sufficient to maintain their spouses and dependent children without recourse to public funds.

Mr. Baldry: Entry clearance officers are not given guidance on the gross income necessary to meet the maintenance requirements of the immigration rules: each case is considered on its individual merits having regard to the total financial resources available and likely to become available to the parties. These vary considerably from case to case. Entry clearance officers are further guided by rulings from the adjudicators, the tribunal and the higher courts.

Gibraltar

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Government's intentions for the future constitution and development of Gibraltar and its people's status within the European Union.

Mr. David Davis: Gibraltar is part of the European Union by virtue of the United Kingdom's membership. The British Government see no reason for this to change.

Indonesia

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received regarding human rights violations in East Timor and other part of Indonesia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: We have received many representations from non-governmental organisations and individual correspondents. We make our human rights concerns clear to the Indonesian Government, bilaterally and with our European Union partners.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to make representations to the Government of Indonesia about their actions in East Timor and human rights in Papua.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In our contacts with the Indonesian authorities, we and our European Union partners regularly raise our concerns about the situation in East Timor and, more generally, the human rights situation in Indonesia, including, whenever appropriate, the province of Irian Jaya.

Africa (Conflict Resolution)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he plans to take to follow up his initiative on preventative diplomacy and conflict resolutions in Africa, announced in his recent speech to the United Nations General Assembly; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: We wish to gain African support for measures which will strengthen their own capacity for preventive diplomacy and conflict resolution. We have been working with African countries, the Organisation of African Unity, and with European partners to identify practical steps—including the establishment of UN peacekeeping skills centres at African staff colleges, and the creation of UN logistics centres in Africa. We plan to report on progress to the UN early in 1995.

Partnership for Peace

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made in developing the NATO partnership for peace proposal; and what practical military co-operation has flowed from it so far.

Mr. Hurd: Partnership for peace is developing very well. Twenty-three countries, including Russia, have become partners. Many have already negotiated individual programmes of activities with NATO. Three PFP military exercises have taken place so far, with United Kingdom forces participating each time. The extensive range of practical co-operative activities scheduled for 1995 is concrete evidence of the lasting success of this important initiative.

Rwanda

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current British financial contribution to the United Nation's operation in Rwanda excluding explicit humanitarian assistance; and what services it supports.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom's assessed contribution to the United Nations assistance mission for Rwanda is 6.373 per cent. of the budget total. We anticipate that in the current financial year, Britain's contribution will amount to £5.05 million. This contribution supports the full range of services associated with the mission outlined in UN document A/48/837, a copy of which is in the House of Commons Library.

Market Testing

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which programmes and projects of his Department are planned for market testing; and if he will make a statement in respect of progress in each element of the programme, together with the number of current jobs involved and their location.

Mr. Baldry: The FCO's "Competing for Quality" programme, which reviews the scope for abolition and contracting out as well as market testing, for 1994–95 is as follows:

Function	Number of staff
Security Guards—Hanslope Park	47
Queen's Messengers	32
Administration of Calculation of Salaries/ Pensions	11
Overseas Security Officers	34

Reviews of all these activities are under way. All posts are located in London or Hanslope Park, except the overseas security officers who serve at a number of different overseas posts.

In addition, a market test of reprographics, delayed from the 1993–94 programme is under-way involving 32 staff.

Homosexuals

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his Department's policy towards those members of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office who have now admitted their homosexuality but who were originally recruited when homosexuality was a bar to recruitment to his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Each case is taken on its merits. No officers who have admitted their homosexuality subsequent to their recruitment have been required to leave the Department.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if his Department operates a policy of non-discrimination against homosexuals in recruitment to all sections of his Department.

Mr. Baldry: Yes.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what questions pertinent to the homosexuality of potential recruits to his Department are still being asked during recruitment interviews; and to what purpose.

Mr. Baldry: No questions about a candidate's sexual orientation are asked at selection interviews as such. After a candidate has been recommended for a position in the diplomatic service, however, questions about sexual orientation are asked during the security vetting procedures. The purpose of these questions is to minimise an officer's vulnerability to blackmail, and so that a homosexual officer can be given suitable advice before bidding for postings for certain overseas countries where homosexual practices are illegal or socially unacceptable.

Mr. Jonathan Moyle

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 30 November to the Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen), Official Report, columns 709–10, if he will list the number and general nature of his communications or correspondence with the Chilean authorities since 9 November 1991; and whether documentation or other evidence relevant to the death of Mr. Jonathan Moyle in his Department's possession or in the possession of agencies responsible to his Department has been passed to the Scott inquiry.

Mr. Baldry: We have had numerous exchanges with the Chilean authorities since Mr. Jonathan Moyle's death. More recently the case was raised by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State during his visit to Chile in January 1993. The hon. Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory), the then Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, raised it with the Chilean Defence Minister designate in January this year. We await the Supreme court's response to a formal request sent to it through diplomatic channels for information required by the coroner for Exeter and East Devon, Mr. Van Oppen.

Documents relevant to the death of Mr. Moyle were passed to Lord Justice Scott. On 31 March 1993, Lord Justice Scott announced that he did not believe that an investigation into Mr. Moyle's death would further his inquiry.

Romania

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on British relations, including trade relations, with Romania.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Britain's relations with Romania are developing positively. We continue to support the consolidation of political and economic reform in Romania, including through the use of the know-how fund and the activities of the British Council. The frequency of high-level contacts has increased, and in November this year President Iliescu paid a successful visit to the United Kingdom. Britain's trade with Romania has increased significantly, now standing at over £225 million. The United Kingdom is the eight largest investor in Romania. My right hon. Friend the Member for Eddisbury (Mr. Goodlad), Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, recently led the largest trade mission yet mounted to Romania.

EU Fraud

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are being taken to help combat fraud in the European Union, particularly in the spending of the common agricultural policy and structural and cohesion budgets.

Mr. David Davis: Steps are being taken in all areas of Community budget to eradicate fraud and irregularity.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister secured important commitments in this respect at the Essen European Council on 9 and 10 December. The Council called on the Community's institutions and member states to make full use of the new powers given to them in the Maastricht treaty, and urged them to ensure special reports submitted by the European Court of Auditors are pursued thoroughly.

The Council will actively pursue agreement in the first half of 1995 to a proposal for intergovernmental co-operation against criminal aspects of fraud and will seek rapid progress toward concluding a regulation on the protection of the Community's financial interests. Each member state also undertook to report back on measures they take at a national level to counter fraud, waste and mismanagement. These reports will be submitted to the European Council in December 1995.

Embassy, Moscow

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the total estimated cost of the new embassy in Moscow; when it is expected to be ready; what is the capital valuation of the present embassy; how many rooms the present embassy has; and what is its proposed use once the new embassy is in operation.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The total estimated construction cost of the new embassy in Moscow is £50 million at current prices and rates of exchange, providing offices for about 80 United Kingdom and 80 local staff plus 31 flats for United Kingdom staff. Subject to all the necessary planning approvals, it is expected to be ready in 1999.

The present embassy is leased at a peppercorn rent from the Russian authorities, in reciprocity for the lease of part of the accommodation occupied by the Russian embassy in London, also at a peppercorn rent. We do not know the valuation put on our buildings in Moscow by the Russian authorities. The present embassy provides office accommodation for 170 staff.

The Russian authorities require us to remove our offices from the present site. They have agreed that the present embassy buildings may be retained for residential use. Some of the space will be used to make a limited extension to the Ambassador's flat. Most will be converted into staff accommodation, to save on the very high rents which are charged in Moscow by both public and private landlords.

Croatia

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the Serb population of Croatia before recent hostilities began; and how many Slovenians are in Slovenia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: According to the 1991 census, the population of Croatia was 4.76 million, of which about 12 per cent. were Serbs. Slovenia has approximately 1.8 million citizens, of whom about 90 per cent. are ethnically Slovenian.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Serbs left Croatia as a result of ethnic cleansing in 1992.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Accurate figures for the number of people who left Croatia in 1992 are not available.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Germany recognised Croatia as a state; and for what reason.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Germany recognised Croatia on 23 December 1991. It is not for us to comment on the reasons for policy decisions taken by other states.

Nato

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans NATO has for extending membership to countries on the Russian border; and if he will make a statement about its role following the extension of membership.

Mr. David Davis: The NATO summit in January confirmed that the alliance expected and would welcome expansion of its membership to include democratic states to its east, as part of an evolutionary process, and taking into account political and security developments in the whole of Europe. At their meeting in Brussels on 1 December, NATO Foreign Ministers endorsed this approach, and set in hand work on a study into the modalities and principles of enlargement. The initial results of this study will be made available to all partners, including Russia, by next December's North Atlantic Council in Brussels. NATO Foreign Ministers also agreed that it would be premature to discuss at this stage the time frame for enlargement on which countries would be invited to join the alliance.

NATO's role after expansion will continue to be to provide for the collective defence of its member states, to play a leading part in enhancing stability and security in Europe, and to undertake peacekeeping and other missions under the UN or the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe auspices.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the annual cost of NATO membership to the United Kingdom.

Mr. David Davis: For the financial year 1993–94, the total cost of NATO membership to the United Kingdom was £168,676,935. This comprised £69,129,000 for the military budget, £82,495,000 for the infrastructure budget and £17,052,935 for the civil budget.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the continued validity of NATO.

Mr. David Davis: NATO continues to play an essential role in reinforcing stability and security in Europe. Through the North Atlantic Co-operation Council, it is expanding co-operation in a wide range of issues with the countries of central and eastern Europe. This process has been augmented by the partnership for peace launched at the NATO summit last January, which is developing into an important feature of European security, linking NATO and its partners, and providing the basis for joint action with the alliance in dealing with common security problems.

The alliance also continues to adapt its own structures to meet the challenges of the changed security environment, and to allow it to contribute effectively to its new missions, including peacekeeping.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Select Committees

Sir Terrace Higgins: To ask the Lord President of the Council, when he expects to place in the Library the revised memorandum of guidance for officials appearing before Select Committees.

Mr. Newton: Copies of the revised memorandum of guidance with a new, more accurate title of "Departmental Evidence and Response to Select Committees" are now being issued to Government Departments. I have today sent copies to the hon. Member and to Chairmen of Select Committees. I have also placed copies in the Library.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Block Grants

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the income that each university received under the block grant system and the amount received under the new dual support system.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: Details of universities' recurrent income for spending on teaching and research and in support thereof for the years up to and including 1992–93, excluding for the former polytechnics and colleges, are published in the Universities' Statistical Record's "University Statistics" series, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Research Councils

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will produce figures of research overheads paid to universities by the research councils since the dual support funding system was put in place.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: Payments made to universities by the research councils for research overheads since August 1992, when the councils became liable to meet these costs under new arrangements for the dual support system, are as follows:

Financial year	SERC £ millions	AFRC £ millions	NERC £ millions	MRC £ millions	ESRC £ millions
1991–93	16.98	2.84	1.42	5.54	4.17
1993–94	46.75	5.37	5.47	17.52	6.56

Civil Service White Paper

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will list the persons and organisations which have replied to the White Paper, "The Civil Service-Continuity and Change"; and if he will place the replies in the Library.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: Those who sent responses on the White paper, "The Civil Service—Continuity and Change," and who have not requested that their comments remain confidential are listed. I am placing copies of their responses in the Library.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has completed his consideration of the application by Scottish Nuclear to construct a dry store for waste nuclear fuel at Torness power station; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Following a public inquiry, I accepted the Reporter's recommendation that my decision on the application should be deferred until an appraisal of the implications of a multistore strategy compared with the potential benefits of a single store strategy had been carried out. This appraisal is being carried out in the context of the radioactive waste management review announced by the Secretary of State for the Environment on 19 May.

Electricity Charges

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was (a) the price charged in pence per kilowatt hour to standard tariff domestic consumers, (b) the percentage change from the previous year's average household electricity bills and (c) the average annual household electricity bill in respect of each electricity company for each year since 1990.

Mr. Stewart: On the assumption that an average household consumes 3,300 KWh of electricity each year, the information requested is as follows:

(a) Price of electricity to domestic consumers (p/KWh)[1] [2]

Company	1990	1991	1992	1993

A1

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to award the contract for dualling the A1 road between Meadowmill and Amisfield; what are the expected dates for the start of work and completion; and if he will make a further statement on his plans for dualling the A1 from Amisfield to Dunbar and for further improvements between Dunbar and the English border.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Tenders for the dualling of the A1 from the Bankton roundabout to east of Haddington are currently due to be submitted on 23 December. Subject to the receipt of a satisfactory tender, a contract will be awarded early next year to allow a work start in the early spring. The construction of the new road is expected to take up to two years. Draft proposals for the extension of the dualling to Dunbar have now been published. A number of comments and objections have been received and are currently being considered. South of Dunbar, improvement schemes shall be brought forward for construction as resources and other priorities allow. The statutory procedures for three schemes are now very near completion and they will be well placed for consideration next year.

Rough Sleepers

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he intends to take to ensure that no one has to sleep rough in Scotland; and whether he plans to make resources available in Scotland which are comparable to those set aside by the Department of the Environment for the rough sleepers initiative in central London.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Local authorities, which have the primary statutory responsibility for dealing with homelessness, should give top priority to helping roofless people. In 1991–94 we have made available around £29 million extra capital allocations earmarked for homelessness projects, many of which will help people, particularly young homeless people, who would otherwise have been roofless. We are also providing grants amounting to over £300,000 in 1994–95 for voluntary bodies who support homeless and roofless people.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will announce the 1995–96 grant-aided expenditure figures each Scottish local authority.

Mr. Lang: The grant-aid expenditure figure in respect of each local authority for 1995–96 is set out in the table. Each authority's allocation of the GAE total has been determined having regard to the client group methodology which is agreed with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities in the distribution committee of the working party on local government finance. The table excludes figures for urban programme GAE which is not allocated to individual authorities. The addition of this amount—£63.4 million—brings the GAE total to the previously announced sum of £5,318.2 million.

New Town Development Corporations

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice he has given to new town development corporations on the treatment of staff in the wind-up of the Scottish new towns and the transfer or engagement of such staff by the new authorities to be set up under the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1994; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 28 November 1994]: Since the White Paper, "The Scottish New Towns—The Way Ahead", CM 711, was published in July 1989, the Government have been consistent in their view that every effort should be made to retain the expertise of new town staff for the wider benefit of Scotland. In accordance with the guidance on winding-up the development corporations are pursuing staffing in discussion with organisations taking over their functions. With effect from 1 April 1995, some staff may transfer to East Kilbride and Kirkcaldy district councils; other may transfer before dissolution of the Corporations. The other new towns are consulting existing local authorities about staff transferring with the functions they currently perform. Guidance on the staffing of the new local authorities is currently being considered by the local government staff commission (Scotland).

Clyde Tunnellers

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether his Department will carry out an inquiry into the failure to monitor regularly the health of tunnellers who worked on the Clyde tunnel between 1959 and 1964.

Mr. Oppenheim: I have been asked to reply.

The records available show that medical surveillance was carried out in accordance with the then new Work in Compressed Air Special Regulations 1958, and the doctors performing the work were experienced in medical surveillance of the workers involved in the operations.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Building Refurbishment

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will itemise the refurbishment works undertaken on buildings housing departmental staff in the last three years, indicating the costs involved and the nature of the refurbishments.

Mr. Jack: The refurbishment works undertaken on buildings housing departmental staff in the last three years are as follows:

	Work undertaken	£
1991–92
London–Woburn Place	Redecorate and install new carpets, IT cabling and security measures	220,000
Tolworth—Government Offices	Convert canteen block into offices and a smaller, refurbished restaurant	1,310,000

1992–93
Guildford—Government Offices	Modernise kitchens and restaurant, and replace aged building services in one block	520,000
Lowestoft—Fisheries Laboratory	Redecorate and refit the reception area, and replace windows in one block	120,000
Penrith—Agricola House	Modernise offices, including new fittings, redecoration and removal of asbestos	170,000
Trowbridge—Offices	Modernise offices including new windows, new fittings and redecoration	60,000
Weybridge—Central Veterinary Laboratory	Modernise some laboratories, offices, the reception area, canteen and kitchen	360,000

Worcester—Government Offices	Redecorate and install new fittings	260,000

Energy Expenditure

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total expenditure on energy for offices and buildings by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Jack: It is impractical to separate the energy costs of the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service agency from the energy costs of the MAFF main estate, as in many cases they share the same buildings. However, the total costs of energy used by (a) the MAFF main estate and the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service and (b) MAFF's other agencies over the last three years are as follows.

	(a) £	(b) £
1991–92	2,507,731	1,261,640
1992–93	2,541,730	1,493,300
1993–94	2,638,715	1,537,000

In the main, the increases are due to the introduction of information technology equipment, the modernisation of laboratories and other specialist buildings, and an increase in the work load of agencies and regional offices and a rise in tariffs over the period. The Ministry is stepping up measures to encourage staff to be more energy conscious, and is increasing investment in energy efficiency measures where these are cost effective.

Milk

Mr. Olner: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what is the total quantity of milk produced by the United Kingdom dairy industry in each of the last four years for which information is available;

(2) what is the total quantity of milk consumed in the United Kingdom in each of the last four years for which information is available.

Mr. Jack: Details of milk production, and its utilisation in the years 1990 to 1993, are shown in the table.

Milk production and utilisation in the United Kingdom

	1990	1991	1992[1]	(Million litres) 1993
Production (output for human consumption)	14,548	14,016	14,011	14,095
Liquid consumption, comprising: Sales through Milk Marketing Board schemes for liquid consumption	6,780	6,745	6,722	6,778
Imports of liquid milk	36	51	143	97
Other sales[2]	355	403	488	553

[1] 366 days.

[2] Includes milk consumed in farm households, sales of liquid milk outside Milk Marketing Board schemes, exports, and milk used for farmhouse manufacture of butter, cheese and cream.

Slaughter Industry

Mr. Olner: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what subsidies or other support are available from the European Union to support the development or modernisation of the United Kingdom slaughter industry.

Mr. Jack: Assistance for capital investments is available under the processing and marketing grant, which is an EU scheme with national back-up. In the slaughtering sector, this is limited by EU exclusions intended to avoid increasing overcapacity, but associated activities such as boning and cutting may be eligible for support.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mrs. Browning: A further report on BSE in Great Britain is available today. I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library of the House.

The report provides information about the effect of the ruminant ban on the course of the epidemic, the continuing decline in the incidence of the disease, the measures taken to control the disease, and to protect animal and human health, and the on-going research programme.

The number of cases of BSE being reported at present is 41 per cent. fewer than at the same time last year and for the first time there is a downturn in the incidence of BSE in five-year-old animals. Both changes are attributed to the ban of feeding ruminant protein to ruminant animals, which was introduced in 1988.

Salmon Advisory Committees

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of meetings held, the secretarial and advisory arrangements, the budgeted and actual expenditure and the subjects of the reports and submissions produced by the Salmon advisory committee in each of the last three years.

Mr. Jack: The Salmon advisory committee examines and reports on those matters relating to the conservation and development of salmon fisheries in Great Britain which are referred to it by fisheries Ministers. Since it was established in 1986, it has issued six reports, all of which have been published. Of these the following were produced within the last three years:

> "Factors Affecting Emigrating Smolts and Returning Adults" - published 1993.
> "Run Timing of Salmon" - published 1994.

The secretariat for the committee is provided by officials from the Department's salmon, whaling and inland fisheries division, which also supplies the secretary. An assistant secretary is provided by the Scottish Office. The committee reports direct to fisheries Ministers.

Information on the number of meetings held during the last three financial years and on the Committee's budgeted and actual expenditure is given in the table below.

	1992–93 £	1993–94 £	1994–95 £
Committee meetings	4	3	[1]3
Sub-group meetings	5	19	[1]18
Budgeted expenditure [2]	33,000	34,000	29,000
Actual expenditure [2]	19,338	12,411	[3]20,000

[1] Number of meetings planned.

[2] Does not include secretariat costs which are met from MAFF and SOAFD running costs.

[3] Estimate.

Pergau Dam

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of the selection process for contractors on the Pergau dam project; and which firms were selected.

Mr. Baldry: Tendering arrangements are the responsibility of the overseas government. In the case of the Pergau project, the client, Tenaga Nasional Berhad, with the agreement of the Malaysian Government undertook negotiations direct with the Balfour Beatty/Cementation International consortium.

Thomas Cook

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will specify the components of payments to Thomas Cook as travel agency consultant in 1992–93 mentioned in the document deposited in the Library referred to in his answer of 2 November, Official Report, column 1182.

Mr. Baldry: All payments made to Thomas Cook under the terms of this contract were reimbursements of travel expenditure incurred on behalf of ODA. ODA made no payments to Thomas Cook as travel agency consultant.

KPMG

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will specify the objectives of the contract awarded to KPMG by the Overseas Development Administration in 1992–93 to provide an offshore financial services consultancy referred to in the information placed in the Library to supplement his answer of 2 November 1994, Official Report, column 1182; and if he will state the country of territories to which this assistance was given.

Mr. Baldry: These consultancy services were provided to the Government of St. Kitts and Nevis. The terms of reference, which include the contract objectives, have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Bilateral Aid (World Bank)

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been (a) the total external finance and (b) the proportion of total external finance from the World bank group for each country receiving official British bilateral aid for each of the past five years.

Mr. Baldry: Due to incomplete coverage in available statistical information, it may not be possible to provide a comprehensive breakdown in the format requested. I will write to the hon. Member as soon as our inquiries are complete.

Somalia

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on civilian conditions in Somalia.

Mr. Baldry: Conditions vary according to the security situation. Food is generally available throughout the country, but in areas where unrest continues social services are limited and food supplies may be interrupted.

WALES

Out-of-town Planning Applications

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many out-of-town planning applications have been referred to him in the first nine months of 1994; and what percentage of these have been rejected.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Between January and September 1994, 12 out-of-town centre retail applications came before my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State as references under the Town and Country Planning (Shopping Development) (England and Wales) (No. 2) Direction 1993, or as departures from the development plan or as a result of call-in requests. It was decided not to intervene in 10 cases; two are still under consideration. In addition nine such proposals came forward on appeal of which one has been dismissed, two were withdrawn by the appellants and six have yet to be determined.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many parliamentary questions tabled in the last Session of Parliament were not answered on the ground that the information sought was not held centrally by the Department.

Mr. Redwood: The information available on the Polis system, shows that 61 parliamentary questions were not answered on the ground that the information sought was not held centrally.

Dentists

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many full-time salaried dentists the Gwynedd family health service authority are authorised to employ; how many are in post; and how many he expects will be in post on 1 January 1995.

Mr. Richards: The Gwynedd family health services authority has permission to employ the full-time equivalent of four salaried dentists. Currently, one salaried dentist is employed for three days per week.

Recruitment of suitable personnel to fill the approved posts is the responsibility of the authority. The Welsh Office is funding the advertising costs of the recruitment campaign.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many NHS patients have been deregistered by dentists in the last year in each of the health districts in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Richards: The information supplied by family health services authorities, shows that the numbers of patients deregistered by their dentists during the period 4 December 1993 to 2 December 1994 are as follows:

	Adults	Children	Total
Clwyd	6,737	49	6,786

This information is supplied for management purposes only and is not statistically validated.

The latest statistics available from the Dental Practice Board indicate that the number of patients registered with a dentist in Wales at 30 September 1994 was only 0.75 per cent. less than that for 30 September 1993.

Air Pollution

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will enlarge the number of urban air quality monitoring stations in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Government's air quality monitoring network in Wales covers all the main air pollutants: nitrogen dioxide, sulphur dioxide, carbon monoxide, volatile organic compounds, particulates and ozone. An expansion of the urban monitoring network is being considered for the United Kingdom as a whole, and the needs of Wales will be carefully considered as part of this.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the role of the Environment Agency in improving local conditions concerning air pollution by large scale industrial establishments with special reference to chimney stacks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Large scale industrial establishments with the potential to cause air pollution generally require authorisation by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution under the integrated pollution control provisions of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. This function will be transferred to the new Environment Agency.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the locations of the urban air quality monitoring stations in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Government fund the following types of air quality monitoring:

Enhanced urban air monitoring network

Two sites at Cardiff and one at Swansea

Smoke and sulphur dioxide network

Nine sites at Cardiff, Newport, Pontypool, Neyland, Port Talbot, Cwmgwrach, Glynneath, Welshpool and Wrexham.

Nitrogen dioxide survey

Twenty five Welsh local authorities are monitoring nitrogen dioxide at one hundred sites, some of which are rural, as part of a United Kingdom survey.

Lead in air monitoring

One site in Cardiff

In addition, many Welsh local authorities regularly undertake independent air quality monitoring in their areas funded from their own resources.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidance he gives to planning authorities in Wales concerning new developments which may affect air quality; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Planning policy guidance note 1, "General Policy and Principles", sets out the general principles that the planning system must take account of in order to protect the environment. Minerals planning guidance note 2, "Applications, Permissions and Conditions", contains advice on the control of dust, smoke and fumes when considering planning applications for mineral workings. In addition, processes with potential to cause air pollution are covered by the provisions of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 and detailed guidance has been issued to the regulatory authorities on the standards to be applied to protect air quality.

Traffic Pollution

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he proposes to eradicate pollution by traffic; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Government's approach was set out in "This Common Inheritance: The Third Year Report", Cm. published in May. A range of measures is being taken including tighter emission standards and changes to fuel composition which should lead to a progressive decline in traffic pollution. A crackdown on offending vehicles was announced in October, and further measures are under consideration.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the current total of cases of BSE recorded in each county in Wales.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) males and (b) females, together with the overall total, were in full-time employment in each travel-to-work area in Wales and for Wales as a whole in December in each of the last 10 years; and in each case and for each year what proportion this figure represents as a percentage of the total population.

Mr. Redwood: Information on the number of male and female employees in full-time employment by travel-to-work area is available only from the 1981, 1984, 1987, 1989 and 1991 censuses of employment. Building Refurbishment

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will itemise the refurbishment works undertaken on buildings housing departmental staff in the last three years, indicating the costs involved and the nature of the refurbishments.

Mr. Dorrell: Between April 1992, when my Department was established and the end of the 1993–94 financial year, £519,000 was spent refurbishing a building on the government estate for use as part of my Department's headquarters. In the same period, the Historic Royal Palaces agency spent £432,203 on refurbishment of staff accommodation. The Royal Parks agency spent £1.47 million on refurbishment projects in the same period, which included conversion of an old police house into its headquarters offices, and various works on parks lodges and visitor centres throughout its parks in London.

Satellite Television

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, if he will make a statement about the BBC's plans to launch two commercial satellite television services in Europe.

Mr. Dorrell: I welcome the BBC's plans to launch these two services, in partnership with Pearson plc. These plans are fully in line with the proposal in our White Paper on the future of the BBC, that the BBC should exploit international commercial opportunities, in co-operation with private sector partners.

Following consultation with the Independent Television Commission, I have today laid before Parliament an order under section 13(2) of the Broadcasting Act 1990, providing that the services may legally be provided without a licence from the ITC.

I have also placed in the House Library copies of an approval under clause 3(u) of the BBC's royal charter, approving the setting up of the two companies involved in the provision of the services. The approval includes conditions requiring the BBC to operate the ventures on a clear arm's-length accounting basis from its public services, and on the basis that the services are for reception in mainland Europe, not in the United Kingdom. The approval also ensures that programmes on the two services will be subject to broadly the same regulatory regime as other commercial non-domestic satellite services, and will comply with the relevant ITC codes. The BBC is required to report on its compliance with the terms of the approval in its annual report which will be laid before both Houses.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Internet

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Lord President of the Council, if he will make a statement about the plans of his Department to make information available on the Internet and the documents which he intends to be made available on the Internet over the next year which will be accessible via the World Wide Web server "open. gov.uk" or any specific departmental server.

Mr. Tony Newton: The Privy Council Office has no plans to use the Internet.

ENVIRONMENT

Single Regeneration Budget

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those local authorities in England whose area is represented in whole or in part by a Liberal Democrat hon. Member of Parliament that bid (a) successfully and (b) unsuccessfully for funds from the single regeneration budget.

Mr. Curry: The relevant local authority districts are:

Homelessness

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many organisations are currently receiving grants under section 73 of the Housing Act 1985; how many of these grants are due to (a) expire or (b) be reduced for March 1995; and what proposals he has to assist these organisations to secure replacement funding.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: One hundred and fifty six voluntary sector projects are receiving grant in 1994–95 under section 73 of the Housing Act 1985 to assist single people in housing need. Organisations are aware that grant is normally given for up to three years on a tapering basis while they seek other sources of funding. For 1995–96, I will consider applications from the 106 projects which are part way through their cycle of funding and, on their individual merits, bids from the 50 schemes which are approaching the end of their funding.

In addition, as part of the rough sleepers initiative in central London, 28 organisations are currently funded under section 73 powers.

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment when he intends to publish formally the material included in the supplement to the homelessness code of guidance for local authorities issued earlier this year; and what plans there are for further revisions of the code.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: My right hon. Friend the Secretaries of State, in conjunction with my right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for Health and for Wales, is publishing today a revised third edition of the homelessness code of guidance for local authorities. This new publication consolidates the body of the third edition of the code, issued in 1991, with an amendment about assessing people from outside the United Kingdom, and supplementary guidance on applications from asylum seekers. That amendment and supplement were issued jointly by my Department and the Welsh Office in typescript form in February of this year. No other changes have been made to the code, and we have no present plans to make further revisions.

Housing (Service Personnel)

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from local authorities in England about the demand for housing from applicants leaving the armed forces.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Advice to local authorities on dealing with applications for housing from people leaving the armed forces is contained in circular 14/93 "Housing for People Leaving the Armed Forces" issued on 16 November 1993. Since then, my Department has received one letter from a local authority about housing for ex-service personnel.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many (a) allocations of council housing and (b) nominations to housing association homes have been made in the course of each of the past five years by local authorities in England to applicants whose applications arose from them leaving the armed forces.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: This information is not collected centrally.

Community Care

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will make a statement on the future contribution by local authority housing in meeting the Government's community care objectives;

(2) what plans he has to allow local authority housing departments to be more involved with the provision of community care; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Advice to local housing authorities on their role in community care is contained in my Department's circular 10/92 "Housing and Community Care", issued jointly with the Department of Health. The two Departments work closely together to ensure that housing is fully integrated into community care.

Local authorities should take account of the need for housing and its availability in preparing their local housing strategies and community care plans. I expect authorities' housing strategy statements to set out how they approach their responsibilities under community care and the way in which they co-operate with other agencies in the planning and delivery of services.

M25 Link Road

Mr. Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy that the public inquiry into the M25 link road between junctions 12 and 15 should precede the public inquiry into Heathrow terminal 5.

Sir Paul Beresford: No, the timing of the Heathrow terminal 5—T5—inquiry is not dependent on the timing of the inquiry into the M25 link roads. I have already announced that the T5 inquiry will open in May 1995.

European Commission Grants

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total value of grants from the European Commission given for bricks and mortar projects in the last financial year.

Sir Paul Beresford: The Secretary of State for the Environment was responsible for administering the majority of European regional development fund programmes which operated in England between 1989 and 1993. My officials are liaising with colleagues in other Departments, who had similar responsibilities for other European Community programmes and grant regimes during this period, in order to provide my hon. Friend with a full answer. I shall write to him with this information as soon as possible.

In the meantime, I can provide figures for the programmes administered by this Department. I have interpreted "bricks and mortar" projects as those which included building and construction costs as part of their total eligible expenditure. Our records show that, from 1 April 1993 to 31 March 1994, claims from the European regional development fund totalling £119,490,056.48 were paid for projects of this type. This figure includes claims for a number of projects approved under the structural funds regime which operated before 1989.

Disabled People

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what plans he has to include disabled households in council tax band A in the disability reduction scheme; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what assistance is available to a person who is substantially disabled and lives in a property included in band A of the council tax system and applies for a tax reduction; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: We have no plans to change the reduction for disabilities scheme. The scheme ensures that disabled people do not pay more council tax as a result of their special needs than would otherwise be the case. Households in band A are already paying the lowest possible level of tax. Disabled people on a low income may be entitled to council tax benefit.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the duration of the trips referred to in his answer of 28 October, Official Report, column 863, which were undertaken by Ministers in his Department and on which they were accompanied by their spouses and paid for at public expense.

Mr. Gummer: Four days.

Rent-to-mortgage Scheme

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the cost of publicity and administration of the rent-to-mortgage scheme.

Mr. Robert B Jones: Paid publicity by the Department on the rent-to-mortgage scheme cost £315,000. A further £99,000 was spent on printing and distributing leaflets. The Department has no estimate of the administrative costs of the scheme.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many responses have been received by his Department from residents of Hampshire since the Local Government Commission published its preferred options for reorganisation; and how many supported the proposed changes and how many rejected them.

Mr. Curry: As at 5 pm on 14 December, we had received 1,821 letters form members of the public, of which 178 support the Local Government Commission's final recommendations for Hampshire. In addition, Hampshire county council encouraged residents to forward pre-printed leaflets expressing their views. Some 10,202 leaflets have been returned, with 607 expressing support for the recommendations.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the changes in financial arrangements, both revenue and capital, for local authorities made since 1979 and their implications.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: As one would expect, over so long a period there have been many changes in financial arrangements, some of which are now of historical interest only. The present legislative regime is contained principally in the Local Government Finance Acts 1988 and 1992 as regards recurrent expenditure and the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 as regards capital.

Correspondence

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many "Dear Accounting Officer" letters his Department has written to his non-departmental public bodies in each year since 1984.

Sir Paul Beresford: "Dear Accounting Officer" letters are issued by the Treasury. Since 1984, they have issued 174. Where appropriate my Department has drawn these to the attention of the non-departmental public bodies which it sponsors.

Housing Expenditure

Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to make an announcement about the distribution of housing resources for 1995–96.

Mr. Curry: I am today announcing decisions about the distribution of resources for housing in 1995–96.

Councils will receive housing investment programme allocations totalling over £1.27 billion for 1995–96. Under the competitive HIP process, we have again been able to direct resources to those councils who are best able to make use of them.

Within the HIP programme £994 million is for general purpose allocations, or housing "annual capital guidelines". As last year these have been allocated 40 per cent on the basis of a statistical assessment of local housing needs and 60 per cent. on a discretionary basis related to performance.

As part of the assessment of their performance, each local authority is required to submit a housing strategy statement, setting out a comprehensive framework for the housing programmes for at least the next three years, covering not only the plans of the local authority but the contribution to be made by the private housing sector. The strategy is prepared in consultation with all those interested in the local housing scene, including the Housing Corporation, housing associations, tenant's groups and the private sector. Once again, there is a continuing improvement in the performance of the great majority of local authorities, with most of them now producing good quality housing strategies.

In addition to these annual capital guidelines, £278 million has been allocated for private sector renewal and housing defects in the form of "specified capital grant". Once again, 40 per cent. of these resources have been distributed on a statistical assessment of local needs, and 60 per cent. on a discretionary basis.

I am depositing tables in the Library of the House showing each authority's annual capital guideline and specified capital grant allocation for 1995–96. Together, these comprise the HIP allocations. In addition, £314 million for continuing estate action commitments is being provided with the single regeneration budget next year. In addition, I am depositing a list of the authorities whose performance is assessed as being well above the average for their region.

The Housing Corporation's approved development programme provides for gross capital expenditure of nearly £1.2 billion in 1995–96. Some £870 million of this is available for homes for rent and some £280 million will be available for sale and incentive schemes which make effective use of the stock to house families in serious housing need much more quickly than would otherwise be the case. In addition some £35 million is available for housing association schemes which are part of city challenge and the rough sleepers initiative.

The Housing Corporation estimates that this programme should allow housing associations to provide some 52,000 new lettings in 1995–96. Over the three years to 1997–98, lettings from the Housing Corporation's approved development programme of some 135,000, together with output of some 45,000 from other sources such as housing association schemes supported by local authorities and cash incentive schemes, should mean that an estimated 180,000 new lettings will be produced over this period.

One of the key aims of the 1995–96 approved development programme is to make the most efficient use of the existing housing stock. Resources for short-life housing—mini housing association grant—have been increased to their highest level ever; do it yourself shared ownership will continue to be targeted principally at local authority and housing association tenants while resources for the tenants' incentive scheme increase steadily over the three years to 1997–98. Both DIYSO and TIS are efficient and cost-effective means to enable people to move into home ownership and vacate dwellings for others in housing need. A further key aim of the 1995–96 ADP is to focus increasingly on regeneration, both urban and rural. Some 40 per cent. of the resources for new approvals will be for regeneration purposes and will include rehabilitation schemes, schemes in city challenge and renewal areas, and short-life housing schemes. The Housing Corporation has also been asked to direct some 6 per cent. of the main rental and conventional sale programmes towards rural housing schemes.

The tables I am depositing in the Library of the House also contain details of the Housing Corporation's approved development programme for 1995–96.

Almshouses

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to amend the home energy efficiency scheme to allow residents of almshouses to qualify as householders.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Some people who live in almshouses are at present ineligible for HEES grants because they cannot be tenants and, therefore, fall outside the definition of householder in the regulations. Following representations, I propose to amend the regulations to enable people in this position to qualify for HEES grants provided they meet the other eligibility requirements. I also propose to extend HEES eligibility to protected occupiers and statutory tenants under the Rent (Agriculture) Act 1976, assured agricultural occupiers and cottars. The necessary statutory instrument to amend the regulations will be laid before the House as soon as possible.

Going for Green Committee

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of meetings held, the secretarial and advisory arrangements, and the budgeted and actual expenditure and the subjects of any reports and submissions produced by the Going for Green Committee, since its inception.

Sir Paul Beresford: The Going for Green Committee, which is an advisory body, has held three meetings since it was established on 1 August 1994. It has a running costs budget for 1994–95 of £150,000, of which some £53,000 has been spent to date, and its secretariat consists of two full-time civil servants on secondment from the Department. The committee is not required to produce reports but is required to plan a public campaign for 1995–96 on individual responsibilities towards the environment. It has commissioned research to help guide its work.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many tenants of private landlords are receiving housing benefit in each local authority in England; and what percentage this represents in each case of the total number of tenants of private landlords in that area.

Mr. Roger Evans: I have been asked to reply.

The available housing benefit information has been placed in the Library. The percentages requested cannot be given as information on the number of tenants of private landlords in each local authority area is not available. However, the percentage of tenants of private landlords who receive housing benefit in England is 49 per cent.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the allowance per animal in real terms for the hill livestock compensatory allowance in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement as to his proposals for future levels of the allowance.

Mr. Ancram: The information is available in tables 5.2 and 5.3 of the statistical tables which formed the basis of the recently completed annual review of economic conditions in the hills and uplands. Full details of these statistical tables are available in the Library.

Future levels of the allowance will continue to be decided following the annual review which takes place each autumn.

Electricity Charges

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the price charged for electricity in pence per kilowatt hour to standard tariff domestic consumers for each year since 1990; what was the percentage change in average household electricity bills for each year since 1990; and what was the average annual household electricity bill for each year since 1990.

Mr. Ancram: The information requested is as follows:

	Standard domestic tariff [1](pence per kwh)	Average household electricity bills £	Change in average household electricity bills Per cent.

Public Expenditure Survey

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to arrange for the annual public expenditure survey to be formally announced in the House and then subject to a subsequent debate in Parliament; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Wheeler: My right hon. and learned Friend sets out the allocations to individual programmes within the Northern Ireland programme in a written answer. There are no plans at present to change this practice.

Mr. Dermott Nesbitt

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list all the respondents to the fair employment actions commenced by Mr. Dermott Nesbitt.

Mr. Ancram: The respondents in the first of two applications to the fair employment tribunal made by Mr. Dermot Nesbitt are the Queen's university of Belfast and Professor T.F. Barrett and in the second is the Queen's university of Belfast. This information is in the registers which are available for inspection by members of the public without charge at the Office of the Industrial Tribunals and the fair employment tribunal, Long Bridge house, 20-24 Waring street, Belfast BT1 2EB.

Single Programme Monitoring Committee

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list all the members of the Northern Ireland single programme monitoring committee, indicating the interests each represents.

Sir John Wheeler: In addition to Government and European Commission officials, the Northern Ireland single programme monitoring committee also includes outside members drawn from various key sectors. These are Mr. Sean Curran, industry sector, Professor Wallace Ewart, training sector; Mr. Desmond Mitchell, district councils; Mr. Norman Shaw, agriculture sector, and a member to be drawn from the voluntary sector.

Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress is being made in implementing the report of the Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights on legislative procedures for Northern Ireland.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The Government's response to the commission's report was published in July 1993. The Government continue to consider carefully all proposals for legislation for Northern Ireland so as to choose the most appropriate legislative route and allow sufficient time for consultation. It remains the Government's policy to promote the return of responsibility, including responsibility for legislation, to a locally accountable body which would command widespread support in the community and take account of the wider relationships.

Water

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects to identify sensitive areas as required by the urban waste water treatment directive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moss: I have today placed in the Library of the House a map of the two areas in Northern Ireland, namely Upper and Lower Lough Erne and Lough Neagh, which, on the advice of the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland, have been identified as sensitive areas on the basis of their eutrophic status. I have also placed in the Library a list of the sewage treatment works in these areas at which the installation of phospherous removal plants will be required by the end of 1998 in accordance with the directive. These decisions will make a significant contribution to safeguarding Northern Ireland's fresh waters.

The map and list will also be available for inspection at the headquarters offices of the environment service and water executive of the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Brandreth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects to identify high natural dispersion areas—less-sensitive ares—as required by the urban waste water treatment directive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moss: I have today placed in the Library of the House a map showing three areas in Northern Ireland identified as high natural dispersion areas. The map shows the location of these areas, at Portrush, County Antrim; Bangor, County Down; and Kilkeel, County Down. On the basis of the information available, the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland considers that the provision of primary treatment for the named discharges into these areas will be sufficient and that no further environmental benefit will accrue from the provision of additional levels of treatment. I have accepted this advice.

Comprehensive studies will now be carried out at each location. The Department must be satisfied that the study demonstrates that the proposed discharge of primary treated effluent will not adversely affect the environment. The comprehensive studies will have to take into account the proximity of bathing waters identified under the EC bathing water directive.

These decisions will ensure that sewage will continue to receive proper treatment and the quality of Northern Ireland's coastal waters and estuaries will improve in accordance with the directive's timetable.

The map will also be available for inspection at the headquarters offices of the environment service and water executive of the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland.

"Policing in the Community"

Mr. Brandreth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what responses he has received to the consultation document "Policing in the Community"; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The consultation paper "Policing in the Community" was published on 29 March, and widely distributed. More than half the bodies which received copies responded. Ministers and officials held constructive meetings with representatives of some 30 organisations, including the representatives of members of constitutional political parties.

The process of consultation on policing issues was warmly welcomed. The consultation paper was necessarily cast in general terms, and some respondents called for more detail on major proposals. There was a clear agreement on the need for some reform and an evident wish for the continuation of a tripartite structure, with attention addressed to the respective roles and responsibilities of the Secretary of State, the Chief Constable and of the Police Authority. The operational independence of the Chief Constable was valued, and the integrity and efficiency of the RUC was widely recognised.

Respondents stressed the importance of responsive, effective, impartial and fair policing in the development of a peaceful and harmonious society. The need for a balanced and careful approach to this end in a changing society was widely recognised.

These responses and the widening of the debate since the cessation of violence by the IRA and the loyalist paramilitaries have reinforced the need for reform, approached in a careful and measured way. In particular, I consider it important to strengthen the statutory protection for the impartiality, integrity and freedom from partisan influence of the police, and to create stronger and more effective statutory accountability mechanisms. These will encourage dialogue between the police and the community, as well as give the Chief Constable greater freedom to manage and deploy efficiently the considerable resources devoted to policing.

Accordingly, work is in hand to develop ideas, with the benefit of continued consultation, for legislation which will meet these objectives, clarify and strengthen the respective roles of the Secretary of State, the Police Authority and the Chief Constable, and help to enhance the provision of an efficient, effective and responsive police service, enjoying the wholehearted support and partnership of the entire society it exists to serve. I look forward over the coming months to further valuable and wide-ranging dialogue.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) males and (b) females were in full-time employment in the latest month for which figures are available and for the same month in each of the last 10 years indicating, in each case and for each year, the proportion of this figure as a percentage of the total population.

EMPLOYMENT

Legal Minimum Wage

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries have a legal minimum wage; and what has been the rate of job creation of each for the periods (a) 1970 to 1980, (b) 1989 to 1990 and (c) 1990 to the present day.

Mr. Oppenheim: The following table gives Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries which have some minimum laws at a national level, and their rate of employment growth and average unemployment for the periods concerned. It should be noted that some of the countries quoted have very low levels of minimum wages, well below national average wage levels; and in some cases the minimum levels vary between administrative areas and different industries.

SMW = statutory minimum wage; final column gives average unemployment rate for 1990 to 1993 except for Belgium and Netherlands 1990 to 1992—and Greece and Luxembourg—1990–1991.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will list the proportions of full-time adult manual workers, full-time adult non-manual workers and all full-time adult workers with earnings, including overtime, less than £208.53 per week in (i) Great Britain, (ii) west midlands region, (iii) West Midlands metropolitan County, (iv) Hereford and Worcester, (v) Shropshire, (vi) Staffordshire and (vii) Warwickshire for 1994; and if he will break down the figures into those for (a) male and (b) female workers;

(2) if he will publish a table giving proportions of full-time adult manual workers, full-time adult non-manual workers and all adult workers with earnings, excluding overtime, less than £208.53 per week in (i) Great Britain, (ii) west midlands region, (iii) West Midlands metropolitan county, (iv) Hereford and Worcester, (v) Shropshire, (vi) Staffordshire and (vii)

Warwickshire for 1994; and if he will break down the figures into those for (a) male and (b) female workers.

Mr. Oppenheim: Information available from the new earnings survey showing the proportions of employees with earnings below the amount requested at April 1994, is given in the following tables:

Full-time employees on adult rates—pay unaffected by absence: April 1994.

New Earnings Survey

Civil Servants

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many civil servants have been transferred to training and enterprise councils and local enterprise companies on a three-year secondment; how many were at grade (a) senior information officer, (b) higher information officer, (c) higher executive officer and (d) senior executive officer; how many in each grade returned to the civil service upon completion of their secondment; how many of those in each grade have since left the civil service on early retirement, voluntary redundancy or similar schemes; and how many of those remaining in the civil service by grade are below the age of 58 years.

Miss Widdecombe: Approximately 4,000 staff volunteered to second to training and enterprise councils and local companies on three-year secondments, including some 21 SIOs, 144 HIOs, 855 HEOs and 178 SEOs. About 10 SIOs, 77 HIOs, 526 HEOs and 128 SEOs returned to the Department. Some five SIOs, 43 HIOs, 71 HEOs and 12 SEOs left on early retirement schemes. Most of those remaining are below 58 years of age.

Pesticide Monitoring

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people within the Health and Safety Executive are employed in connection with its pesticide monitoring function; and at what locations.

Mr. Oppenheim: No Health and Safety Executive staff are employed specifically to monitor pesticides. HSE inspectors based in a national network of 20 area offices undertake a programme of preventative inspection, including premises where pesticides are used, and investigate reported incidents. Trends are monitored and summaries of investigated incidents are published annually.

Benefit Claimants

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what flexibility he allows in the 21-hour per week rule for those engaging in education or training while claiming benefit.

Mr. Roger Evans: I have been asked to reply.

The 21-hour rule is itself a special concession to the normal availability for work conditions, which enables income support claimants who are unemployed to spend their time usefully in part-time study whilst continuing their search for work. They must continue, however, to make a sustained effort each week to find a job and be prepared to leave the course immediately a suitable vacancy becomes available.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Foreign Prisoners

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) male and (b) female foreign inmates were held in prisons in England and Wales on 8 December.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 15 December 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking how many (a) male and (b) female foreign inmates were held in prisons in England and Wales on 8 December.

The latest available provisional information is for 30 September 1994. On that date there were 3,850 non-British citizens (3,535 males and 315 females) in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales. This includes 620 male and 30 female nationals from the Irish Republic. A further 440 persons had no nationality recorded.

Immigrant Detainees

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) men and (b) women were being held in either prisons or immigration detention centres in England and Wales on 8 December.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: On 9 December 1994, there were 48,512 males and 1,927 females held in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales. A further 110 males were held in police cells. Information on immigration offenders relates to those detained on 12 December and shows that there were 382 males and 49 females detained in immigration service accommodation. A further 32 males and four females were held in police cells for immigration offences on that date.

Pepper

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what research he has (a) undertaken and (b) commissioned into pepper foam and pepper spray;

(2) what assessment he has made of the dangers of the public use of pepper foam and pepper spray.

Mr. Maclean: The Home Office police scientific development branch has reviewed all the available information about the effects of incapacitant products containing oleoresin capsicum. My right hon. and learned Friend has commissioned research into the possible carcinogenic effects of oleoresin capsicum's main incapacitating ingredient, capsaicin. He expects to receive the final results of the research very shortly.

Immigration Officers (Airports)

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those United Kingdom airports receiving schedules flights from abroad open to the public for normal ticket purchase which are not covered by immigration service staff on arrival in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The airports are as listed in my reply to a question from the hon. Member on 29 November 1994, column 553.

Sexual Offences

Mrs. Liddell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce legislation to enable the prosecution in United Kingdom courts of British nationals and residents for sexual offences against children abroad.

Mr. Maclean: The Government consider that it should be the responsibility of the country where the alleged offence has occurred to enforce its own law.

Unlike some countries which claim a wide extra-territorial criminal jurisdiction over their citizens, the United Kingdom is willing to extradite its nationals to stand trial in the places where they are alleged to have offended, subject to the usual safeguards. We are also willing to provide legal assistance to other countries under the Criminal Justice (International Co-operation) Act 1990. We are currently considering ways in which it may be possible to improve liaison between our police and foreign enforcement agencies.

Criminal Damage and Violence

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance is given to police authorities on whether incidents of criminal damage or violence should be recorded as crimes.

Mr. Maclean: When recording offences, police consult Home Office rules for classification and counting of crimes which are standard for all the police forces in England and Wales. The classification of crimes is determined by precise statutory definitions. It includes all offences of criminal damage, as well as offences of violence against the person, sexual offences and robbery, as defined in Appendix 3 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales 1993", a copy of which is available in the Library.

Domestic Violence

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the co-ordinated Government strategy aimed at reducing the incidence of domestic violence; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Coventry, South East (Mr. Cunningham) on 1 December, Official Report, column 841.

Working groups have been set up at both official and ministerial level to enhance inter-departmental co-operation in tackling all facets of domestic violence.

Immigration Policy

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his oral answer of 24 November, Official Report, column 716, when the Government will allow qualified majority voting provided for in article K, otherwise than in subsection (9) on matters that affect immigration policy.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: There is no provision for qualified majority voting in article K, except under article K3.2(b) in relation to measures implementing joint action. No joint action requiring implementing measures has been adopted on matters of immigration policy. When such joint action is proposed, we shall consider on their merits both the substance of the proposal and whether it would be appropriate to adopt the implementing measures by a qualified majority.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many parliamentary questions tabled in the last Session of Parliament were not answered on the grounds that the information sought was not held centrally by the Department.

Mr. Howard: Twenty-two.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total cost in 1993–94 to the Prison Service of holding persons detained under Immigration Act powers.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Robert Ainsworth, dated 15 December 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the total cost in 1993–94 to the Prison Service of holding persons detained under Immigration Act powers.

Most detainees are held in local prisons and remand centres, in which the average annual cost per place in 1993–94 was £21,373. We do not collect details of the costs for different types of prisoners.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons detained under Immigration Act powers were held in Prison Service established in 1993.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison

Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Robert Ainsworth, dated 15 December 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent question asking how many persons detained under Immigration Act powers were held in Prison Service establishments in 1993.

Provisional information shows that in 1993 1,840 persons were received into Prison Service establishments in England and Wales under Immigration Act powers.

On average 430 such persons were held in Prison Service establishments during the year.

Erlestoke Prison

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what occasions he has intervened with the governor of Erlestoke prison to suspend day release arrangements in the case of prisoners.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewes to Mr. D. N. Campbell-Savours, dated 15 December 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about temporary release arrangements for prisoners from Erlestoke Prison.

The Home Secretary has not intervened with the governor of Erlestoke prison to suspend day release arrangements in the case of any prisoners.

Telephone Tapping

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to facilitate the use of the British Telecom caller identification initiative to preventing telephone tapping and to use similar technology at telephone exchanges to detect third party connections.

Mr. Howard: None. I understand that the BT caller display facility could not support such applications.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review the Official Secrets Acts to ensure that an individual disclosing possible unethical or illegal actions, including telephone wire tapping, would be allowed a public interest defence.

Mr. Howard: We have no such plans.

Police Resources (Wales)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide details of the calculation used by his Department in determining appropriate provision for the Dyfed-Powys police; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The calculation used by the Home Office determined allocations of police grant for 1995–96. Details of that calculation are provided in the draft "Police Grant Report (England and Wales 1995–96", a copy of which was placed in the Library by my right hon. and learned Friend on 1 December.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy that Welsh police forces are able to maintain funding levels comparable with those of similar English forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. and learned Friend announced on 1 December, Official Report, columns 544–45, his provisional police grant allocations to police authorities in England and Wales for 1995–96. The provisional standard spending assessment allocations to Welsh police authorities are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the cost of pension provision to the budget of the Dyfed-Powys police for each year from 1987 to date; if he will give an estimate of the commensurate figures for 1995–96 and 1996–97; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Net pension payments by the Dyfed-Powys police authority, as derived from the annual police revenue grant claim forms submitted by the authority, for the period 1987–88 to 1993–94 were as follows.

Year	£
1987–88	3,008,079
1988–89	2,693,674
1989–90	3,528,776
1990–91	3,509,717
1991–92	4,222,518
1992–93	4,025,892
1993–94	5,253,417

Figures for 1994–95 are not yet available. It will be for Dyfed-Powys police authority, in setting their budget requirements for 1995–96 and 1996–97, to decide the appropriate provision to be set aside to meet pension costs.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the officer establishment for the Dyfed-Powys police; how many officers are in post; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The approved establishment for Dyfed-Powys police is 972 officers. At the end of September, the actual strength was 971. As from 1 April next year, formal approval of establishments will end, and complement levels will be entirely for local decision.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what will be the cost of the DNA provisions of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 to the Dyfed-Powys police in a full accounting year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The new power we have given the police to take non-intimate samples without consent from anyone charged or reported for caution for a recordable offence is permissive. The police are not required to take samples in every case. Costs will therefore depend upon what use Dyfed-Powys police make of this new power. That will be a decision for the chief constable, who must decide on the most effective use of the resources available to him.

Samuel Clayton Hill

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will refer the case of Samuel Clayton Hill for review by the Court of Appeal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: My right hon. and learned Friend expects to take a decision about this case shortly.

"Maltese Double Cross"

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice has been sought by the Dumfries and Galloway police from the Metropolitan police in relation to the film "Maltese Double Cross".

Mr. Maclean: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the Metropolitan police have provided assistance to and maintained regular contact with the Dumfries and Galloway constabulary throughout the investigation into the Lockerbie bombing.

Policing, Humberside

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has decided the future policing arrangements for Humberside.

Mr. Howard: I announced on 25 October, Official Report, columns 512–13, that I would consult the forces, police authorities and local authorities in the area on the future policing arrangements for Humberside and also ask Her Majesty's chief inspector of constabulary to report on the viability of a police force based on the boundaries of the four unitary authorities which will replace the county of Humberside.

The majority of those who responded favoured the retention of a separate Humberside police force. Her Majesty's chief inspector of constabulary considers that a force based on the boundaries of the four unitary authorities would be viable and efficient.

I have therefore decided that the Humberside force will be retained on those revised boundaries, with the area around Goole in the present district of Boothferry transferring to North Yorkshire.

The necessary provisions to give effect to this decision will be included in the order for the reorganisation of local government in the area.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Nuclear Energy

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information has been recently provided to him by Nuclear Electric regarding operational risks at the Dungeness B and Heysham nuclear plants.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Nuclear Electric plc has recently informed my Department and the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate of the discovery of cracks in steam pipe welds during the statutory outage of reactor 21 of Dungeness B. The station will be brought back into operation only after a satisfactory safety case has been made by the operator to the NII.

Nuclear Accidents

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had with British Nuclear Fuels plc since April on the legal requirements relating to the level of insurance against nuclear accidents.

Mr. Charles Wardle: DTI officials are in regular contact with British Nuclear Fuel plc on a range of matters.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to end the 30 years restriction on claiming of compensation under the existing nuclear insurance arrangements by anyone developing adverse medical problems attributable to contamination from a nuclear accident.

Mr. Charles Wardle: None. The 32-year time limit for claims in the United Kingdom legislation is longer than is required by international conventions.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what arrangements exist under the nuclear insurance provisions to provide for compensation to pay for environmental restoration in the event of a nuclear accident involving the significant release of radioactivity; and what plans he has to extend them.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Under United Kingdom law, the cost of environment restoration would be recoverable, where there is damage to property, in accordance with normal civil law principles as to the assessment of damages.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to reassess the level of insurance arrangements covering third party liability for compensation in the event of an accident at a nuclear facility.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The level of insurance for third party liability required to be held by nuclear operators is kept under review. The limit was most recently increased on 1 April this year to meet the internationally agreed target limit for parties to the Paris convention.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has held since April with the insurance industry as to the adequacy of the present upper limits of insurance cover in connection with liability for nuclear accidents.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The limits are kept under review. DTI officials have contact with the insurance industry from time to time.

Public Telephones (Unauthorised Displays)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 8 December, Official Report, columns 295-96, what is his policy on the continued allowing of unauthorised displays at public telephones, what representations he has received from telephone companies in regard to their inability to disconnect lines advertised in unauthorised displays at public telephones; and what legislation other than telecommunication legislation could be amended to allow the disconnection of lines advertised in unauthorised displays at public telephones.

Mr. Ian Taylor: I share my hon. Friend's concern at the nature of some of the displays of unauthorised material to be found in public telephone boxes. Although I have not received any formal representations from telephone companies on this matter, my Department has discussed it with other interested Departments and Oftel. However, I am not convinced that disconnecting the lines displayed in unauthorised advertisements is an appropriate remedy.

Sellafield

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on how many days since it was started the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield has operated at full capacity; and what quantities of (a) plutonium, (b) depleted uranium and (c) each category of radioactive waste arising have been separated in the THORP to date.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Operations at the THORP plant are a management matter for British Nuclear Fuels plc. The Commissioning programme for the plant is being implemented subject to the appropriate regulatory requirements.

Correspondence

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many "Dear Accounting Officer" letters his Department has issued to his non-departmental public bodies in each year since 1984.

Mr. Heseltine: "Dear Accounting Officer" letters are issued by the Treasury. Where appropriate, my Department draws the contents of "Dear Accounting Officer" letters to the attention of the non-departmental public bodies which we sponsor. We do not keep records of the precise numbers which are brought to the attention of individual non-departmental public bodies.

Libya

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the loss to British engineering firms of exports to Libya as a result of UN sanctions.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The British Government neither promote nor discourage trade with Libya. We are unable to assess any actual loss of trade to British engineering firms. I can tell the hon. Member however, the legitimate exports of general industrial machinery and equipment constitutes the bulk of our exports to Libya. Figures for United Kingdom trade with Libya over the past five years are given in the table.

Theatre Tickets

Mr. Trend: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action he proposes to take to prevent consumers from being misled when they buy tickets for the theatre and other forms of entertainment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Taylor: Following public consultation, my noble Friend Earl Ferrers has today made the Price Indications (Resale of Tickets) Regulations 1994. Under the regulations, those who resell tickets will have to disclose specified information about a ticket before making a sale. This will include any original price printed on the ticket and known information about the rights which it confers, such as the location and quality of the seat or space. The regulations will come into force on 20 February 1995.

A compliance cost assessment, which was prepared by my Department, concluded that this significant improvement in consumer protection will impose little, if any, additional costs on traders. Copies of the compliance cost assessment have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Trade Fairs

Mr. Trend: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will announce the results of the evaluation of his Department's trade fairs support scheme.

Mr. Needham: The evaluation of the trade fairs support scheme was undertaken for the DTI by KPMG Management Consulting. They surveyed a cross-section of exhibitors from 15 sectors of industry representing two thirds of all supported firms, trade associations, chamber of commerce, exhibition organisers and other interested parties. KPMG's report to the Department and the Department's response are being published today. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House of Commons.

The TFSS is designed to encourage UK exporters to move into new markets. Last year, the Department spent £14 million on the scheme in support of some 6,500 to 7,000 firms at around 300 events. The scheme is based on grants which are delivered to exhibitors through "sponsors" such as trade associations or chambers of commerce. Eligible applicants receive 50 per cent. grants towards the main costs of exhibiting. Outside western Europe, a travel grant is also paid for up to two people to man the stand.

I welcome the evaluator's report, which shows that there is a clear justification for retaining the scheme.

The Department agrees with KPMG's conclusion that the rule under which companies are only eligible for support for three trade fairs in any market, the so-called "three times rule", should be retained. The survey provided strong evidence that the three times rule increases value for money by removing from eligibility regular exhibitors at a single event, ensuring that for a given budget more firms benefit from the TFSS support.

In response to suggestions that some companies might find support more helpful in this form, the Department will however be prepared to offer firms who opt for it a variant on the three times rule, under which support is offered at half the normal rates, over twice as many events.

The report recommends that international events, currently known as "flagship" events, should no longer attract support for more than three participation as they do at present, but should cease to be subject to individual country quota. The Department accepts this recommendation in principle and will consult sponsors on which events will constitute a new "international" category.

The present scheme restricted government assistance for overseas trade fairs by requiring that a minimum number of participating firms be eligible for support. The report recommends that minimum numbers for these events should not be based solely on those eligible for grant. The Department accepts that the benefits of attendance depend on the numbers in the group, not on whether they are all supported.

The Department has not accepted KPMG's recommendation that priority be given to emerging markets with above average exports prospects, or which have significant entry barriers, by allowing five, not three, supported participation. The Department, however, accepts the need to improve the scheme's coverage of such markets. We consider the annual priorities exercise, which selects the trade fairs which are to be supported, a more appropriate way of improving the scheme's coverage of emerging markets. In addition, the Department will increase assistance to sponsors in the selection and promotion of fairs by providing greater information on new markets and fairs with above average exports prospects.

The Department does not accept, as a general rule, the recommendation that individual company participation be grant-aided where there is no group participation arranged. However, the Department will consider claims for treatment as a special case from unrepresented or self sponsored small industries.

KPMG's research indicated that the sponsor system was in principle the most appropriate way of delivering trade fairs support. Their report however suggested ways of improving sponsor performance. The Department has proposed revised criteria for sponsorship and will step up its monitoring of sponsor performance and produce a code of practice for sponsors. The Department is not in general in favour of introducing competition between sponsors, but sees advantages in opportunities for greater co-operation between sponsors and the private sector.

The changes I have announced will take effect from the 1996–97 programme. All in all this was a positive evaluation of the Government's support for overseas trade fairs.

Compliance Cost Assessments

Mr. Trend: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the compliance cost assessments published during the past year.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Since April 1993, the Government have required Departments to prepare and publish compliance cost assessments with all proposed legislation presented to Parliament to assess their impact on business costs. This includes a special test of the impact on small businesses. CCAs are central to the Government's deregulation initiative and are a vital part of the decision making process. They are used to help Parliamentary consideration of regulatory proposals and to give business the opportunity to respond to proposals.

A Command Paper listing those CCAs published between November 1993 to June 1994 has been presented to Parliament today by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade. Copies of the CCAs listed are available in the House Library. Further Command Papers listing CCAs published in the preceding six-month period will be published at six-monthly intervals.

Accreditation Services

Mr. Trend: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the outcome of his review of the status of the national measurement accreditation service and the National Accreditation Council for Certification Bodies.

Mr. Ian Taylor: My Department published a consultation document in April on the future provision of accreditation services in the United Kingdom. In the light of the response to this consultation, which favoured a merger of NACCB and NAMAS, the Government propose that a new company limited by guarantee be established during 1995 to take on the current functions and staff of NACCB and NAMAS. This will involve the transfer of around 60 posts out of DTI.

The company will carry out, under a memorandum of understanding with DTI which will recognise its national status, the assessments currently carried out by the two organisations covering laboratories, test houses and certification bodies. It will also cover environmental verifiers and inspection bodies and, as appropriate in future, others in related fields. The new body will make recommendations to the DTI which will grant accreditation. As a consequence accredited organisations will continue to be entitled to use marks incorporating the royal crown.

I expect a single, integrated private sector organisation to achieve efficiency savings leading to lower costs for industry. The organisation will also be in a strong position to promote United Kingdom interests in the rapidly developing international markets for certification and testing services in both the voluntary and regulatory spheres. With this in mind, the Government have decided that the body should be open to applications from non-United Kingdom organisations seeking accreditation.

British Telecom

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what plans he has to introduce regulations requiring British Telecom to meet minimum technical quality standards for voice, fax and data transmission in remote or rural areas;

(2) what plans he has to introduce regulations requiring British Telecom to meet minimum technical quality standards for voice, fax and data transmission.

Mr. Ian Taylor: I do not believe that it would be justified at present to introduce regulations on minimum technical quality, either generally or specifically in relation to remote or rural areas. BT's investment programme in digital exchanges is already raising transmission standards, and increasing competition in the telecommunications market means consumers are offered a wider range of service levels and tariff packages.

SCOTLAND

Clyde Tunnellers

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he will take to ensure that former tunnellers who worked on the Clyde tunnel between 1959 and 1964, and who subsequently contracted bone necrosis as a result of this work, will be able to pursue compensation claims.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend need take no action in this matter. Current legislation allows claims to be raised within three years of the date on which the injuries were sustained. This period can be extended where the claimant did not realise at the time how serious the injuries were or where he was unaware that the injuries were attributable to an act or omission of his employer. Furthermore, where the pursuer is not entitled to such an extension, the court has discretion to admit a claim if it seems equitable to do so.

Fatal Road Accidents

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to improve the provision of information to the victims' relatives concerning the investigation of fatal road accidents in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Procurators fiscal are authorised to provide the next of kin with information about the circumstances of the death. Where a fatal accident inquiry is to be held, procurators fiscal will discuss the evidence with solicitors for interested parties and will provide them with copies of autopsy reports and, if appropriate, with statements of witnesses. A working party is reviewing the guidelines on the provision of information to the next of kin.

Hospices

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of hospice expenditure is publicly funded.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Under the hospice funding initiative, which began on 1 April 1990 and ends on 31 March 1995, 13 hospices in Scotland which meet the eligibility criteria receive 50 per cent. of their current running costs from public funds, by grant and/or in kind. From the start of the 1995–96 financial year, the initiative will be replaced by a system of contracts between hospices and health boards.

Forestry

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 24 November, Official Report, column 337, if he will place in the Library a list of the co-ordinates of the exact boundaries of each tract of land disposed of by the Forestry Commission in 1993, as noted on the title deed map for each sale.

Sir Hector Monro: The Forestry Commission does not hold this information centrally and it could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Regional Development Funding

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those public projects which received European regional development funding and were subsequently privatised over the last 10 years, indicating (a) the level of funding and (b) the dates when it was received.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 24 November 1994]: As the information the hon. Member requires is rather lengthy, I shall arrange for copies of the lists to be placed in the Library of the House.

Rent Acts Convictions

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each year since the creation of the offence (a) the number of prosecutions for unlawful eviction and harassment of occupiers and (b) the number of convictions sustained under (i) section 30 of the Rent Act 1965 and (ii) section 22 of the Rent (Scotland) Act 1984.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 7 December 1994]: The available information is set out in the table.

Number of Persons proceeded against and charges proved where the main charge is section 22 of the rent (Scotland) Act 1984, 1989–92

	Persons proceeded against	Persons with charge proved
1989	9	7
1990	11	9
1991	6	3
1992	8	6

Health Care International

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the cost to public funds of making the site in Clydebank ready for use by the Health Care International hospital.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 7 December 1994]: The Scottish Development Agency—Scottish Enterprise incurred expenditure of around £10 million under its land renewal powers on the site now occupied by the company at Clydebank. This work was required to deal with the effects of industrial dereliction, including particularly the presence of asbestos. The expenditure was not specific to the HCI project and would have been required in any case to render the site safe and capable of development for any future use.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will tell the Scottish Affairs Committee how much regional selective assistance was made available to Health Care International in Clydebank and the terms under which it was made available.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 7 December 1994]: Yes. The company received an offer of £22 million in regional selective assistance. The grant was to be paid in instalments related to capital expenditure on construction of the hospital and—in respect of later instalments—in respect of numbers of direct jobs created.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) whether he will make available to the Scottish Affairs Committee the detailed information on which he made his decision to give public support to Health Care International in 1987;

(2) what considerations led to his decision to classify 1987 information about the market for the treatment of overseas patients in Clydebank as being currently commercially confidential, as indicated in his answer of 3 November, Official Report, column 1315, and his subsequent letter.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 7 December 1994]: The documents relating to the appraisal of the company's application for regional selective assistance and the detailed market evaluation studies undertaken in connection with the project contain commercially confidential information which, if disclosed, could harm the competitive position of Health Care International (Scotland) Ltd. or of any other organisation which takes over the operation of the Clydebank facility.

Local Authority Officials (Early Retirement)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has from local authorities about the number of applications for early retirement for senior local authority officials for any convenient period in 1994.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 13 December 1994]: This information is not held centrally.

Air Ambulances

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how much has been spent on a communications system in the Scottish ambulance service control room in Aberdeen; what contact can be made with air ambulances once they are airborne with the communications system; and if he will make a statement about the expenditure.

(2) what assessment he has made of the reason that the new emergency communications computer in the Scottish ambulance service control room in Aberdeen is not compatible with the radios on air ambulances in the north of Scotland; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what plans he has to upgrade the emergency communications computer in the Scottish ambulances service control room in Aberdeen to enable adequate communication with the air ambulances in the north of Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 14 December 1994]: The general manager of the Scottish ambulance service has advised that £8 million has been spent on providing a new radio system for the Scottish ambulance service in the north of Scotland, this includes the ambulance controls in Aberdeen and Inverness.

The new system, which has recently become fully operational, is meeting fully its designed performance in providing for effective communication between road ambulance and ambulance control. Communication with aircraft was not part of its specification, nor is it suitable for his purpose.

Air ambulances are tasked and controlled from a dedicated air desk at Aberdeen ambulance control. These aircraft are fitted with radios that enable them to talk to air traffic control and to their company base location. However, communication with any aircraft flying at low level in hilly or mountainous terrain poses particular problems. The Scottish ambulance service has successfully introduced the practice of using a message pager to pass urgent messages to an air ambulance when flying in such areas. Means of achieving fully two-way radio communication for helicopters supporting the emergency service throughout the United Kingdom are being investigated.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what restrictions have been placed on air ambulance operations in the north of Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 14 December 1994]: The general manager of the Scottish ambulance service has advised that no restrictions have been placed on the use of the air ambulance service in the north of Scotland or elsewhere in Scotland. Air ambulances are deployed where the circumstances make it appropriate to do so. The decision is taken by the air ambulance control desk based on the medical advice at the time.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Executive Search Agencies

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what use his Department has made of executive search agencies in filling vacancies within his Department and executive agencies administered by his Department during the last year; and how much these services have cost his Department.

Mr. Goodlad: None.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the duration of the trips referred to in his answer of 2 November, Official Report, column 1205, which were undertaken by Ministers in his Department and on which they were accompanied by their spouses and paid for at public expense.

Energy Charter Treaty

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will sign the energy charter treaty.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom will sign the energy charter treaty when it is opened for signature in Lisbon on 17 December. The Under-Secretary of State for Industry and Energy will sign on behalf of the Government. We welcome this very important agreement, which represents the result of lengthy and complex negotiations between 50 countries, including the European Union, the G7, all the states of the former Soviet Union, Western, Eastern and Central Europe, and Australia. We believe that the treaty will make a valuable contribution to the economic reform processes in the economies in transition, as well as improve the conditions for foreign investors in those countries. Details of the treaty were communicated to both Houses in explanatory memoranda on 20 December 1993 and 6 October 1994.

The text of the treaty will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses 21 sitting days before the United Kingdom deposits an instrument of ratification with the depositary of the energy charter treaty, the Government of the Portuguese Republic.

Telephone Tapping

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to clarify the Intelligence Services Act 1994, with regard to telephone wire tapping.

Mr. Hurd: None.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in what circumstances the term wireless telegraphy in the Intelligence Services Act 1994 is taken to include telephone wire tapping.

Mr. Hurd: None. The Interception of Communications Act 1985 deals with the interception of telephones and is unaffected by the Intelligence Services Act.

Turkish Kurds

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Turkish Government against the prison sentences imposed on eight Kurdish Members of Parliament recently jailed by the Turkish authorities in Istanbul.

Mr. David Davis: Our views were reflected in a statement issued by the German presidency of the EU on 9 December, on behalf of all EU member countries, expressing concern at the harsh prison sentences imposed on these elected members of the Turkish Parliament, and seeking an explanation from the Turkish Government. We await the outcome of the appeal against the sentences we understand will be made.

Burundi

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the role of the international community in strengthening democratic government in Burundi following the recent visit of the Minister for Overseas Development to Burundi.

Mr. Baldry: My noble Friend the Baroness Chalker of Wallasey visited Burundi in August. She made clear our strong support for the efforts of the UN, in particular the UN Secretary-General's special representative, as well as the Organisation for African Unity, in their attempts to promote national reconciliation and stabilise the situation. We continue to do so. We welcome the recent agreement on power sharing and urge all parties in Burundi to continue to look for a lasting solution to the country's problems.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Attorney-General how many parliamentary questions tabled in the last Session of Parliament were not answered on the grounds that the information sought was not held centrally by the Department.

The Attorney-General: Twenty-four, 17 of which were grouped for answer on 21 April 1994, Official Report columns 632–33.

Brendan Smyth

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Attorney-General if his office contacted officials in the Irish Attorney–General's office about the then outstanding warrants for Father Brendan Smyth in September, October and November 1993.

The Attorney-General: I refer the hon. Member to my written replies to the hon. Member for Thurrock of 21 November 1994, Official Report, columns 37–38, and 28 November 1994, Official Report, column 512.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his answer of 5 December, Official Report, columns 17–18, if he concurs with the statement contained in the Irish Attorney–General's report of 1 December to the Taoiseach in respect of the Brendan Smyth extradition case on the timings of contacts between the United Kingdom authorities and the Irish Attorney–General regarding the matter and the conclusions drawn on whether the matter was considered urgent; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I refer the hon. Member to my written replies to him of 21 November 1994, Official Report, columns 37–38 and 28 November 1994, Official Report, column 512.

In cases such as this, documentation is supplied to the Irish authorities from which they are able to assess the urgency and importance of the case. In so far as the matter is the subject of specific time constraints, it is the practice to draw attention to them.

PRIME MINISTER

Ministers

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister what percentage of members of the House are now in ministerial office or employed as parliamentary private secretaries; and what was the figure in 1978.

The Prime Minister: Nineteen per cent. of Members of this House are parliamentary private secretaries or hold ministerial office, which is broadly similar to 1978. The information is a matter of public record.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if he will list the number of Ministers in the Government by rank currently and in 1978; and if he will explain the reasons for the differences;

(2) how many Ministers there are currently in the Cabinet; how many there were in 1978; and what are the reasons for the difference.

The Prime Minister: The information requested is a matter of public record. The reasons for any differences will depend on the reasons for allocations of ministerial portfolios in 1978 by the then Prime Minister, now Lord Callaghan of Cardiff.

Parliamentary Private Functions

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Prime Minister when he expects to provide a full reply to the question from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton concerning parliamentary private functions.

The Prime Minister: I have done so.

Economic Community

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister if Her Majesty's Government consider themselves bound by the undertakings given at the time of the 1975 referendum on EEC membership.

The Prime Minister: It is not clear which undertakings the hon. Member has in mind.

Ministerial Travel (Spouses)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Prime Minister on how many occasions in the past year his spouse has travelled abroad to accompany him at public expense on public duties; what has been the total cost of this to public funds; on how many occasions such travel has been undertaken at own cost; and what was the destination and the duration of these foreign trips.

The Prime Minister: During the past year, my wife has accompanied me on overseas visits on two occasions, as follows:

Date	Visit
13–15 February 1994	Russian Federation
18–22 September 1994	Saudi Arabia, United Arab Emirates, South Africa

On both occasions, costs attributed to my wife were minimal because she travelled on charter aircraft and stayed as "Guest of Government" or at residences.

There have been no occasions when such travel was undertaken at own cost.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 15 December.

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 15 December.

The Prime Minister: This morning, I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Lockerbie Bombing

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will seek discussions with the Prime Ministers of Malta and Sweden about the implications of clothing found in the wreckage of Pan Am 103.

The Prime Minister: The investigation of clothing found in the wreckage of Pan Am flight 103 is the responsibility of my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate and Dumfries and Galloway constabulary, acting where necessary in co-operation with the authorities of other countries concerned, which have included Malta and Sweden.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what documentary evidence is in the possession of Her Majesty's Government in respect of baggage loaded on to Pan Am 103 at Frankfurt in December 1988.

The Prime Minister: As the hon. Member is aware, it would not be appropriate to reveal details of the evidence against the two persons accused of the Lockerbie bombing while criminal charges are pending.

Security Vetting

Sir Anthony Durant: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement about the procedures for security vetting within government.

The Prime Minister: As I announced to the House on 23 March, Official Report, columns 259–60, to ensure that security measures and procedures reflect current threats, the Government have recently completed a fundamental review of their arrangements for the management of protective security in Departments and agencies. In the area of personnel security, the review concluded that the vetting process served a worthwhile purpose, not only in disclosing circumstances which might lead to breaches of security but as a deterrent to those who might otherwise seek to undermine that security. The review recommended, however, that there should be a streamlining of the procedures that made up the vetting process. That work has now been completed.

The new framework should ensure that personnel security objectives are properly defined and that responsibility for achieving them is clearly established. There will be a greater emphasis on ensuring that personnel security resources are targeted on, and proportionate to, the threat and add necessarily and cost-effectively to the protection of government assests. Between 1 January and 31 March 1995, the existing arrangements will be replaced by a new personnel security regime which will consist of two levels of vetting, a security check and developed vetting. A security check will be similar to the current PV(S)—positive vetting (secret)—clearance, but will in addition include a check on the financial status of the individual. Developed vetting will replace the present PV(TS)—positive vetting (top secret)—and EPV—extended positive vetting—levels of vetting. The current system of counter terrorist checks will remain unchanged, but will be subject to review.

As at present, all candidates for security vetting will be asked to complete a security questionnaire which will explain the purpose of the procedure and invite them to provide the personal details required for the necessary checks to be carried out. Vetting will then be carried out on the basis of the statement of policy set out below.

Statement of HM Government's vetting policy

In the interests of national security, safeguarding Parliamentary democracy and maintaining the proper security of the Government's essential activities, it is the policy of HMG that no one should be employed in connection with work the nature of which is vital to the interests of the state who:

is, or has been involved in, or associated with any of the following activities:

—espionage,

—terrorism,

—sabotage,

—actions intended to overthrow or undermine Parliamentary democracy by political, industrial or violent means; or is, or has recently been:

—a member of any organisation which has advocated such activities; or —associated with any organisation, or any of its members in such a way as to raise reasonable doubts about his or reliability; or is susceptible to pressure or improper influence, for example because of current or past conduct; or has shown dishonesty or lack of integrity which throws doubt upon their reliability; or has demonstrated behaviour, or is subject to circumstances which may otherwise indicate unreliability.

In accordance with the above policy, Government departments and agencies will carry out a Security Check (SC) on all individuals who require long term, frequent and uncontrolled access to SECRET information or assets. A Security Check may also be applied to staff who are in a position directly or indirectly to bring about the same degree of damage as such individuals or who need access to protectively marked material originating from other countries or international organisations. In some circumstances, where it would not be possible for an individual to make reasonable progress in their career without clearance to SECRET level, it may be applied to candidates for employment whose duties do not, initially, involve such regular access.

An SC clearance will normally consist of:

a check against the National Collection of Criminal Records and relevant departmental and police records;

in accordance with the Security Service Act 1989, where it is necessary to protect national security, or to safeguard the economic well-being of the United Kingdom from threats posed by persons outside the British Islands, a check against Security Service records; and credit reference checks and where appropriate, a review of personal finances.

In some circumstances further enquiries, including an interview with the subject, may be carried out.

Individuals employed on government work who have long term, frequent and uncontrolled access to TOP SECRET information or assets, will be submitted to the level of vetting clearance known as Developed Vetting (DV). This level of clearance may also be applied to people who are in a position directly or indirectly to cause the same degree of damage as such individuals and in order to satisfy the requirements for access to protectively marked material originating from other countries and international organisations. In addition to a Security Check, a DV will involve:

an interview with the person being vetted; and references from people who are familiar with the person's character in both the home and work environment. These may be followed up by interviews. Enquiries will not necessarily be confined to to past and present employers and nominated character referees.

It is also the Government's policy that departments and agencies will carry out Counter Terrorist Checks (CTC) in the interest of national security before anyone can be:

authorised to take up posts which involve proximity to public figures at particular risk of attack by terrorist organisations, or which give access to information or material assessed to be of value to terrorists:

granted unescorted access to certain military, civil and industrial establishments assessed to be at particular risk of attack by a terrorist organisation.

The purpose of such checks is to prevent those who may have connections with terrorist organisations, or who may be vulnerable to pressure from such organisations, from gaining access to certain posts, and in some circumstances, premises, where there is a risk that they could exploit that position to further the aims of a terrorist organisation. A CTC will include a check against Security Service records. Criminal record information may also be taken into account.

Departments and agencies generally assure themselves, through the verification of identity, and written references from previous employers, that potential recruits are reliable and trustworthy. Such Basic Checks (BC) are already standard procedure for many departments and agencies. Where access needs to be granted to Government information or assets at CONFIDENTIAL level, departments, agencies and contractors engaged on government work are required to complete such checks. In some cases, at the CONFIDENTIAL level, where relevant, the Basic Check may be augmented with some of the checks normally carried out for security clearances.

"Maltese Double Cross"

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he has had from President Clinton about the showing of the film "Maltese Double Cross" in the White house, Washington, on the morning of Sunday 4 December; and whether he has offered to the White house all evidence pertaining to the Pan Am 103 destruction over Lockerbie in the possession of Her Majesty's Government.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 14 December 1994]: I have received no such representations. The investigation into the Lockerbie bombing has been carried out in conjunction with the United States authorities, with whom all evidence has been shared.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment he has made of Alan Fancovitch's film, "Maltese Double Cross", in relation to sanctions against Libya and loss of United Kingdom-Libya trade.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 14 December 1994]: The content of the film is being considered by the Crown Office and Dumfries and Galloway constabulary.

TRANSPORT

International Civil Aviation Organisation

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how often his Department evaluates the performance of the United Kingdom's permanent representation on the International Civil Aviation Organisation in Montreal.

Mr. Norris: Evaluation is continuous, since the Department is in constant touch with the United Kingdom representative to the ICAO over the representation of the United Kingdom's interests on a variety of aviation subjects. The Department also formally evaluates the performance of the United Kingdom representative to the ICAO council using standard annual reporting procedures.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what new steps his Department is planning to ensure the more effective representation of United Kingdom interests at the International Civil Aviation Organisation in Montreal.

Mr. Norris: The United Kingdom's permanent staff at ICAO have been successful in representing the United Kingdom's interests in the work of the ICAO council and the Air Navigation Commission, and their work is highly regarded among the international aviation community. In recent months, our United Kingdom representatives have played a major part in influencing ICAO action in the fields of future global air traffic management systems and the oversight of aviation safety.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how often senior staff in his Department meet colleagues in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office to discuss the work of the Britain's representation at the International Civil Aviation Organisation in Montreal.

Mr. Norris: Staff at all levels meet whenever necessary to discuss aviation issues of common interest which might be, or are being, pursued at ICAO. In particular, the DOT is represented at meetings held twice yearly by the FCO to discuss the United Kingdom's policy interests in the UN specialised agencies, for which ICAO is one.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to visit the International Civil Aviation Organisation in Montreal to evaluate the effectiveness of Britain's presence there.

Mr. Norris: My right hon. Friend has no such plans. Senior officials from my Department are in close touch with our representation at ICAO, and have recently visited it; they report as necessary to me and my ministerial colleagues on issues that arise.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) United Kingdom and (b) Canadian staff are employed in the British office supporting United Kingdom membership of the International Civil Aviation Organisation in Montreal.

Mr. Norris: There are four staff in the British office at ICAO in Montreal. Two, the United Kingdom representative and his deputy, the air navigation commissioner, are outposted in Montreal from the Department of Transport in the United Kingdom. The remaining two are locally recruited support staff, one a United Kingdom and the other a Canadian national.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what is the annual cost to his Department of the United Kingdom's representation on the International Civil Aviation Organisation in Montreal;

(2) what is the annual cost to his Department of the United Kingdom's representatives' office to the International Civil Aviation Organisation in Montreal.

Mr. Norris: The outturn cost for 1993–94 of the United Kingdom office, including staff pay costs, was some £270,000. All these costs were borne by the United Kingdom Department of Transport; none accrued to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

Network SouthEast

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current subsidy per head for commuters on Network SouthEast.

Mr. Watts: The information is not available in the form requested. However, Government support for Network SouthEast in 1993–94, the last year of its operation, amounted to some 36p for every pound the passenger paid.

A(M) Roads

Mr. Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the criteria used for the designation of trunk roads as A(M): if he will list all trunk roads currently classified as A(M); and what plans he has to upgrade the A38 Exeter-Plymouth trunk road as A38(M).

Mr. Watts: The decisions to build or improve sections of trunk road to motorway standards, thereby attracting motorway style signs and legal requirements, are taken in consideration of the traffic needs of the particular route and the increased safety which results from higher geometric standards. The way in which a motorway standard length would fit into the wider trunk road network is also relevant.

Trunk roads currently classified as A(M) are:

A1(M)—several sections
A66(M)—Darlington
A194(M)—near Newcastle upon Tyne
A3(M)—near Portsmouth
A40(M)—London area
A102(M)—London area
A423(M)—Maidenhead

A study of the future needs of the A38 between Exeter and Plymouth is under way which includes consideration of motorway status, but serious problems could arise in upgrading the road to motorway.

Road Programme Director

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the present road programme director to leave his service; what severance terms and conditions have been agreed; and what assurances the director has given about subsequent employment by companies with a present or planned commercial interest in road design, build or management contracts.

Mr. Watts: I expect the present road programme director to leave the Highways Agency in summer 1995. The severance terms will be those provided for in the principal civil service pension scheme for staff who leave on early retirement. Any proposals from the current road programme director regarding subsequent employment will be subject to the terms of the business appointment rules as they apply to officials at grade 3 level in the civil service.

New Drivers

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has regarding the percentage of drivers involved in fatal accidents who (a) have passed their driving test in the previous year and (b) are under 21 years of age.

Mr. Norris: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has regarding the percentage of accidents on motorways involving drivers who (a) have passed their driving test in the previous year and (b) are under 21 years of age.

Mr. Norris: The information requested is not available.

Roads Expenditure

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will announce the allocation of capital resources for expenditure on local roads and transport in England for 1995–96.

Dr. Mawhinney: This year, a total of £960 million is to be allocated to local highway authorities and passenger transport authorities in England for capital expenditure on their local transport infrastructure in 1995–96. This consists of £278 million in transport supplementary grant and £682 million in annual capital guideline, supplementary credit approval, grant under section 56 of the Transport Act 1968 and grant under section 13 of the Industrial Development Act 1982. With the help of capital reserves and developer contributions, I therefore expect authorities to be able to spend over £1,000 million in total.

In this year's settlement, I am funding 37 packages of measures proposed by local authorities outside London to encourage public transport, cycling and walking and to offer attractive alternatives to car use. I am also providing funding for a number of measures in London, including the London bus priority network and the London cycle network.

I am setting aside resources for 10 new major public transport schemes which are expected to begin construction in 1995–96. They include the Croydon tramlink and Midland metro light rail schemes subject to satisfactory terms being agreed.

I am also accepting 28 new road schemes for funding for the first time. These include bypasses and relief roads designed to take traffic away from congested areas, and schemes designed to provide access to the national road network from key industrial areas.

Table 1 sets out the national totals for different types of expenditure. Table 2 shows the total amounts of grant, credit approval and gross approved expenditure for each of the 108 local highway authorities, and the six passenger transport authorities. The Department's regional offices are notifying them today of their allocations. Table 3 contains the package allocations, and table 4 lists the new major road and public transport schemes accepted this year. Table 5 contains comparable information for London.

Road safety remains a high priority. Within the overall total, the level of funding for local safety schemes has been maintained at the record level of £50 million allocated in each of the past two years.

Some £117 million is being allocated for assessment, strengthening and maintenance of local authority bridges, and £141 million is for the structural maintenance of principal roads.

Clyde Port Authority

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the financial implications of the bid by Regis and Regis for the Clyde port authority.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 14 December 1994]: There are no financial implications for the Government arising from these bids.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much money was paid to Clydeport Holdings by the Clyde port authority after the payment of the levy to his Department following the sale of the port authority.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 14 December 1994]: The sale proceeds were £26.0 million; the levy £11.6 million. The Clyde port authority retained the remainder, £14.4 million. After the relevant expenses and liabilities had been met, all sums held by the authority were by virtue of section 7(2) of the Ports Act 1991 transferred to the successor company, Clydeport Holdings, upon the dissolution of the authority.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if Clydeport Holdings will have to pay a clawback on the proceeds of the Braehead site; and how much it will be.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 14 December 1994]: Yes. The amount has yet to be settled.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what grounds he paid the costs of the Clyde port authority's expenses for promoting a privatisation Bill; and what were those costs.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 14 December 1994]: Some £528,593 was allowed after careful consideration of the authority's claim under section 13 of the Ports Act 1991.

Aircraft Noise

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from residents in the Coventry and the Warwickshire areas regarding aircraft noise.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 14 December 1994]: From January 1992 to date, the Department has received 23 representations from residents in the Coventry and Warwickshire areas regarding aircraft noise. These include 13 representations direct from members of the public, a further five representations forwarded by hon. Members on behalf of their constituents, and three from hon. Members themselves.

HEALTH

Hospital Beds (Closures)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospital beds have closed in London since the Tomlinson report was published.

Mr. Malone: The Tomlinson report used data for 1990–91. Provisional examination of the 1993–94 bed data for London suggests that the reduction in the number of available acute sector beds, excluding day beds, over the period 1990–91 to 1993–94 has been 1,896.

Pensioners

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list (a) in rank order and (b) by county (1) the total number of people of pension age and above in each constituency;

(2) the percentage of the population of pension age and above in each constituency.

Mr. Sackville: The available information requested has been taken from the 1991 census of population for England and Wales and will placed in the Library.

Breast Cancer

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has on the rate of breast cancer in Israel following the banning of the use of lindane; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: In the 1970s, Israel had a high level of breast cancer compared to other countries. This fell during the period 1976 to 1986. Researchers and scientists in Israel suggested that a cause might be the withdrawal of louse powder containing lindane, used on cattle: they noted that before 1986 the Israeli population had been exposed to very high levels of lindane in milk. Levels reported in milk in Israel were up to 1,200 times higher than the highest residues observed in the United Kingdom as reported in the 1993 annual report of the working party on pesticide residues, copies of which are available in the Library.

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research projects she has commissioned which are investigating the links between exposure to lindane and the incidence of breast cancer; and if she will list them.

Mr. Sackville: None. The main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant in aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. The MRC is an independent body deciding what research to support on its own expert judgement. The Department of Health expert committee on carcinogenicity has been asked to advise on any relationship between organochlorines, including lindane, and breast cancer when it next meets in March 1995, and will consider the latest available research.

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has made to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food concerning the banning of lindane.

Mr. Sackville: The approval and review of pesticides is the joint responsibility of six Government Departments, including the Department of Health. Ministers are advised by a body of independent experts, the Advisory Committee on Pesticides. This committee last reviewed the non-agricultural uses of lindane in 1992. It found a very substantial body of evidence indicating that lindane presents no unacceptable risk to human health when used in accordance with statutory directions. Furthermore, there was no epidemiological evidence to suggest that lindane causes an increased risk of cancer, even among those who work with the compound. It therefore advised that approvals should continue.

The Advisory Committee on Pesticides is currently reviewing lindane's agricultural uses and its review should be completed by spring 1995. Additionally, the Department of Health expert committee on carcinogenicity will consider the latest available research on any relationship between organochlorines, including lindane, and breast cancer, when it next meets in March 1995.

Blood

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans she has to ensure that a change to fewer and larger blood collection sessions will not lead to a substantial drop in the number of donors;

(2) what plans she has to ensure that the closure of five regional blood transfusion centres will not lead to a shortage of blood supplies throughout the United Kingdom.

Mr. Sackville: It is the responsibility of the National Blood Authority to ensure that an adequate supply of blood is available to meet the needs of hospitals. The authority has made it clear that, under its proposals, whatever services hospitals receive now they will receive in future. With regard to blood collection, the authority's proposals envisage an increase in the number of collection team bases to provide more effective coverage of the country.

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) where she proposes to site the new blood stockholding units; and what facilities they would provide;

(2) what is her estimate of (a) the number of jobs which will be lost by the closure of five regional blood transfusion centres and (b) the cost in redundancy payments to those made redundant;

(3) what criteria were used to decide which five of the present 15 regional blood transfusion centres should be closed.

Mr. Sackville: These are matters for the National Blood Authority to consider in the light of its thorough and widespread consultation. The results of the consultation will be carefully considered before decisions are made.

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what criteria are used to estimate the annual budget required by the National Blood Authority.

Mr. Sackville: As part of the business planning process, the National Blood Authority estimates the running costs of the Blood Transfusion Service, the Bio Products Laboratory and the International Blood Group Reference Laboratory, and takes account of income from blood handling charges, and sale of manufactured blood products.

Community Care

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how she will seek to ensure that community psychiatric nurses and other members of community teams focus on the needs of people with severe mental illness and long-term problems following the recommendation by the Audit Commission.

Mr. Bowis: By issuing good practice guidance and by focusing the mental illness specific grant on the severely mentally ill.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will consider how bridging finance could be made available for the reprovision of community care in place of some hospital care following the recommendations of the Audit Commission.

Mr. Bowis: I refer the hon. member to the reply I gave the hon. and learned Member for Montgomery (Mr. Carlile) on 12 December, Official Report, column 470.

Replacement Funding

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many organisations are receiving grants under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968; how many of these grants are due to (a) expire or (b) be reduced from March 1995; and what proposals she has to assist these organisations to secure replacement funding.

Mr. Bowis: There are some 382 voluntary organisations due to receive 523 grants from the Department under our section 64 general scheme during 1994–95; 238 of these are due to expire on 31 March 1995. Many will be core grants, eligible for consideration for renewal. The general presumption is that all core grants will be subject to a degree of tapering, particularly in their later years.

Mentally Ill People

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will consult the Home Office and the Department of the Environment to develop solutions to the problems of housing for mentally ill people, including mentally ill offenders, following the recommendations of the Audit Commission.

Mr. Bowis: Officials meet regularly with colleagues from other Departments to discuss a wide range of issues concerning mentally ill people, including housing.

Accident and Emergency Departments

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many accident and emergency departments it is currently proposed to close.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally. It is the responsibility of each health authority to ensure that there is an accident and emergency service available to all people in its area.

Low Birth Weights

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the percentage of babies born in each (a) regional health authority and (b) district health authority who weighed less than 2.5 kg at birth in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Sackville: The latest year for which information is available is 1992 and was published in the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys annual monitor DH3 93/1 "Infant and Perinatal Mortality 1992: RHAs and DHAs"; comparable data for 1993 will be published on 21 December 1994 in the annual monitor DH3 94/2 for 1993. Copies of the monitor will be available in the Library.

Hospital Developments

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what circumstances health authorities or trusts are told that they will not be allowed to go ahead with agreed schemes of new hospital development without there first being a guarantee of parts of the capital cost being funded from the private sector; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: When health authorities and national health service trusts seek approval from the NHS executive for new capital schemes, they now are required to explore the option of private finance.

NHS Research and Development

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she accepts the recommendations of the report of the NHS research and development task force chaired by Professor Anthony Culyer; and if she will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Since Professor Culyer's report "Supporting Research and Development in the NHS" was published on 14 September, we have had valuable discussions about it with the academic and research communities and beyond. The broad thrust of the report has been welcomed.

I have now decided to introduce a new system of funding and supporting research, based largely on the report's proposals, to come into effect from 1996–97. The key points are:

—The introduction of a "single funding stream" for NHS research and development, service support for Research and Development and research facilities.

—The intention to raise Research and Development funds by a levy on purchasers of health care.

—Changes in the advisory structure for Research and Development, including revised terms of reference and membership for the Central NHS Research and Development Committee (CRDC). The CRDC will have a new role advising the NHS to invest its Research and Development funds.

—The creation of a new national forum to bring together the major health-related research funders to provide advice for the NHS and the Government.

I am also announcing today that an extra £8 million will be available in 1995–96 for research commissioned by the NHS.

The intention is to set a framework for funding and supporting research in the NHS for the long term and to provide a clear focus for future discussions about the detail of implementation.

These decisions follow my recent announcement of a £40 million increase for 1995–96 in the earmarked funds dedicated to meeting the NHS costs of medical and dental education and research. Together, they underline the Government's strong commitment to the NHS research base and using it to develop further a knowledge-based service.

A note giving further details of the new funding system has been placed in the Library.

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will ensure that the national health service continues to support undergraduate medical education following the recommendations made by the NHS research and development task force chaired by Professor Culyer.

Mr. Malone: I have asked Dr. Graham Winyard, national health service executive health care director, to chair an advisory group to make recommendations by March 1995 on future arrangements for allocating funds and contracting for NHS service support and facilities for teaching medical undergraduates. The aim is for the new arrangements to take effect, after appropriate consultation, in April 1996.

Membership of the advisory group will be drawn from a range of interests in the NHS and in education. A copy of the terms of reference will be placed in the Library.

Capital Funding

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list (a) NHS trusts and (b) directly managed units which have received funding from (i) the Department of Health and (ii) the private sector for capital projects in each of the last four years, showing in each case the amount of funding involved.

Mr. Sackville: I shall let the hon. Member have such information as is available as soon as possible.

Dental Services

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much is spent on dental treatment of the molars as a proportion relative to the remaining 20 teeth.

Mr. Malone: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes she plans to the chairmanship for the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Following consultation with my colleagues in the Scottish Office, the Welsh Office and the Department of Health and Social Services, Northern Ireland, I am pleased to announce that from 16 December the chairman of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority will be Ruth Deech, who is principal of St. Anne's college, Oxford.

Professor Sir Colin Campbell steps down after four years as chairman of the authority.

I would like to place on record the Government's appreciation of Sir Colin's unstinting commitment to the demanding work of the authority and to the aims of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990. Under his leadership the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority has become an internationally respected regulatory body which enjoys the confidence of the public, Parliament, the professions and the research community.

Management Costs

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the estimated annual savings in NHS management costs arising from the Health Authorities Bill arising from (a) the abolition of the regional health authorities, (b) the elimination of overlapping functions between regional health authorities and the Department of Health, (c) reductions in the number of health authorities and (d) merger between the family health service authorities and the district health authorities.

Mr. Malone: We estimate that, when the Health Authorities Bill is fully implemented, it will lead to annual savings in national health service management costs of approaching £150 million. Of this, over £100 million per year will arise from the abolition of regional health authorities and the remainder from the replacement of family health services authorities and district health authorities with unified health authorities, including savings from the reduction in the number of DHAs in preparation for the creation of HAs.

Savings from the elimination of overlapping functions between RHAs and the NHS executive have not been separately identified but, as well as forming part of the savings at regional level, will contribute to the savings of some £50 million to be made in the running costs of the Department of Health by 1997–98.

All these savings will be put into patient care.

District Health Authorities

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what (a) surpluses and (b) deficits were recorded by each district health authority in each of the last three years.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 12 December 1994]: The information will be placed in the Library.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Biwater Group Ltd.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many applications for aid and trade provision finance have been made by the Biwater Group Ltd. since 1983; to which country these applications pertained; what were the costs of the contracts and amount of aid and trade provision sought; and which of the applications were (a) granted and (b) refused, giving details of the dates, countries and contracts involved and the amount requested or granted.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my hon. Friend the Member for Morecambe and Lunesdale (Sir M. Lennox-Boyd) on 17 February, Official Report, column 937, and to his reply to the hon. Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke) on 14 February, Official Report, column 568. In addition to the projects listed, the Biwater Group Ltd. currently has one ATP project under offer and subject to negotiation and one under consideration; given their status, both these projects are commercial in confidence. Information on unsuccessful applications is not maintained centrally in either ODA or DTI and such information could be assembled only at disproportionate cost.

Population Control

Mrs. Liddell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what funds have been made available in the current financial year to the United Nations Population Fund; and for what purpose.

Mr. Baldry: Our contribution for the 1994–95 financial year to the United Nations Population Fund's core programme was £8.5 million. This included an exceptional grant of £1.5 million to assist with follow-up work to the international conference on population and development.

Additional sums have been made available for specified purposes from bilateral programmes.

Mrs. Liddell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what funds have been made available to the International Planned Parenthood Federation in the current financial year; and for what purpose.

Mr. Baldry: Our contribution for the 1994–95 financial year to the International Planned Parenthood Federation's core programme was £7.5 million with an extra £0.45 million for its sexual health programme. Additional funds have been available for specified purposes from bilateral programmes.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much money Her Majesty's Government pledged at the Cairo Conference on population and development to a programme to promote reproductive health and an improved quality of life and if it is his policy that this will be money additional to the existing budget and no taken from other projects that fall into the category of social development.

Mr. Baldry: At Cairo, we said we expect to commit £100 million for population and reproductive health programmes in 1994 and 1995. Funds to meet the spending against these commitments will be made available from within the overall aid programme in the relevant years. These commitments will not be at the expense of other on-going projects in the social field.

Crown Agents

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has to change the external financing limit for the current year for the Crown Agents.

Mr. Baldry: The external financing limit for the Crown Agents as set out in the statistical supplement to the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" 1994–95—Cm 2519—has been increased from zero to £3.5 million. This is due to a classification change and has no consequence for public expenditure.

TREASURY

Utility Company Securities

14. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the effect on the valuation of utility company securities in (a) the national balance sheet and (b) the corporate sector balance sheet if a windfall profits tax was introduced on utility company pre-tax profits at a rate of (i) 10 per cent. and (ii) 20 per cent.

Mr. Nelson: Although it is not possible to estimate the precise impact, such a tax would hit significantly the value of utility companies, reduce investment and limit the scope for price reductions.

Motor Fuel

15. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for how many years he intends to increase duty on motor fuel.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The commitment remains to increase duty on road fuels in future Budgets by on average at least 5 per cent. in real terms.

VAT (Fuel)

16. Mr. Graham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on how VAT on domestic fuel will impact on households at differing income levels.

21. Mr. Ainger: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on how VAT on domestic fuel will impact on households at differing income levels.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I refer to the oral answer that my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer gave to the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle) earlier today.

Incomes

17. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on income distribution.

Sir George Young: Real incomes have risen on average for all economic status groups since 1979—risen 50 per cent. for pensioners, risen for the unemployed, risen for those in full-time work and in part-time work and risen for the self employed. Sound finance and sustained growth are the only way to raise living standards for all, rich and poor alike.

Taxation (Retired People)

19. Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect of his recent tax proposals on retired people who have savings over £3,000; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The increase in the personal income tax allowance for the aged announced in the Budget is worth over £2 a week for most basic rate paying pensioners. This is on top of a rise in pensioners' real income after tax averaging about 50 per cent. between 1979 and 1992.

Living Standards

20. Ms Eagle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on living standards.

Sir George Young: I refer to the oral answer that my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer, gave to the hon. Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche) earlier today.

22. Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he intends to reduce the basic rate of VAT during the life of the current Parliament.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: As my right hon. and learned Friend made clear in his Budget, he has no plans to reduce the standard rate of VAT.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) at what financial threshold the decision is taken in respect of the prosecution of an individual or organisation for value added tax avoidance;

(2) what is his estimate of the level of value added tax avoidance.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 13 December 1994]: Tax avoidance is not an offence. There are no comprehensive, reliable estimates for the total of VAT avoided.

Child Benefit

23. Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when, in the past five years, he or his predecessors have announced increases in the level of child benefit.

Mr. Aitken: The information is in the table.

Date of Announcement	Effective Date	Announced by
24 October 1990	8 April 1991	Secretary of State for Social Security
19 March 1991	7 October 1991	Chancellor of the Exchequer
21 October 1991	6 April 1992	Secretary of State for Social Security
12 November 1992	12 April 1993	Secretary of State for Social Security
1 December 1993	11 April 1994	Secretary of State for Social Security
30 November 1994	10 April 1995	Secretary of State for Social Security

Budget Representations

24. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received following his Budget statement.

Sir George Young: Since my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer's Budget statement on 29 November, we have received a number of representations from organisations and individuals, on a wide range of Budget-related issues.

Single Currency

25. Mr. Gill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to renegotiate the timetable for a single currency at the forthcoming intergovernmental conference.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No. The United Kingdom protocol to the treaty of European Union, negotiated by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister at Maastricht, provides that the United Kingdom is not obliged to join a single currency. Any notification of United Kingdom intention to do so would require a prior Act of Parliament.

Macro-economic Policy

26. Mr. Hain: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes he plans for macro-economic policy.

Mr. Aitken: Macro-economic policy will continue to be set to achieve permanently low inflation and sound public finances. Chapter 2 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" 1995–96 sets out the framework of the Government's macro-economic policy.

Interest Rates

27. Mr. Booth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what effect interest rate changes since October 1990 have had on industry's interest rate bill.

Mr. Nelson: It is estimated that interest rate changes from October 1990 to date, when fully passed on, will have lowered companies' interest bills by at least £10.5 billion a year.

29. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about interest rates levied by the main clearing banks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: My ministerial colleagues and I continue to receive letters from clearing banks' personal and business customers about interest rates, but their number is diminishing, with rates now at levels well below those of a few years ago.

Balanced Budget

28. Mr. Liddington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to achieve a balanced budget.

Mr. Aitken: In the Budget, the public sector borrowing requirement was projected to fall rapidly over the next few years, and to be in small surplus by 1998–99.

Executive Pay

30. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has in respect of excessive executive pay rises.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to curb excessive executive pay rises; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: The Government believe that companies should exercise restraint in setting remuneration packages for their executives and that they should reflect performance. The Government do not consider that its proper role is to set levels to pay for executives of private companies. The salaries and other remuneration of any private company are a matter for the company and its shareholders.

Investment

Dr. Howells: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the effect his Budget will have on investment levels in the United Kingdom economy.

Sir George Young: I refer to the oral answer that I gave earlier to the hon. Member for Ellesmere Port and Neston (Mr. Miller).

Public Bodies (Underwriting Activities)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the answer from the Secretary of State for Wales to the hon. Member for Vale of Glamorgan (Mr. Sweeney) of 12 December 1994, Official Report, columns

515–16, which Government agencies and non-departmental public bodies other than the Welsh Development Agency have taken part in the underwriting of (a) Government privatisation share issues and (b) private share issues; and if he will list the share issues and in which year each underwriting activity occurred.

Sir George Young: The information requested is not held centrally.

Vehicles

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the total loss of revenue to the Treasury if the number of vehicles using Britain's roads were to be reduced by 1 per cent.; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Assuming that a 1 per cent. reduction in the number of vehicles on the roads was accompanied by a 1 per cent. reduction in the use of road fuels, then the loss of revenue would be around £200 million. This takes account of reduced receipts of vehicle excise duty, road fuel duties and consequential VAT. It takes no account of any increased receipts that might arise from increased spending on other items.

Tax Exemption Certificates

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many 714 tax exemption certificates were issued in each of the last five years;

(2) what estimate he has as to the loss of revenue resulting from the non-payment of national insurance contributions arising from both employer and employee contributions exempted under 714 tax exemption certificates;

(3) what estimate he has of the loss of revenue arising to the Exchequer from abuse of the SC60 self-employed taxation system;

(4) what estimates have been made of the loss of revenue resulting from work being done under 714 tax exemption certificates relative to the position that would obtain if those same employees worked within PAYE.

Sir George Young: The numbers of certificates issued or renewed were as follows:

	Numbers
1989–90	273,357
1990–91	224,830
1991–92	240,459
1992–93	213,010
1993–94	203,735

It is not possible to make any meaningful estimate of revenue loss resulting from the particular tax treatment of self-employment workers in the construction industry.

Gift Aid

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of donations to charity were made through gift aid for each year since its introduction.

Sir George Young: Information is not available on total donations to charities. The numbers and amounts of donations made under the gift aid scheme are shown.

	Number of donations	Amount of donations (£ million)
1990–91[1]	10,270	32.2
1991–92	55,160	163.3
1992–93	81,150	218.3
1993–94	123,850	245.6

[1] From 1 October 1990.

Exchange Rates

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the increase in the value of sterling against the ecu since its lowest point in 1993; and what is the forecast effect of such a change on imports and exports of manufactures after one, two and three years in terms of volume.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 14 December 1994]: Figures for the sterling ecu exchange rate are available on the Central Statistical Office, which can be accessed through the House of Commons Library. Export and import volumes are affected by a number of factors, including world trade, growth in United Kingdom export markets, export profit margins, domestic demand and competitiveness. A forecast of the growth in non-oil trade volumes taking into account all relevant factors was published in chapter 3 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report".

Retail Prices Index Advisory Committee

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to receive a report from the retail prices index advisory committee.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have today received two reports from the Retail Prices Index Advisory Committee. It makes recommendations on the treatment in the RPI of owner-occupiers' housing costs and cars. The full reports are being published this afternoon as Cm 2717 and Cm 1716 respectively and copies are available in the Vote Office.

In due course, I will announce my response to the recommendations. The committee has now completed its consideration of the topics in its current terms of reference.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Advisory Committee

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of meetings held, the secretarial and advisory arrangements, the budgeted and actual expenditure and the subjects of the reports and submissions produced by the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee in each of the last three years.

Mrs. Browning: The Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee has held three meetings each year since 1992. The secretariat is provided by this Department and the Department of Health. The budget for the SEAC is shared between MAFF and DH but the DH provision is not separately identified within an overall committee budget. Overall expenditure by the two Departments in the past three years was:

1992—£9,271
1994—£7,089

The committee regularly provides advice to Ministers, and where appropriate, this is put in the public domain, as in the reply given to the hon. Member for Woodspring (Dr. Fox) on 30 June 1994, Official Report, columns 657–58. SEAC produced an interim report in 1992 which has been placed in the House Library, on research into transmissible spongiform encephalopathies. A further report is in preparation.

Consumers Committees

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of meetings held, the secretarial and advisory arrangements, the budgeted and actual expenditure and the subjects of the reports and submissions produced by each of the consumers committees in (a) 1992, (b) 1993 and (c) 1994.

Mr. Jack: The consumers committees for Great Britain and for England and Wales met as one body five times during 1992, six times during 1993 and twice during 1994. The Scottish committee last met in 1975. Secretarial and advisory duties are part of the responsibilities of three officials in this Department.

Figures of expenditure are as follows:

Financial year	Budget £	Actual expenditure £
1992–93	7,000	5,682
1993–94	6,435	4,940
1994–95	6,000	1,826 —expenditure to 12 December 1994

In accordance with the Agricultural Marketing Act 1958, the views of the committees on the effects on consumers of agricultural marketing schemes are made known to Ministers in writing from time to time.

Badgers

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of meetings held, the secretarial and advisory arrangements, the budgeted and actual expenditure and the subjects of the reports and submissions produced by the Consultative Panel on Badgers and Tuberculosis in each of the last three years.

Mrs. Browning: The Consultative Panel on Badgers and Tuberculosis met once in 1991 and twice in both 1992 and 1993. The Ministry provides secretarial support to the panel and consistently draws on the panel's advice in determining its policies on badgers and bovine tuberculosis. The budget for each of the last three financial years was £4,728, £5,000 and £10,000 respectively with actual expenditure of £2,777, £2,558 and £6,720. The increase for 1993–94 reflected one off costs for a scientific seminar in November 1993 to review research with leading experts from the United Kingdom and Ireland. There have been no reports or submissions published by the panel during the last three years.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what monitoring there is of active badger setts along the route of the new A30 in east Devon; how many licences have been issued to disturb badger setts in this area; to whom they were issued; when they were issued; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Paul Beresford: I have been asked to reply.

English Nature is the appropriate licensing authority and issued one licence in August this year to environmental consultants who have surveyed 14 badger setts, including outlier holes, along the new A30 in east Devon. Monitoring of all setts is continuing throughout the coming winter to determine their current status of occupation. Under the Data Protection Act 1984, identification of individual licence holders is confidential.

Advisory Committees

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the functions and objectives of (a) the Sugar Beet Research and Education Committee, (b) the Consultative Panel on Badgers and Tuberculosis and (c) the Salmon Advisory Committee.

Mr. Jack: The functions and objectives of the three bodies are described in their terms of reference. These are:

(a) The Sugar Beet Research and Education Committee

"The Committee is appointed by the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Secretary of State for Wales to advise on an annual programme of research and education in matters affecting the growing of home-grown sugar beet."

(b) The Consultative Panel on Badgers and Tuberculosis

"i) To keep under review the evidence relating to bovine tuberculosis in badgers, including its distribution, its prevalence and its relationship to bovine tuberculosis in cattle;

ii) to advise on operations to be undertaken by the Ministry in order to limit the transmission of tuberculosis from badgers to cattle;

iii) to recommend research appropriate to the problem of badgers and bovine tuberculosis."

(c) The Salmon Advisory Committee

"To examine and report on those matters relating to the conservation and development of salmon fisheries in Great Britain which are referred to it by Fisheries Ministers."

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of meetings held, the secretarial and advisory arrangements, the budgeted and actual expenditure and the subjects of the reports and submissions produced by the Advisory Committee on Pesticides in each of the last three years.

Mrs. Browning: The Advisory Committee on Pesticides met on six occasions during 1994 and 1993 and five times in 1992. Details of the secretarial and advisory arrangements along with details of matters discussed and recommendations made by the committee are published each year in the Advisory Committee on Pesticides annual report. Copies of the report are held in the House Library. The committee has an annual budget of £40,000. Expenditure for the last three years was £32,889—1993–94, £26,022—1992–93, and £30,606—1991–92.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of meetings held, the secretarial and advisory arrangements, the budgeted and actual expenditure and the subjects of any reports and submissions produced by the Sugar Beet Research and Education Committee in each of the last three years.

Mr. Jack: The committee met four times in the financial year 1991–92, four times in 1992–93, and five times in 1993–94 excluding open days and special sub-groups. Secretarial support to the committee is provided by MAFF, and the committee's advice is given to the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Secretary of State for Wales.

Expenditure on committee members' attendance fees, and on travelling expenses for the Committee and its secretariat was as follows:

	1991–92 £	1992–93 £	1993–94 £
Budgeted	9,075	9,710	13,000
Actual	7,649	10,213	[1]7,861

[1] Subject to audit.

The Sugar Beet Research and Education Committee advises Ministers on the annual research and education programmes required by section 68 of the Food Act 1984. Details of the programmes are set out in the annual Sugar Beet (Research and Education) Orders—S.I. 1992/405, S.I. 1993/397 and S.I. 1994/407.

Agricultural Support

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the overall cost to the Exchequer of support to United Kingdom agriculture in each of the years 1964, 1970, 1980, 1990 and 1994 in actual and 1994 prices: if he will show each figure as a percentage of gross domestic product; and what was the percentage of net disposable income spent on food in each of these years.

Mr. Jack: The available information on total expenditure on agriculture in the United Kingdom and household expenditure on food is given in the table.

Year	Total expenditure on agriculture in the United Kingdom £ million[1] Current Prices	Expenditure on agriculture as a percentage of Gross Domestic Product £ million[1] 1993 Prices	Household expenditure on food as a percentage of Personal Disposable Income Per cent.	Per cent.
1964	264	2,736	0.77	20.5
1970	259	1,998	0.49	18.2
1980	1,012	2,083	0.43	14.8
1990	1,910	2,178	0.34	11.0
1993	3,015	3,015	0.47	10.0

Sugar Beet

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much per tonne is given to European farmers for growing sugar beet; and what is the value on the world market of sugar per tonne.

Mr. Jack: In the 1994–95 marketing year, European growers should receive, from those to whom they sell, at least the Community-established minimum prices of 38.69 ecu/tonne—£36.89/tonne[1]—and 23.89 ecu/tonne—£2.78/tonne[1]—respectively, for sugar beet contributing to A and B quota sugar.

Currently, quota sugar is being sold on the world market, with the aid of export refunds, at around 340 ecu/tonne—£324.22/tonne[1]. The cost of the refunds is largely offset by production levies on growers and processors.

Although the facility for intervention exists within the regime, no sugar is currently intervened, processors are paid storage aids on the tonnage they hold, the costs of the scheme being covered by a levy at point of first sale.

[1]1 ecu = £0.953575

Coastal Protection

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many people within his Department are employed in connection with its coastal protection function; and at what locations.

Mr. Jack: Currently, 61 people are employed in the Ministry's flood and coastal defence division, dealing with food defence matters as well as coast protection. They are based in London, Cambridge, Lincoln, Taunton, Tunbridge Wells and York.

Political Affiliation

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he seeks information on the political affiliation of candidates for appointment to paid or unpaid posts for which he is responsible (a) from within his Department or (b) from outside sources.

Mr. Jack: The Minister does not seek information on the political affiliation of candidates for either paid or unpaid posts.

Agricultural Council

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, what was the outcome of the Agricultural Council held in Brussels from 12 to 14 December; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I represented the United Kingdom at this meeting of the council, which lasted from 12 to 15 December. The council's major achievement was agreement on ground rules for implementing the general agreement on tariffs and trade Uruguay round agreement on agriculture. This package, including the framework agreement on bananas, will now pass to the Foreign Affairs Council on 19 and 20 December for formal adoption along with all other GATT implementation texts. This is a very important agreement for Britain in itself. In addition, I am glad to report that I achieved a range of measures designed to meet specific British interests, notably in relation to cereals, bananas, and commitments of benefit to the processed food industry. I also made clear to the Commission that the eventual arrangements for rice, which are not yet in place, must not disadvantage United Kingdom millers of high quality rice.

The council also discussed a Commission proposal to revise the agrimonetary regime. In the absence of an opinion from the European Parliament, no formal decision could be taken. But it was established that a qualified majority of the council existed in favour of a presidency compromise proposal which the Commission was prepared to support. I voted against this revised proposal because, although it abolished the potentially expensive and inflationary switchover mechanism which I strongly welcome, it also introduced unduly complex and potentially costly replacement arrangements to protect farmers in strong-currency countries against currency-induced falls in incomes. Denmark also voted against. The Commission tabled a proposal to prolong the present regime until 31 January 1995 pending a European Parliament opinion on the substantive proposal.

The council held a further discussion of the Commission's proposal on the welfare of animals in transit but was unable to reach agreement. I shall continue to press for strong and effective Community measures. But meanwhile I am introducing improved national measures to help fill the gap resulting from the absence of agreement by the council.

I voted against a council decision to continue the moratorium on bovine somatotropin until 31 December 1999 as this was without scientific justification. The decision was, however, adopted by qualified majority.

The Agriculture Commissioner, René Steichen, tabled a report supporting the case, for which the United Kingdom has long argued, for allowing land entered into environmental set-aside or woodland to be counted, under certain conditions, against the farmer's compulsory market set-aside requirement. The council committed itself to taking an early decision on this matter.

The council adopted unanimously proposals providing for continuation of New Zealand butter access to the United Kingdom and for continuation of sheepmeat imports from various third countries under existing voluntary restraint agreements. In both cases, these regulations apply until 30 June 1995 when they will be superseded by the GATT Uruguay round provisions.

Directive amending the fresh meat hygiene directive and milk hygiene directive, were agreed by qualified majority. On meat hygiene, I abstained, whilst the Dutch and Portuguese delegations opposed. The outcome on milk hygiene was generally highly satisfactory; however, I abstained because there were no provisions to permit the continued double pasteurisation of skimmed milk.

Finally, I am particularly delighted to report that the council agreed unanimously a new directive on minced meat and meat preparations directive which protects traditional British products including the British banger.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Income Support

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the annual savings in a full year to social security expenditure from withdrawing income support assistance with mortgage interest payments from new mortgages after October 1995 for nine months assuming that (a) all income support claimants with new mortgages are affected, (b) all income support claimants except lone parents are affected, (c) all income support claimants except lone parents and pensioners are affected and (d) all income support claimants except pensioners are affected.

Mr. Roger Evans: Details are set out in the table.

IS claimants affected	Savings October 1995 to October 1996 £ million
(a) all IS claimants with mortgages	18
(b) all IS claimants with mortgages except lone parents	15
(c) all IS claimants except lone parents and pensioners	14
(d) all IS claimants except pensioners	17

Notes:

(1) Savings are based on information from the 1993 annual statistical inquiry, uprated to 1995–96 levels.

(2) Savings have been estimated for a 12-month period from October 1995 to October 1996.

(3) Assistance with mortgage payments is withdrawn for the first nine months of a new claim from October 1995 for cases with new mortgages.

(4) Savings estimates exclude any estimates of behavioural effects.

(5) Figures are rounded to the nearest £1 million but are not accurate to this degree of rounding.

Family Credit

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the proposed family credit ceilings in 1995–96 for (a) a married couple with one child under five years, (b) a married couple with two children under 11 years, (c) a married couple with two children aged over 11 years, (d) a married couple with three children under 11 years, (e) a married couple with three children aged over 11 years and (f) a married couple with two children under 11 years and two children over 11 years.

Mr. Roger Evans: At the new benefit levels proposed for April 1995, the family credit ceilings represented by the highest amount of net earnings and other relevant income a family can have and still qualify for family credit at the minimum payment of 50p will be as follows:

Married couple with one child under 5 years	153.00
Married couple with two children under 11	169.29
Married couple with two children over 11, but under 16	190.71
Married couple with three children under 11	185.57
Married couple with three children over 11, but under 16	217.71
Married couple with two children under 11 and two children over 11, but under 16	223.29

Relevant income excludes child benefit, which is disregarded for Family Credit purposes. Therefore, in addition to the amounts above, a one-child family will have £10.40 child benefit a two-child family £18.85, a three-child family £27.30 and a four-child family £35.75. Relevant income also excludes the first £15 of any maintenance received.

Since October 1994, up to £40 a week per family in respect of formal child care charges incurred can be offset in the calculation of normal earnings for family credit. It applies where the care is for a child under 11 in the family of a lone parent, a couple where both are working, or where one is working and the other is incapacitated. This increases the potential ceilings still further.

Social Fund

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) successful and (b) unsuccessful applications were made to the social fund for (i) community care grants, (ii) budgeting loans and (iii) crisis loans for each quarter since 1988–89; and if he will give the reasons for the refusals.

Mr. Roger Evans: Quarterly information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Information on an annual basis is provided in the Secretary of State's annual reports on the social fund, copies of which are in the Library.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will reproduce the tables in annexes 6, 10 and 14 of the annual report on the social fund 1993–94, Cm 2598, on the basis of expenditure by application purpose in a form identical to that used in the annual report on the social fund 1992–93, Cm 2274.

Mr. Roger Evans: The information requested is not available. The introduction of the social fund computer system means that the data used to produce the annual report on the social fund for 1993–94 is held in a different form from that used for previous annual reports.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing annexe 1 of each annual report on the social fund, broken down according to client group definitions in annexe 4 of the annual report on the social fund 1993–94, Cm 2598.

Mr. Roger Evans: The information requested is not readily available for years prior to 1992–93. The available information is set out in the tables.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how his Department will determine average rents in an area following his changes to housing benefit.

Mr. Roger Evans: We are considering options and will be discussing these with, for example, the local authority associations and the Institute of Rent Officers.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what safeguards will exist to ensure that availability for work criteria are properly matched to the capability of the claimant in respect of people being transferred from disability living allowance to unemployment benefit.

Mr. Roger Evans: The Government have no proposals to transfer people from disability living allowance to unemployment benefit. However, regulation 7B of the Social Security (Unemployment, Sickness and Invalidity Benefit) Regulations 1983 currently provides that disabled people who are capable of some work may impose restrictions on their availability and receive Unemployment benefit where the restrictions are reasonable in view of their physical or mental condition.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make arrangements with the agency overseeing disability living allowance to ensure that offices holding claimant's files retain those files following an adverse decision on an application for disability living allowance for the period within which an appeal could be made.

Mr. Hague: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Jeremy Corbyn, dated 15 December 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the retention of Disability Living Allowance (DLA) files at the office where an adverse decision was made.

The main responsibility of Disability Benefits Centres (DBC) is the processing of initial claims to both DLA and Attendance Allowance, before the centralised units in Blackpool take over the case.

Since the introduction of DLA in April 1992 the Benefits Agency has looked carefully at the question of holding files at the office where the initial decision is made. Our research has shown that the three month period following the initial decision is the period of high activity and this also represents the prescribed time limit for applications for a review on any grounds.

A pilot exercise is currently being carried out at Newcastle DBC where the file is retained and almost all of the activity that arises in the three month period following the decision on a new claim is dealt with; some work done by specialist sections, such as Motability agreements, is retained at the DLA Unit in Blackpool. If the pilot at Newcastle successfully demonstrates efficiency and an improved customer service, consideration will be given to extending the practice to other DBCs.

This pilot exercise is part of the Benefits Agency's strategy to improve customer service and to work towards the introduction of a One Stop service.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

VAT (Fuel)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what further measures he is taking to protect those on low incomes from the effect of the imposition of VAT on domestic fuel in (a) in the current year and (b) from 1995 onwards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Roger Evans: The help that was given in the April 1994 uprating will remain in place as a permanent addition to benefit rates. In addition, VAT on domestic fuel has raised the indices on which the 1995 uprating will be based and benefit levels will be higher from next April as a result. Further, social fund cold weather payments, which increased from £6 to £7 in November 1994, will rise again to £8.50 in November 1995.

Funding of the home energy efficiency scheme will be raised to £100 million per annum, £30 million of which will be over and above that announced in 1993. The total extra help made available for home energy efficiency since the levy was introduced will amount to £65 million.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much will be saved under the proposed contributory jobseeker's allowance through the abolition of the adult dependent allowance in each financial year from 1 April 1996.

Mr. Roger Evans: It is estimated that, benefit expenditure will be reduced by £10 million in 1996–97 and by £20 million in 1997–98.

Notes:

1. Assumes 2.4 million unemployed; 500,000 unemployment benefit cases.
2. All estimates rounded to the nearest £10 million.
3. Estimates in cash prices.
4. Estimates are net of any effects in other benefits.
5. Based on 1993 annual statistical inquiry, 1993 and 1994 unemployment benefit statistics, and the policy simulation model using 1990–91–92 family expenditure survey data.
6. Assumes contributory entitlement lasts six months.
7. Transitional protection in operation in 1996–97.

Child Maintenance

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what estimate has been made of the extent to which interim maintenance assessments are made under the Child Support Act 1991 which are lower than the maintenance an absent parent would pay after a full assessment;

(2) what procedures exist to ensure the accurate revision of incorrectly low interim maintenance assessments made under the Child Support Act 1991;

(3) whether the consent of the absent parent is required in order to rectify errors made in the calculation of interim maintenance assessments under the Child Support Act 1991;

(4) what arrangements exist for the compensation of families which have received an incorrectly low interim maintenance assessment under the Child Support Act due to error on the part of the Child Support Agency.

Mr. Burt: Interim maintenance assessments are imposed where an absent parent has failed to provide sufficient information about his circumstances to enable a full maintenance assessment to be made. It is not possible to estimate whether an IMA is lower than a full maintenance assessment would otherwise be, since without information on the absent parent's circumstances it is not possible to determine the level of his eventual liability.

Interim maintenance assessments are set at 1.5 times the maintenance requirement—the amount calculated to represent the basic maintenance needs of the child—and, in the vast majority of cases, are higher than the amount the absent parent would be required to pay under the normal assessment.

In cases where IMAs have been incorrectly calculated, child support legislation currently requires that absent parents make a written application before an IMA can be cancelled and a correct IMA imposed. We propose to bring forward amendments to the regulations at the earliest opportunity, to ensure that defective IMAs can be reviewed or cancelled as appropriate at the instigation of a child support officer and without a written application from the absent parent.

The Child Support Agency has made its checks on IMAs more stringent to ensure that they are calculated correctly. These checks include a requirement that all IMA decisions are authorised at management level.

Claims for compensation are considered under the departmental general guidance. Each case is considered on its own merits.

Mr. Redwood: Guidance already exists under the Mental Health Act Code of Practice, pursuant to section 118 of the Act, the most recent revision of which was published in 1993. Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the level of average per student expenditure on (a) maintenance awards, (b) student loans and (c) Higher Education Funding Council for England recruitment grant in 1993–94; and what are the projected levels for 1994–95 and 1995–96.

Mr. Boswell: The average net expenditure per student on maintenance grants paid as part of mandatory awards for students domiciled in England and Wales was £1,630—provisional—in the 1993–94 financial year, and is expected to be around £1,540 in 1994–95 and £1,410 in 1995–96. The net expenditure on student loans taken out by students similarly domiciled as an average of those taking out loans was £720—provisional—in 1993–94, and is expected to be around £970 in 1994–95 and £1,230 in 1995–96.

The average per student expenditure on recurrent grant and tuition fees for the higher education sector in England was £4,480 in 1993–94, and is expected to be around £4,490 in 1994–95 and £4,500 in 1995–96.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the original cost in 1990 of the property formerly owned by the National Curriculum Council which was sold at auction on 7 December at the NCC warehouse, Kettlestring lane, Clifton Moor, York, and the amount of money paid for this property at the auction.

Mr. Forth: Some 80 per cent. of the furniture and equipment of the former National Curriculum Council, including nearly all items of value and in good condition, was transferred to the Department, the Funding Agency for Schools and the Schools Curriculum and Assessment Authority. The residue, consisting of items for which the Department had no use, many of them in poor condition, was offered for auction on 7 December, and realised just over £12,000. The auctioneers estimated its value at purchase as £90,000 plus VAT.

Further Education Colleges

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education which further education colleges have been found to be mismanaged by the Further Education Funding Council; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: On 17 November the Further Education Funding Council for England published reports on the governance and management of Derby tertiary college, Wilmorton and St Philip's Roman Catholic sixth form college, Birmingham. The funding council has recommended that my right hon. Friend should exercise her power under section 57 of the Further and Higher Education Act 1992 to remove all the governors from both institutions and replace them with new governors. There is no evidence to suggest that the problems of mismanagement, identified as affecting these two colleges by the reports are widespread.

Primary Schools

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) if she will make a statement on the funding for primary school provision;

(2) what additional financial assistance is given to areas of social deprivation to help with primary education; and if she will make a statement;

(3) what representations she has received on the future funding for nursery and primary school education; and if she will make a statement;

(4) what advice she gives to local education authorities on the formula for the funding for primary education; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations concerning the future funding of nursery and primary school education. An announcement on the further development of nursery education will be made once the work of the task force is complete.

Within the education standard spending assessment, some 20 per cent. of grant is distributed through the additional educational needs index, which reflects the higher cost of providing education in areas of relative deprivation.

At local level, the allocation of resources to individual schools will be determined by the local education authority's local management of schools funding formula, and the proportion of funding allocated to primary schools will depend substantially on the relative weightings assigned by the formula to pupils of different ages—which are a matter for the LEA to determine. LEA's formulae may make special provision for schools affected by social deprivation, provided that the factors used for this purpose are sufficiently objective and the formula as a whole complies with certain requirements as to the overall proportion of funding which must be distributed according to pupil numbers. Guidance to LEAs on these matters is contained in the Department's circular 2/94.

Reading Recovery Schemes

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what discussions she (a) has had, or (b) plans to have, with those local education authorities which have failed to secure funding for existing reading recovery schemes through the single regeneration budget.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend has no plans to discuss individual single regeneration budget bids with local education authorities. Unsuccessful bidders have been invited to contact their regional Government office, if they have queries.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps she is taking to ensure the completion of training courses by existing reading recovery teacher trainees in local education authorities which have failed to secure funding for existing reading recovery schemes under the single regeneration budget.

Mr. Robin Squire: It is for local education authorities to take steps to ensure that teachers complete their reading recovery training course. Authorities are aware that funding for the three-year national pilot of reading recovery will end as planned in March 1995.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps she is taking to ensure the spread of good practice in reading recovery schemes to local education authorities which have had no previous involvement in the scheme.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department is funding the reading recovery national network team at the institute of Education, university of London to provide information and advice on reading recovery to all LEAs.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment has been made by her Department of the long-term financial implications of reading recovery schemes for schools operating such schemes.

Mr. Robin Squire: The reading recovery national network team at the institute of education, university of London, estimate that the cost of reading recovery to schools is £1,000 per child. An independent research project, sponsored by the Schools Curriculum and Assessment Authority, is also looking at the cost of reading recovery.

It is for schools and local education authorities themselves to consider, in the light of their own circumstances, whether long-term savings resulting from successful reading recovery schemes are sufficient to offset those costs.

School Inspections

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will make arrangements for all reports produced by the Office for Standards in Education inspection teams under the Education (Schools) Act 1992 to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Forth: These are matters for Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools, who heads the independent Office for Standards in Education. I have asked Mr. Woodhead to write to the hon. Member.

University Students

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many students commenced university in the current year; what was the figure five years ago; and what is his estimate for next year.

Mr. Boswell: Full statistics for this year are not yet available, but new entrants to full-time undergraduate courses in Britain have been projected at some 308,000. This compares with 197,000 in the academic year 1989–90. It is for universities and colleges to decide on how many new entrants to admit next year, in the light of the number of students continuing from the present academic year and the current need to consolidate total student numbers. But the Government's plans allow for the proportion of young people entering full-time higher education in Britain to remain above 30 per cent., compared with 17 per cent. in 1989–90.

DEFENCE

Equipment (Contracts)

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many light dumpers his Department will be purchasing from A/S Hydrema of Denmark under contract No. EM and DIA/92; how many United Kingdom contractors tendered for this contract; what consideration was given to lease of the equipment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Twelve light dumpers will be purchased from A/S Hydrema under contract No. EM and DIA/92. One United Kingdom contractor was invited to tender for the contract but declined to bid. Leasing was not considered appropriate in this instance but will be considered for equipment and components on a case-by-case basis.

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reasons his Department is proposing to re-paint certain RAF VC10s; to what extent contractors will be involved in the proposed (i) structural corrosion survey, (ii) major maintenance and (iii) rectification of corrosion; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The paint finish on military aircraft serves two functions. The colour scheme and type of paint are selected to camouflage the aircraft. In addition, the surface finish protects the underlying structure from the damaging effects of the environment and, in particular, acts as an anti-corrosion treatment. As paint deteriorates with age, it is necessary to repaint aircraft routinely.

The repaint contractor will not be involved in either the structural corrosion survey, which will be undertaken by RAF technicians, or the major maintenance, which is completed by the RAF at RAF St. Athan with the assistance of a contractor's working party. Corrosion identified by RAF technicians will be rectified during major maintenance.

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will outline current arrangements for repair and overhaul of marine diesel engines used by the Royal Navy, showing the extent of contractor involvement.

Mr. Freeman: Except for minor repair and maintenance work, the repair and overhaul of marine diesel engines used by the Royal Navy is undertaken by contractors, mostly appointed through competition.

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the contract for the ocean survey vessel will be awarded on the same basis as the landing platform, helicopters; and what differences there will be in the criteria used.

Mr. Freeman: As with the award of the contract for the design and build of the landing platform helicopter, the outcome of the current competition for the ocean survey vessel will be based on best value for money for the defence budget.

Royal Logistics Corps, Hereford

Mr. Temple-Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to be able to make an announcement as to the future of the regional depot, Royal Logistics Corps, Hereford.

Mr. Soames: I am considering the proposals for the rationalisation of the Army's non-explosive storage facilities, including regional depot Hereford, and will be making an announcement in the near future.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many parliamentary questions tabled in the last Session of Parliament were not answered on the grounds that the information sought was not held centrally by the Department.

Mr. Soames: Less than 1 per cent.

Western European Union

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) of 25 November, Official Report, column 459, what consideration Her Majesty's Government are giving to the possibility that the Western European Union should become a formal pillar of the EU on the same basis as the Foreign Affairs Council and the common foreign and security policy.

Mr. Soames: The Government's policy is to develop the Western European Union in the role defined for it in the declaration of WEU Ministers at Maastricht in 1991, and described in my reply to the hon. Member for South Shields.

Combat Reconnaissance Equipment

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British military aircraft are fitted with electronic combat reconnaissance equipment; what programme he has to extend the use of such equipment; and what assessment he has made of the capacity of British manufacturers to provide and fit such equipment.

Mr. Freeman: Some Tornado GR1 and Nimrod aircraft are equipped to undertake electronic combat reconnaissance tasks. We are currently considering a number of proposals to enhance existing equipment. We maintain regular contact with British industry to monitor developments in this area.

Salisbury Plain

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) civilians and (b) military personnel are currently employed (i) on Salisbury plain training area and (ii) at Otterburn; and whether he expects these numbers to rise.

Mr. Soames: The information requested is as follows:

	Civilians	Military
Salisbury Plain	240	11
Otterburn	124	7

There are no plans to increase the numbers on Salisbury plain, although it is possible that up to 15 additional civilian staff will be required at Otterburn in the future.

Nuclear-powered Submarines

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to which docklands each of the strategic submarine nuclear, SSN, and strategic submarine ballistic nuclear SSBN, nuclear-powered submarines have been earmarked for storage afloat when they are withdrawn from operational service.

Mr. Freeman: The location of each nuclear-powered submarine that has left Royal Navy service is provided in the following table. All these submarines, except HMS Valiant and HMS Resolution, have completed the process of defuelling, de-equipping and lay-up preparations and are stored afloat in suitable berths. It is not our practice to reveal in advance details of decommissioning plans for nuclear-powered submarines currently in service.

HM Submarines	Location
Dreadnought	Roysth
Warspite	Devonport
Churchill	Rosyth
Conqueror	Devonport
Swiftsure	Rosyth
Courageous	Devonport
Revenge—SSBN	Rosyth
Valiant	Devonport
Resolution—SSBN	Rosyth

Departmental Dwellings

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many vacant dwellings are owned by his Department in Plymouth.

Mr. Soames: As at 30 September my Department owned 302 vacant dwellings in Plymouth in the following categories:

Service married quarters—281

Former married quarters in the process of sale—16

Civilian houses—5

A large number of the vacant service married quarters were undergoing or awaiting major maintenance, held for future deployments, or formed part of the management margin needed to ensure that accommodation is available for entitled service families.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) the number of dwellings owned by his Department and (b) the number of dwellings owned by his Department which are currently unoccupied for (i) Devon and (ii) Cornwall.

Mr. Soames: As at 30 September, my Department owned the following dwellings in Devon and Cornwall:

	Stock	Vacant
Devon
Service married quarters	3,040	342
Former married quarters in the process of sale	16	16
Civilian houses	9	0
Former civilian houses in the process of sale	0	0
Cornwall
Service married quarters	1,138	259
Former married quarters in the process of sale	2	2
Former civilian houses in the process of sale	1	0

A large number of the vacant service married quarters were undergoing or awaiting major maintenance, held for future deployments, or formed part of the management margin needed to ensure that accommodation is available for entitled service families.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many dwellings are currently owned by his Department.

Mr. Soames: As at 30 September my Department owned 74,686 dwellings in the following categories:

Service married quarters—70,851

Former married quarters in the process of sale—2,744

Civilian houses—581

Former civilian houses in the process of sale—510

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many former wives of service personnel have been evicted from Ministry of Defence properties in each year since 1989.

Mr. Soames: All former wives of service personnel are allowed to remain in their married quarter for at least 93 days and are not normally evicted unless alternative accommodation is available to them. Figures for evictions are not held in a uniform format by the services. The figures give the number of actual evictions in respect of the Army, but for the Navy and RAF represent the number of warrants issued for the repossession of a married quarter. In most cases no eviction results, because alternative accommodation becomes available.

Army	6	9	12	14	5	[1]11

Note:

[1] To date.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of providing maintenance and security on the vacant dwellings owned by his Department for each year since 1990.

Mr. Soames: The cost of providing maintenance and security for surplus dwellings in the process of being sold was as follows:

Financial year
1993–94—£231,000
1994–95—to date—£124,000

Figures for previous years are not available. Security for empty dwellings which are not surplus to requirements is provided by the Ministry of Defence police and military patrols and costs are therefore not separately identifiable.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many dwellings owned by his Department have been sold to (a) local authorities and (b) housing associations since 1992.

Mr. Soames: The following numbers of dwellings have been sold to local authorities and housing associations since 1992:

Financial year	Local authorities	Housing associations
1992–93	24	235
1993–94	27	97
1994–95—to date	Nil	237

In addition, 120 flats at Rowner were sold to Barratts (Builders) in 1993–94. These will form part of a scheme involving a housing association.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many vacant dwellings are owned by his Department in each parliamentary constituency in Devon and Cornwall.

Mr. Soames: As at 30 September, my Department owned the following vacant dwellings in each parliamentary constituency in Devon and Cornwall:

	Service married quarters	Civilian houses	Former married quarters in the process of sale	Total
North Devon	43	0	0	43
Exeter	7	0	0	7
Honiton	0	0	0	0
Plymouth Devonport	215	5	16	236
Plymouth Drake	8	0	0	8
Plymouth Sutton	58	0	0	58
Torridge and West Devon	11	0	0	11
Falmouth and Camborne	0	0	0	0
North Cornwall	158	0	2	160
St. Ives	88	0	0	88
South-east Cornwall	13	0	0	13

A large number of the vacant service married quarters were undergoing or awaiting major maintenance, held for future deployments, or formed part of the management margin needed to ensure that accommodation is available for entitled service families.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many dwellings owned by his Department are currently unoccupied.

Mr. Soames: As at 30 September my Department owned 11,995 vacant dwellings in the following categories:

Service married quarters — 9,715
Former married quarters in the process of sale — 2,014
Civilian houses — 209
Former civilian houses in the process of sale — 57

The majority of the vacant service married quarters were undergoing or awaiting major maintenance, held for future deployments, or formed part of the management margin needed to ensure that accommodation is available for entitled service families. Of the vacant civilian houses, 68 were leased properties awaiting return to Dumbarton district council, 91 were houses recently taken over from the United States air force awaiting occupation by Ministry of Defence police staff and the remainder were mainly properties in secure areas which could not be sold for security or safeguarding reasons.

HMS Sirius

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what expenditure was made by his Department on the refit of HMS Sirius; and when this work was carried out.

Mr. Freeman: The last refit of HMS Sirius was undertaken between October 1989 and May 1991 at a total cost of about £25 million.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans his Department has for using HMS Sirius for missile target practice; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Following her decommissioning in 1993, HMS Sirius was marketed extensively as an operational vessel to foreign navies. No such purchaser has, however, been found, and we are currently considering the best alternative route for her disposal, including her possible use as a target for weapon development. No decisions have, however, been taken.

Ships (Target Practice)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which ships his Department has used for target practice during the past five years.

Mr. Soames: Three decommissioned warships were used as targets and sunk in live firing exercises between 1990 and 1994. It is common practice for navies to test weapon effectiveness on surplus vessels which have had all reusable spares and equipment removed. Testing the effectiveness of a weapon against a realistic target is of particular value in the course of weapon development, which is an extremely expensive process. Such use of targets also provides valuable training.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Speakers' Pensions

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Lord President of the Council since when former Speakers of the House have been disentitled to the parliamentary pension to which they have contributed throughout their parliamentary careers in the calculation of their pension based upon 50 per cent. of final salary; and if he will take steps to ensure that present and future ex-Speakers receive their pension as Speaker in addition to their parliamentary contributory pension.

Mr. Newton: Speakers, and Prime Ministers, were excluded from the parliamentary pension scheme from 1965, when the first pension scheme for Members was set up, until February 1991. Their contributions to the scheme were repaid to them, with interest, when they left office.

In its report No. 26, the Top Salaries Review Body recommended that Speakers and Prime Ministers should be able to join the parliamentary pension scheme but that the change should not be retrospective nor apply to past service. The Government have accepted the recommendation and, since February 1991, Speakers in office have the option to remain in the parliamentary pension scheme and to contribute, earning additional pension on their reduced parliamentary salary.

EMPLOYMENT

Ex-service Women

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 25 November, Official Report, column 427, in how many cases state benefits have been recouped by the Employment Service from ex-service women who have received tribunal awards on the ground of unfair dismissal because of pregnancy.

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M.E.G. Fogden to Mr. A.J. Beith, dated 16 December 1994:

> The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about recoupment of state benefits, by the Employment Service, from ex-service women who have received tribunal awards on the grounds of unfair dismissal because of pregnancy.
> I regret that this information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Records are not kept on the status of clients whose benefit has been recouped because of a tribunal award.
> The Analysis of Adjudication Officers' Decisions, which is published and held in the House of Commons Library, provides the number of decisions made in Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act cases, but does not detail recoupment separately.
> I am sorry I cannot be more helpful.

Executive Search Agencies

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what use his Department has made of executive search agencies in filling vacancies within his Department and executive agencies administered by his Department during the last year; and how much these services have cost his Department.

Miss Widdecombe: Executive search agencies have been used on two occasions over the last year. The total cost is expected to be less than £60,000.

Departmental Telephones

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much has been spent on telephone charges and how many telephone calls have been made by his Department for each of the last five years.

Miss Widdecombe: The Employment Department's charges for telephony for years 1989–94 are shown in the following table:

	1989–90 £	1990–91 £	1991–92 £	1992–93 £	1993–94 £
ES	13,549,979	13,858,393	14,681,323	15,968,500	14,900,554
ED	n/a	n/a	4,964,782	4,132,756	3,834,924
HSE	624,215	700,116	597,922	622,095	636,312
ACAS	336,978	336,971	345,925	408,549	490,014

The figures for the Employment Department for 1989–90 and 1990–91 are not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Details of the number of calls made per year are not held centrally.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the duration of the trips, referred to in his answer of 26 October, Official Report, column 679 which were undertaken by Ministers in his Department and on which they were accompanied by their spouses and paid for at public expense.

Miss Widdecombe: My answer of the 26 October, Official Report, column 679, referred to the attendance of my hon. Friend the then Minister of State and his spouse at a social affairs informal council in Athens to which both had been invited by the Greek presidency. They travelled to Athens on the afternoon of 9 March and returned to London the following day.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (i) hold open meetings, (ii) conduct public consultation exercises, (iii) conduct consultation exercises with outside commercial interests, (iv) publish a register of members' interests, (v) publish agendas for meetings and (vi) publish the minutes of meetings; and whether this is in each case (a) under a statutory requirement or (b) voluntary.

Mr. John M. Taylor: For the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by my Department, the answers are as follows:

(i) none

(ii) The following advisory have carried out public consultation exercises:

the Legal Aid Advisory Committee
the Supreme Court Rule Committee
the County Court Rule Committee
the Family Proceedings Rule Committee
the Law Commission
the Advisory Committee on Legal Education and Conduct

The Judicial Studies Board has sent questionnaires on magisterial training to outside bodies and academic organisations with an interest in that area.

(iii) the Supreme Court Rule Committee, the County Court Rule Committee and the Family Proceedings Rule Committee regularly consult with individuals and organisations which have a professional or commercial interest in the amendment of rules of court.

The Law Commission do conduct consultation exercises with outside commercial interests but this is encompassed within (ii) above.

(iv) none

(v) none

(vi) none

There are no statutory requirement for these bodies in respect of any of the matters mentioned in the question.

DEFENCE

RAF Housing

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects 26 RAF houses in Lacey street and Crowlea road, Boulmer, Northumberland, to be sold; and in what way they are being offered for sale.

Mr. Soames: A survey report on the disposal of the 26 surplus married quarters in Lacey street and Crowlea road, Loughoughton, Northumberland, is at present being evaluated. We expect to be able to offer the properties for sale to service personnel through the services' discount scheme early in the new year.

Gruinard Island

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of protection, surveillance and monitoring at Gruinard island in each year since 1988.

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive CBDE to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Jim Cousins, dated 16 December 1994:

QUESTION 23, ORDER PAPER 8 DECEMBER 1994

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking what was the cost of protection, surveillance and monitoring at Gruinard Island in each year since 1988.

2. Gruinard Island was successfully decontaminated in the Summer of 1986 as has been reported in Chemistry in Britain 24, 690-1(1988). This work was carried out by CBDE Porton Down with the aid of an industrial contractor. An independent evaluation of the work was provided by the Independent Advisory Group on Gruinard Island, whose Chairman was selected by the President of the Royal Society.

3. The island was returned to its original owners in May 1990. During the period from 1988 to 1990 there were final payments amounting to about £6,000 to the Institute of Terrestrial Ecology who were completing a study of the biological consequences of the decontamination of Gruinard Island which had cost £53,000. There were also small residual costs associated with the winding up of the Independent Advisory Group and with the return of the island to its original owners; the exact magnitude of these costs is not readily available without disproportionate effort.

Anthrax

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when research at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment into protection against the use of anthrax ceased; and when the preparation and storage of (a) anthrax vaccine and (b) penicillin-resistant anthrax vaccine at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment ceased.

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive CBDE to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Jim Cousins, dated 16 December 1994:

QUESTION 25, ORDER PAPER 8 DECEMBER 1994

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking when research at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment into protection against the use of anthrax ceased; and when the preparation and storage of (a) anthrax vaccine and (b) penicillin-resistant anthrax vaccine at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out work to ensure that the UK Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical and biological weapons may be used against them.

3. Following the Gulf conflict, increased emphasis has been placed on biological defence which primarily consists of detection and medical countermeasures. The programme of work on medical countermeasures includes the continuing study of both vaccines and antibiotics against a range of potential biological warfare agents including anthrax. This work on protection against anthrax has not ceased and is continuing.

4. The work into vaccines against anthrax includes the study of possible improved vaccines and involves the preparation of research quantities for evaluation in animals. This research includes the examination of the effectiveness of anthrax vaccines against penicillin-resistant strains of anthrax. CBDE Porton Down has not produced anthrax vaccines in quantity for human use although we hold a small stock of vaccine for the immunization of staff working at CBDE with anthrax.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the differences between the first and second anthrax inoculations administered to British personnel during the Gulf war; and by whom they were manufactured.

Mr. Soames: Details relating to all vaccines giving protection against biological warfare agents are classified.

Naval Support

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the conclusion of the Defence Committee in its second report of Session 1994–95, HC 87, that the review of naval support has been conducted in an unsatisfactory manner.

Mr. Soames: The Select Committee's report on naval stores proposals is being considered by my Department. We will make a formal response in the normal manner.

Queen's Flight

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement regarding the proposed privatisation of the Queen's Flight, indicating how many companies are being invited to tender; what is their nationality; if the list includes the company chosen to operate Ministers' flights out of Northolt; and if the ground crew in the flight are to be given the opportunity to tender.

Mr. Soames: There are no plans to privatise the Queen's Flight. As my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence announced on 23 June, Official Report, column 250, it was decided following an efficiency scrutiny that the Queen's Flight should move from RAF Benson to RAF Northolt to join the other communications aircraft of No. 32 Squadron. The two would then be amalgamated into one collocated squadron to be known as No. 32 (The Royal) Squadron. This process should be complete by 1 April 1995.

As it would not be practicable to employ two contractors to maintain the aircraft of the single collocated squadron, an extension of the existing engineering support contract was arranged. Arrangements will be made in the normal way to re-tender this task when the current contract expires.

Rosyth Naval Base

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he gave to making an oral statement on the decision to close Rosyth naval base; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The Government's proposals in relation to Rosyth naval base were set out fully in the "Font Line First" publication issued on 14 July, a copy of which was placed in the library of the House, and in the consultative document issued on that day. Full consultation ensued, including with the hon. Member and with other interested parties.

The written answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Plymouth Sutton (Mr. Streeter) on 8 December, Official Report, column 305 was to confirm a previous proposal and an oral statement was therefore not appropriate.

Gulf War (Biological Agents)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the formulation of the biological agent treatment sets issued to British troops during the Gulf war; what are their known side effects; and if the troops were informed of their formulation purpose and side effects.

Mr. Soames: Specific details relating to medical countermeasures against biological warfare agents are classified, but biological agent treatment sets—BATS—issued to British troops during Operation Granby consisted of a licensed antibiotic. Each individual was issued with one set, together with printed instructions for its use. The antibiotic was to have been taken by mouth on the orders of the local commander when the presence of a biological warfare agent was confirmed. No biological warfare agents were detected in the Gulf and it was not therefore necessary for orders to take BATS to be issued.

Side effects to any antibiotic are uncommon but can include nausea, vomiting, diarrhoea and skin rash. All troops were informed of the general nature and purpose of BATS but, because they were only to be used to combat life-threatening biological warfare attack, an explanation of their potential side effects was judged to be necessary.

Memorandum of Understanding

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the memorandum of understanding recently signed with the United States of America.

Mr. Freeman: The United Kingdom Secretary of State for Defence and the US Secretary for Defense have signed a memorandum of understanding relating to the principles governing co-operation in research and development, production, procurement, and logistic support of defence equipment. A United State/United Kingdom defence co-operation MOU was first signed in 1975, renewed in 1985, and has now been renewed for a further 10 year period. The aim of the MOU is to promote the widest possible use of standard or interoperable equipment in the interests of national security and to make the most cost-effective and rational use of the respective industrial, economic and technological resources in both countries. The MOU has been of significant benefit to both countries, creating a "two-way street" which has resulted in a severalfold increase in bilateral defence equipment trade since the mid-1970s.

Single Parents (Armed Forces)

Mr. Sykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made with his Department's review of the status of single parents in the armed forces.

Mr. Soames: My Department's review of the status of single parents serving in the armed forces is now complete. Its purpose has been to consider, against the background of changing social trends, whether the entitlement to service families' accommodation and other related allowances, which currently applies only to married personnel and to lone parents whose marriages have ended in bereavement, divorce or separation, should be extended to single parents. The armed forces rightly continue to attach great importance to the place of marriage and the family in the service community. We have concluded, however, that single parents should in future be eligible for the same entitlements as other lone parents. These new arrangements will take effect from 1 January 1995, and will place single parents who wish to remain in the service in a better position to meet fully their service commitments, at the same time as fulfilling their parental responsibilities.

Hercules Fleet

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to be able to make an announcement on the future of the Royal Air Force's Hercules fleet.

Mr. Rifkind: The Government place a high priority on the maintenance of an effective tactical air transport capability and have examined a range of options on this question. Our plans fall into two distinct parts: first, we have an urgent operational requirement to replace and refurbish that part of the Hercules fleet which is nearing the end of its operationally useful life. For this immediate requirement, I have concluded that refurbishment would provide poor value for money.

The Government have accordingly decided to meet the urgent operational requirement of the RAF by purchasing 25 C-130J Hercules II aircraft from the Lockheed Aeronautical Systems, subject to the satisfactory conclusion of a contract. Lockheed has agreed to place contracts to the value of 100 per cent. of the order with United Kingdom companies. At least 10 per cent. of the value of these contracts will be for work directly on the C130J aircraft itself. As a result, some 36 United Kingdom companies will be participating in the production of C130J not only for the RAF's order but also for aircraft supplied to other nations.

Although the FLA is not available to meet this requirement, it is expected to be available to meet the need to replace the balance of the Hercules fleet and other possible air transport requirements. This would lead to a requirement for between 40 and 50 FLA. The United Kingdom will, therefore, rejoin the FLA programme at the end of the feasibility phase provided that it is managed on a commercial basis under the umbrella of the Airbus consortium. Resources will need to be available at the time and our requirements on price and performance must also be met. Commercial management should include United Kingdom firms being given the opportunity to compete in the programme fairly and on merit. A programme of work on FLA has been set in hand with our partners.

This decision will ensure that our urgent operational requirement is met in the most cost effective way, while bringing substantial benefit to United Kingdom industry which will stand to gain from both programmes.

PRIME MINISTER

Oleg Gordievsky

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Prime Minister if he will publish extracts from the notes of the Security Service debriefing of the Soviet defector Oleg Gordievsky to the extent that such extracts (a) do not threaten current national security, (b) add to public knowledge of the ways in which the Soviet state sought to obtain information from British people about the United Kingdom with a view to breaking its security and (c) reveal the main United Kingdom providers of such information.

The Prime Minister: No.

Ministerial Train Journeys

NHS Expenditure

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment he has made of whether the answers given to the hon. member for Workington on the cost per head of NHS spending in respect of Scotland, 7 December, Official Report, columns 278–79, Northern Ireland, 5 December, Official Report, column 47, and England and Wales, 1 December, Official Report, column 830, are comparable calculations based on comparable data.

The Prime Minister: The answers given to the hon. Member reflect the different structure of the national health service in each of the countries concerned, and the latest year for which figures on expenditure are available.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Byers: To ask the Prime Minister what criteria he uses in deciding whether it is appropriate for a spouse to accompany a Minister on Government duties abroad.

The Prime Minister: Public interest, as stated in paragraph 74 of "Questions of Procedure for Ministers", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

The delegation from the United Kingdom for the session will consist of 19 members of the Conservative party, 15 members of the Labour party and two members from the minority parties.

The appointments of representatives and substitutes have been made on the basis of nominations by the parties concerned, in accordance with the resolution of this House on 22 May 1992, Official Report, column 682, and of the House of Lords on 18 June 1992, Official Report columns 290–92.

The same delegation will be representing the United Kingdom Parliament at the Assembly of the Western European Union, which next meets in Paris in June 1995.

Civil Service

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the management of the home civil service.

The Prime Minister: The Government plan, in the light of the review of the Treasury's activities, that those central civil service management functions that remain after delegation to Departments should be transferred to the Minister with responsibility for the civil service with effect from 1 April 1995. The functions which it proposes to transfer include responsibility for senior civil service pay; policy on civil service recruitment, retirement and redundancy and the central management of the principal civil service pension scheme; and residual central responsibilities for civil service personnel management, industrial relations, conditions of service and allowances, and the collection of civil service manpower statistics. It is envisaged that the Treasury will undertake a last round of national pay negotiations in 1995 and carry through the remaining delegations to Departments up to 1 April 1996. The Treasury's pension benefit calculation work at Basingstoke will be taken over by the Paymaster agency.

These changes, and the delegation of most civil service management functions to Departments, will not affect the Treasury's role in relation to public expenditure, including that on public sector pay. The Government propose to lay before Parliament the necessary transfer of functions order under the Ministers of the Crown Act 1975.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Energy Expenditure

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total expenditure on energy for each property owned or leased by his Department for the use of Ministers in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Howard: The expenditure on energy for the last three years for which figures are available are as follows:

	1991–92 £ million	1992–93 £ million	1993–94 £ million
The Home Office	1.66	1.78	1.74
Executive Agencies	29.20	31.10	31.80

The figures for 1991–92 exclude the Fire Service college and the United Kingdom Passport Agency as no information is available. Expenditure by these agencies 1992–93 and 1993–94 averaged £353,000 and £297,000 per annum respectively.

Money Laundering

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the cash and staff resources of (a) the financial intelligence unit and (b) the central authority for mutual assistance in criminal matters; how many reports of suspected money laundering have been made to each in each year since 1987; and how many (i) prosecutions, (ii) convictions and (iii) seizures of arms and drugs have been made in each year since 1987.

Mr. Maclean: The financial disclosures and money laundering section, formerly the financial intelligence unit, of the National Criminal Intelligence Service as 14 staff at a projected cost, including a common services element, of £460,000 in 1994–95. The United Kingdom Central Authority for Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters is a part of the Home Office. It has 13 staff in post: estimated staff costs for 1994–95 are £262,000. Figures for non-staff costs attributable to the central authority are not readily available.

All disclosures of suspicious financial transactions under the money laundering legislation are passed to the financial disclosures and money laundering section. Figures for numbers of disclosures are as follows:

Year	Disclosures
1987	544
1988	839
1989	1,595
1990	3,150
1991	4,410
1992	11,281
1993	12,750

The available information on prosecutions and convictions relates to the offence, in section 24 of the Drug Trafficking Offences Act 1986. of assisting another to retain the proceeds of drug trafficking. The figures are:

1989	11	3
1990	10	5
1991	15	4
1992	11	8
1993	16	7

Statistics on firearms seizures are not recorded centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The most recent information on drugs seizures is contained in Home Office statistical bulletin 30/93: Statistics of Drugs Seizures and Offenders Dealt with, United Kingdom, 1992, a copy of which is in the Library. The figures, information for 1993 is not yet available, are:

	Number
1987	30,690
1988	38,235
1989	52,131
1990	60,859

1992	72,065

Fly-posting and Litter Offences

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions there have been for (a) fly-posting and (b) litter offences for each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Information held centrally cannot separately identify offences of fly-posting from other summary offences under the Town and Country Planning Act 1971.

Information for litter offences is given in the table below. 1994 data will not be available until the autumn 1995.

North Wales Police Authority

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will grant extra funds to the North Wales police authority to enable it to fund its national DNA database; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The costs and benefits to the police of the DNA database have been taken fully into account in our assessment of future police spending requirements. It will be for chief constables to decide what use to make of the DNA database service on the balances as they see it, of those costs and benefits.

Animal Experimentation

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much funding was spent by his Department on researching alternatives to animal experiments for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The readily available information is as follows:

Year	£
1984–85 to 1987–88	215,000

Police Duties

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many hours annually, on average, a police constable spends (a) on operational duties and (b) undergoing training in England and Wales as a whole and in each individual police force.

Mr. Maclean: I regret that information on time spent on operational duties is not available. In 1991–92, the latest year for which figures are available, police constables in England and Wales spent, on average, 14.8 days in training. The figures for individual forces are as follows:

Security Service Tribunal

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the appointment of the members of the security service tribunal.

Mr. Howard: Her Majesty has been pleased to re-appoint Lord Justice Simon Brown, Sheriff John McInnes and Sir Richard Gaskell as, respectively, president, vice-president and member of the security service tribunal for five years with effect from 18 December.

Animal Transportation

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what requests his Department has made to the companies involved in exporting live animals from Millbay docks in Plymouth to contribute towards the policing costs.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 15 December 1994]: None. This is a matter for the police authority.

The disorder is caused by those seeking to blockade and disrupt the docks not by exporters carrying out a lawful activity.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Independent Commissioner for the Holding Centres

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will amend the terms of reference for the independent commissioner for the holding centres to permit the commissioner to be present at interviews with terrorist suspects in the police offices.

Sir John Wheeler: Following discussions with the Royal Ulster Constabulary, I have today placed in the Library of the House revised terms of reference for the Independent Commissioner for the Holding Centres to permit him to be present at interviews with terrorist suspects in the police offices, subject to certain caveats agreed both by the Commissioner and the RUC.

This represents a very positive response to Sir Louis Blom-Cooper's comments in his first annual report which reflect his view that, to sustain its credibility, such a right must be vested in the post.

Credit Unions

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many credit unions were operating in Northern Ireland in 1980, 1990 and in each year since.

Mr. Ancram: In 1980 there were 94 credit unions operating in Northern Ireland. By 1990 this figure had increased to 124 and the number in subsequent years are shown below:

Year	Number
1991	132
1992	138
1993	150
1994 (to 9 December)	152

HEALTH

GP Fundholding

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the adequacy of the accounting supervision of fundholding general practitioner practices.

Mr. Malone: General practitioner fundholders are required to produce accounts in accordance with the general practitioners fundholders' manual of accounts. These accounts are independently certified by auditors appointed by the Audit Commission. A copy of the general practice fundholders' manual of accounts is available in the Library.

Alzheimer's Disease

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her estimate of the number of sufferers from Alzheimer's disease, and the proportion of these residing without any family carer.

Mr. Bowis: It is estimated that some 5 per cent. of the population aged 65 and over suffer from dementia and over half of these suffer from Alzheimer's disease. We do not collect information about the proportion who reside without any family carer.

Blood

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the studies undertaken into the National Blood Authority which led to the conclusion that five regional transfusion centres should be closed.

Mr. Sackville: Part of the remit given to the National Blood Authority on its establishment was to provide a strategy to secure an adequate and cost-effective supply of blood and blood products to meet national needs. A review of the blood service was therefore undertaken by the authority.

Elderly People

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what specific steps she is taking to improve the equity of medical care, following the report of the Royal College of Physicians, entitled "Ensuring Equity and Quality of Care for Elderly People"; and if she will make a statement;

(2) what specific steps she is taking to ensure a wider knowledge among hospital specialists of the special needs of elderly people with particular reference to those aspects where the development of multiple pathology and poly-pharmacy are relevant; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: We welcomed the publication of the report as an incentive to improved accessibility and quality of service for elderly people. Aimed primarily at professionals and managers in the sector, it emphasises the need to meet both the acute health care needs of older patients and any special needs arising from the ageing process, with appropriate liaison between specialists. We have cited the report in our priorities and planning guidance for the NHS for 1995–96.

We have repeatedly stressed that the national health service must be open to people of all ages on the basis of clinical need. Since the publication of the Royal College of Physicians' report in May we have met with the British Geriatrics Society to discuss the issues it raises, and other matters relevant to the health of elderly people, and a further meeting is planned at official level. The chief medical officer proposes to host a seminar next spring for senior members of the medical profession to discuss the education and training of all doctors and medical students in the treatment and care of elderly people. In addition, the Department is represented on a Royal College of Physicians working group updating its 1984 publication "Medication for the elderly", which will provide useful guidance to the field in this area.

Respite Care

Mr. Dafydd Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which Department of State has primary responsibility for the development of respite care services.

Mr. Bowis: In England, policy on respite care provided as part of community care services, and that which is provided as part of services for children and their families under part III of the Children Act 1989, is the responsibility of my Department. It is the responsibility of local authorities and health authorities to plan, develop and arrange provision of respite care.

NHS Trusts (Termination Payments)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 9 December, Official Report, columns 394–95, how many of the sample of 18 termination payments failed to comply in every respect with departmental guidance as set out in TEL (94)2.

Mr. Malone: National health service trusts have powers under schedule 2 of the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 to make compensation to, or in respect, of any of the trust's employees who suffer loss of office. They have to exercise these powers within the usual disciplines of public spending. The guidance in TEL(94)3 is advisory.

Of the 18 payments sampled, the NHS executive is seeking further information on eight. Of the other 10 cases, where the payments relate to the termination settlements on which TEL(94)3 provides advice the amounts paid are consistent with that advice.

Executive Search Agencies

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what use her Department has made of executive search agencies in filling vacancies within her Department and executive agencies administered by her Department during the last year; and how much these services have cost her Department.

Mr. Sackville: Neither the Department nor its executive agencies have used executive search agencies to fill vacancies during the past year.

NHS Supplies

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the study produced for her in 1993 by PE Consultants assessed the difference in projected savings and efficiency increases likely to arise from integrated facility management of the entire NHS supplies authority function as against separate market testing of some NHSSA functions with private sector contractors co-ordinated by the existing NHSSA management; and whether she will commission independent research to assess which supplies model will deliver best service and value for money to the NHS.

Mr. Sackville: No. The study concluded that some of the functions of the national health service supplies authority should be contracted out to make best use of private sector skills and experience; and some functions needed to be rationalised at lower cost to match the standard of commercial best practice elsewhere. The NHS supplies authority has been charged to deliver programmes of market testing and rationalisation in the areas of logistics, information management, purchasing, and customer services, while maintaining continuity of services to all NHS customers. It is also required to match commercial best practice standards by April 1997. Their progress towards these targets is reviewed each year, and progress to date has been encouraging. NHS supplies has also been invited to work in co-operation with the NHS trust federation to identify ways to improve NHS supplies organisation, operation and accountability. This joint work is at an early stage. The National Audit Office will also be reporting in the first half of 1995 on its study of NHS supplies progress since the earlier NAO study of 1991.

Lindane

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions she has had with the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food regarding the use by farmers of substances containing lindane.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Bristol, East (Ms Corston) on 15 December, Official Report, columns 777–78.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many termination payments have been made by NHS trusts to chief executives and senior managers in 1991–92 and 1992–93; and what is the total amount for each trust in each year specified.

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally.

Burnley Healthcare NHS Trust

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will re-consider her decision not to hold an independent inquiry into recent events at Burnley Healthcare NHS trust following the publication of the report into the dismissal of Mr. Ian Mahady;

(2) what consideration she has given to the report on Mr. Ian Mahady published by Burnley Healthcare NHS trust.

Mr. Malone: The inquiry report is a matter for the trust, which is responsible for its own management and employment arrangements.

NHS Administrative Costs

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the administrative costs incurred by (a) NHS purchasers and (b) NHS providers in each region in each year since 1990–91.

Mr. Malone [holding answer 12 December 1994]: The available information is shown in the table.

National Health Service administration costs 1990–91 to 1993–94 by region

Annual accounts of Regional and District Health Authorities, Family Practitioner Committees and Family Health Services Authorities.

Notes:

1. The above figures represent the total revenue expenditure on the pay and accommodation costs of staff of all disciplines and their support staff employed at headquarters levels in Regional Health Authorities (RHAs), District Health Authorities (DHAs) and Family Practitioner Committees (FPCs)/Family Health Services Authorities (FHSAs). They exclude administrative support in hospital departments and at other local levels which is regarded as operational expenditure.

2. RHA and DHA costs are those reported in the accounts as "Authority administration and purchasing expenses". This includes capital charges after 1991–92. FPC/FHSA administration costs are those reported in the annual accounts as revenue administration costs and represent that part of total expenditure which is not medical, dental, ophthalmic or pharmaceutical.

3. Changes over the years in the roles and responsibilities of FPCs (which became Family Health Services Authorities in 1990), RHAs and DHAs (which started to transfer provider functions to NHS trusts in 1991–1992), together with changes in accounting policies (particularly the inclusion of capital charges in Health Authorities' administration and purchasing expenditure) mean that the figures are not comparable. Additionally, there were differences in management practices and geographical size between regions and the numbers of DHAs, FPCs and FHSAs within regions.

4. The figures for 1993–94 are provisional.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what protection there will be, under the more stringent tests of availability for work under the arrangements for the new jobseeker's allowance, for claimants who have been deemed capable of work for the purpose of incapacity benefit but whose handicaps may genuinely restrict their availability for work.

Miss Widdecombe: I have been asked to reply.

A decision in incapacity benefit that a person is capable of work will apply for all other benefits. In our proposals for the introduction of the jobseeker's allowance we recognise, as now, that some people with disabilities may have difficulties in making themselves available for the full range of employment opportunities. They will, therefore, be able to restrict their availability to the type or hours of work they are able to undertake within the limits of their physical or mental condition.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many cold weather payments were made and what were the total amounts set out by area for each year since 1983.

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of the cold weather payments scheme is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Bichard to John Battle, dated 15 December 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about Cold Weather Payments.

Social Fund Cold Weather Payments were introduced in April 1988. For the years 1988/89 and 1989/90 the information you have requested is in the Statistical Holdings section of the Library.

From 1990/91 to 1993/94 the information is not held in the format you requested. It is, however, available in the Library broken down by Benefit Office for 1990/91 to 1992/93 and by District Office for 1993/94.

Prior to the introduction of the Social Fund, payments for cold weather were made at local management discretion under Regulation 26 of the Single Payments Regulations. Information by area is not held and the table below shows the total number of payments nationally in this period and the cost.

	Total number of cold weather payments	Cost
1983–84	NIL	—
1984–85	170,000	£1.7M
1985–86	450,000	£11.6M
1986–87	2,000,000	£10.2M
1987–88	99,000	£0.5M

I hope you find my reply helpful.

Mortgage Interest Payments

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the proposals for reducing the level of support for mortgage interest payments under income support require primary legislation.

Mr. Roger Evans: Secondary legislation only is required to amend the rules providing assistance with mortgage interest in income support.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what savings he expects in a full year as a result of the proposed withdrawal of mortgage interest payments by his Department (a) in the first two months on income support and (b) at 50 per cent. for a further four months.

Mr. Roger Evans: These two proposals to withdraw mortgage interest payments in the first two months on income support and pay at 50 per cent. for a further four months will be the subject to wide consultation. The financial effect will depend on the outcome of this consultation and the final detail of the scheme.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his oral statement of 30 November, Official Report, columns 1205–8, what savings he expects over three years in respect of housing benefit; and what multiplier he used in calculating it.

Mr. Roger Evans: The savings to housing benefit from the restriction on benefit for rents above the average, the increase in non-dependent deductions and the restriction on HB claimants temporarily absent from home are estimated to amount to around £360 million, rounded to the nearest £10 million, over the three financial years from April 1995.

There is no one multiplier used to calculate the savings over three years. Estimation of the build up of savings is specific to each of the policies considered, and depends on a number of factors including estimates of forecast caseload and average rents.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the major changes in housing benefit since it was introduced identifying: (a) the numbers of gainers and losers and (b) the costs and savings of each measure.

Mr. Roger Evans [holding answer 5 December 1994]: The information requested is in the table.

Major change	Date of change	Gainers	Losers	Cost £ million	Saving £ million
Responsibility for the housing costs of boarders/hostel dwellers transferred from Income Support to Housing Benefit[1]	April–October 1989	110,000	—	489	—
Capital limit doubled to £16,000	April 1990	50,000	—	62	—
Disengagement of students from Housing Benefit[2]	September 1990	—	—	—	28
Housing Benefit subsidy reduced by 2 per cent.[3]	April 1991	—	—	—	46
Restrict access to Housing Benefit by persons from abroad and other persons[4]	April and August 1994	—	22,000	—	40

Notes:

Figures on gainers and losers are the estimated figures for the financial year in which each change occurred.

Estimated costs/savings are at 1994–95 prices, except for the "disengagement of students" which is at 1990–91 (because the Department no longer collects data on students' incomes and rent levels).

[1] Housing Benefit gainers/costs were offset by losers/savings in Income Support.

[2] No figures on gainers/losers are available. The changes to Housing Benefit were made as part of an overall package of measures for full-time students and included the introduction of student loans and Access Funds. The overall increase in expenditure on students was over £100 million at the point of change.

[3] No information is available on the number of persons affected by the change to local authority subsidy arrangements.

[4] Three tests were introduced in 1994—the immigration status test in April 1994, and the habitual residence and Rights of Residence Directives tests in August 1994.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will amend Housing Benefit Regulation 101(1) (b) to ensure that landlords will no longer bear the financial responsibility for fraudulent claims made by their tenants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Roger Evans: There are no plans to do so. Recovery of overpaid housing benefit can be sought from a landlord where payment of such benefit has been made direct. In such circumstances, the local authority will still exercise judgement when deciding whether to pursue recovery in this way. Guidance issued to local authorities by this Department provides for authorities to make clear to landlords when offering the opportunity of receiving housing benefit direct, that they may become liable for any overpayment which may occur.

Ministerial Travel (Spouses)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the duration of the trips, undertaken by Ministers in his Department on which they were accompanied by their spouses and paid for at public expense, which was referred to in his answer of 26 October, Official Report, column 706.

Mr. Hague: The trip lasted three days.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (i) hold open meetings, (ii) conduct public consultation exercises, (iii) conduct consultation exercises with outside commercial interests, (iv) publish a register of members' interests (v) publish agendas for meetings and (vi) publish the minutes of meetings; and whether this is in each case (a) under a statutory requirement or (b) voluntary.

Mr. Hague: The information requested is as follows:

(i) None.

(ii) The Social Security Advisory Committee and the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council.

The Disability Living Allowance Advisory Board also frequently consults with medical experts and outside organisations representing disabled people.

All consultations are on a voluntary basis.

(iii) The Social Security Advisory Committee. Again, consultations are on a voluntary basis.

(iv) None.

(v) None.

(vi) None.

Flooding, Glasgow

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what help is available from the social fund to people on income support who have suffered loss and damage as a result of the recent flooding in the Glasgow area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Roger Evans: Disaster relief following flooding is essentially a matter for the relevant local authority. However, crisis loans can be made available through the social fund to help individuals in such circumstances. Community care grants are also available to help those who might otherwise be in danger of going into care; or to families who find themselves under exceptional pressure. Applications to the social fund are dealt with by specially trained social fund officers who look carefully at the individual circumstances surrounding each application and use discretion and flexibility when forming their decisions. I would expect the majority of any flood applications to the social fund to be dealt with under normal procedures.

Up until 14 December a total of 311 social fund awards had been made to people in the Glasgow area who have been affected by the severe flooding, at a cost of £20,102. The majority of awards were for community care grants. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security proposes to make a social fund in-year allocation of £120,000 to the district offices affected. This will enable reimbursement of the additional expenditure already made and make available an extra £80,000 in grants and £20,000 in loans.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

M11 Link Road

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Attorney-General what role the Treasury Solicitors had in relation to official action against protestors on the M11 link road route; and what was the cost.

The Attorney-General: The Treasury Solicitor, on behalf of the Department of Transport, has taken proceedings against certain persons to restrain them from trespassing upon land required for the M11 link road and from trespass to the contractors' plant and machinery. The proceedings are not concluded and have to date cost approximately £222,000.

TRANSPORT

Empty Property

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to make use of his Department's empty residential property.

Mr. Watts: My Department acquires land and property, including residential property, as a consequence of the Secretary of State's duties as a highway authority. Our policy is to keep to a minimum the number of properties standing empty at any time by letting, normally at full market rent, until road construction starts. Properties on the line of the road are demolished and those properties identified as surplus are released back into the housing market at the earliest possible date.

As announced by my hon. Friend the Member for Hertfordshire, West (Mr. Jones) on 30 November in response to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Isle of Wight (Mr. Field), Official Report, columns 732–34, during the current financial year my Department plans to reduce by more than half the number of residential properties standing empty on 1 April 1994.

Ministerial Train Journeys

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many train journeys of one hour's duration or more he has made in Britain in 1994 in the course of his official duties.

Dr. Mawhinney: Whenever it is appropriate I travel by train to official engagements.

Information on individual journeys and the times taken could be provided only at a disproportionate cost.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (i) hold open meetings, (ii) conduct public consultation exercises, (iii) conduct consultation exercises with outside commercial interests, (iv) publish a register of members' interests, (v) publish agendas for meetings and (vi) publish the minutes of meetings; and whether this is in each case (a) under a statutory requirement or (b) voluntary.

Mr. Norris: My Department currently has two active advisory non-departmental public bodies—the Disabled

Persons' Transport Advisory Committee and the Street Works Advisory Committee. The answer in respect of these is:

(i) none;

(ii) DPTAC has conducted public consultation exercises;

(iii) participation in the consultation exercises at (ii) has included bodies with outside commercial interests;

(iv) none;

(v) none;

(vi) none.

The Consultations referred to at (ii) and (iii) were voluntary.

M4

Sir Anthony Durant: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport pursuant to his oral answer on 21 November, Official Report, columns 325–26 in respect of the contractor's proposals for continuous day and night closures, what arrangements he has agreed for the closure of the M4 to facilitate the construction of a motorway service area at Reading.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Highways Agency has, with my agreement, approved the closure of the M4 in the Reading area for about four hours within a period of six hours between 11pm and 5am on the nights of 27–28 and 28–29 December. This is for reasons of public safety while beams for a new bridge are lifted into place. There will be a further need for closure in the spring when the existing bridge is to be demolished. I am pleased that we have been able to avoid any day-time closures and to limit night-time closures to short periods in the quiet week after Christmas.

EDUCATION

School Exclusions

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans she has to introduce a national system to monitor exclusions from school.

Mr. Forth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) on 25 November, Official Report, column 395.

Pupils

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was (a) the total number of pupils at each aged between two and 19 years and (b) the percentage of those educated in independent schools at each age for each year since 1989–90.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is shown in the table.

Pupils

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many pupils who obtained five or more A to C or five or more A to G grades at GCSE one or more years before reaching the 15-year-old age group were no longer at the same school at the time of the January pupil count in 1993–94; and what percentage this is of all pupils gaining those grades.

Mr. Robin Squire: During the preparation of the 1994 performance tables, the following information was provided by schools.

The number of 15-year-old pupils who obtained five or more A*-C grades at GCSE one or more years before reaching the 15-year-old age group, and who were no longer on the roll of the same school at the time of the January pupil count, was 203. This is 0.09 per cent. of all 15-year-old pupils gaining those grades. The corresponding figures for 15-year-old pupils achieving five or more A*-G grades was 252, 0.06 per cent. of all 15-year-old pupils gaining those grades.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by her Department (a) hold open meetings, (b) conduct public consultation exercises, (c) conduct consultation exercises with outside commercial interests, (d) publish a register of members' interests, (e) publish agendas for meetings and (f) publish the minutes of meetings; and whether this is in each case (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntary.

Mr. Boswell: No advisory non-departmental public bodies are sponsored by this Department.

TREASURY

Pensioners

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people over the age of 65 years are liable for income tax at each of the lower, basic and higher rates, in the current financial year.

Sir George Young: Latest estimates for 1994–95 based on projections from the 1992–93 survey of personal incomes are given in the table. Only 30 per cent. of people aged 65 or over are liable to income tax.

Energy Expenditure

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total expenditure on energy for offices and buildings by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Nelson: The information requested is as follows:

Building Societies

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will issue regulations under the Building Societies Act 1986 to prevent building societies from becoming banks unless provision is made to ensure that directors and senior management do not increase their salaries and participation in share option schemes for five years thereafter.

Mr. Nelson: No. Under the terms of the Building Societies Act 1986, a conversion has to be approved by the members of a society, subject to stringent turnout and voting requirements. In the transfer statement put to the members, the board must disclose details of how the remuneration, including share options, of directors and senior management of the society will be affected by the conversion.

Donkey Rides

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect of his recent Budget statement as it applies to VAT on donkey rides on Cleethorpes beach.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Since donkey rides are not a recognised form of public transport, even on Cleethorpes beach, they will continue to be subject to the standard rate of VAT.

Restaurant Meals

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much has been received in VAT levied on restaurant meals in the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: VAT arising from consumer spending is usually estimated from Central Statistical Office estimates of consumer spending. There are not separate figures for consumer spending on restaurant meals. The following figures for output tax paid by restaurants and cafés, etc, for the years 1991 to 1993 give a rough indication:

Year	£ million
1991	554
1992	523
1993	481

VAT (Fuel)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will direct Customs and Excise officials to send a refund to Robert MacDonald of Gullet house, South Pool, Kingsbridge, of VAT charged at 17½ per cent. for the kerosene delivered on 3 November for house central heating and hot water; and if he will make a statement about VAT on oil for domestic use.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No. Customs has already confirmed to Mr. MacDonald that he was overcharged in error by his supplier. The normal operation of VAT means that his supplier will make the refund. All supplies of heating oil for domestic use are liable to VAT at 8 per cent.

VAT (Palace of Westminster)

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what rules apply to the imposition of VAT on all goods and services, with particular reference to the sale of alcoholic beverages in the Palace of Westminster.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The normal ones. The Palace of Westminster is registered for VAT purposes and accounts for tax on all taxable supplies like any other registered trader.

Ministerial Train Journeys

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many train journeys of one hour's duration or more he has made in Britain in 1994 in the course of his official duties.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Wherever it is sensible I travel by train to official engagements. Information on individual journeys and the times taken could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Inland Revenue

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the next steps review of the Inland Revenue will commence.

Sir George Young: In April 1992, day-to-day responsibility for assessing and collecting the taxes for which the Inland Revenue is responsible and for providing support services to the Department was given to a number of executive offices. Each office agreed its own framework document, and all operate fully on next steps lines. In accordance with Government guidelines, a review of the executive office arrangements will begin in January 1995, with the aim of reporting to Ministers by 31 December 1995.

The review will cover the evaluation of the executive offices' performance; reconsideration of the way that their functions are organised and delivered—by reference to the prior operations tests set out in the 1993 "Next Steps Review" (Cm 2430)—and the revision of their framework documents as appropriate. A similar review of the Valuation Office Agency, the revenue's only executive agency, has already been announced and began on 1 August 1994.

Comments and contributions from those who are interested in the Revenue and its work would be welcome and should be sent by 15 March 1995 to Mary Hay, Inland Revenue Next Steps Review, Room 25, New Wing, Somerset house, Strand, London WC2R 1LB.

"Financial Statement and Budget Report"

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will make available revised versions of tables 1.5, 6.3 and 6.5 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" in the light of the measures he announced on 8 December.

Mr. Aitken: The revised tables as requested are as follows:

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the rate of return on United Kingdom manufacturing in 1989–90; and what were the figures for other industrial countries.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The rate of return on capital employed by manufacturing companies is published in Central Statistical Office First Release 94(205)—"Profitability of UK companies: rates of return of UK industrial and commercial companies (1962–1993)". Table 14 of OECD's national accounts volume II contains information on rates of return on capital employed in manufacturing for OECD countries. Figures are not comparable between countries because of differences in the calculation of data. For example, different assumptions are made about the life times of fixed assets. Both publications are available from the Library of the House.

Mortgage Interest Payments

Mr. Dewar: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what he estimates the cost to a typical mortgage holder will be of taking out unemployment insurance against the possibility of having to meet mortgage interest payments for a period of nine months.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to him on 9 December 1994, Official Report, columns 390–91.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the duration of the trips, referred to in his answer of 2 November, Official Report, columns 1131–32, which were undertaken by Ministers in his Department and on which they were accompanied by their spouses and paid for at public expense.

Mr. Heseltine: The duration of the six official trips referred to in the answer of 2 November, were as follows:

Minister	Country	Duration of trip
Mr. Hamilton, Minister for Corporate Affairs	Romania	2 days
Earl Ferrers, Minister for Small Firms and Consumer Affairs	Singapore/Australia New Zealand	14 days
Mr. Taylor, PUSS for Trade and Technology	Germany	1 day
Mr. Eggar, Minister for Industry and Energy	South America	11 days
Mr. Heseltine, President of the Board of Trade	Australia/Japan South Africa	8 days 6 days

Ministerial Train Journeys

Mr. MacShane: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many train journeys of one hour's duration or more he has made in Britain in 1994 in the course of his official duties.

Mr. Heseltine: Whenever it is appropriate I travel by train to official engagements. Nine journeys made have been by train in 1994. Information on individual journeys and the times taken could be provided only at a disproportionate cost.

Cuba

Mr. Parry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received from Unilever in respect of its investment programme in Cuba.

Mr. Charles Wardle: None.

Water and Electricity Authorities

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the current aggregate remuneration, including share options and incentive payments, of the chairman of each water and electricity authority; and what they received in the year before privatisation.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Questions on the water industry should be directed to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment. The remuneration of the privatised electricity supply industry is a matter for the companies concerned. Information on the remuneration of the chairman of Nuclear Electric, which is wholly owned by the Government, is set out below.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list for each electricity authority (a) the number of executive and non-executive directors in the year before privatisation together with their aggregate remuneration and (b) the current number and their aggregate remuneration including share options and other incentive payments.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The remuneration of the privatised electricity supply industry is a matter for the companies concerned. Information on the remuneration of the directors of the successor electricity companies in England and Wales in 1989–90 is set out below. This information was taken from the main prospectuses, except where indicated.

Coal

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what level of financial assistance he intends to grant British Coal Enterprise for the year 1995–96; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: British Coal Enterprise, as a wholly owned subsidiary of British Coal Corporation, is funded by the corporation. My Department does not provide any separate financial assistance to BCE.

The corporation is eligible for restructuring grant under the Coal Industry Act 1987. This includes financial support for BCE. Proposals for payments of restructuring grant in 1995–96 will be presented to Parliament in the main estimates in the new year.

Exports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the increase in export prices for manufacturers for (a) Germany, (b) the USA, (c) France, (d) Italy, (e) Japan, (f) Spain, (g) the Netherlands and (h) the United Kingdom to (i) EEC and (ii) non-EEC countries between the last quarter for which figures are available and the corresponding quarter in 1992; and if he will give the figures in terms of a common currency.

Mr. Needham: Changes in United Kingdom export prices can be readily derived from export unit value indices available on the Central Statistical Office central shared database which can be accessed via the Library. Comparable information for the other countries listed is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Oil and Gas Exploration, East Timor

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what (a) financial and (b) other assistance is being given by his Department to United Kingdom companies exploring for oil and gas in the East Timor gap.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My Department is giving no assistance to United Kingdom companies for exploration for oil and gas in the East Timor gap.

Pool Reinsurance

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will authorise the Pool Reinsurance Co. to change the arrangements for the payment of terrorism insurance premiums for 1995.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: I have agreed to an adjustment of the payment arrangements which will benefit policyholders if there are no large losses next year. In 1995, premiums will be payable in two instalments—60 per cent. of the annual premium will be payable at the start of the policy period, and the remaining 40 per cent. at the end of the year. The second instalment will, however, be waived if total losses notified to Pool Re during the year do not exceed £50 million. The instalment provision will be withdrawn in the course of the year in respect of subsequent new or renewed policies should losses exceed £50 million.

Arrangements for 1996 will be determined in the light of experience.

Accounts Services Agency

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he has decided to whom he will award his Department's contract for the services supplied by the Accounts Services Agency.

Mr. Heseltine: I have decided to award the DTI contract for the services currently supplied by the Accounts Services Agency to the CSL Group Ltd. Bids were judged on the basis of quality of service, price, continuity of service, and commitment to developing the service. The contract will last for five years, with an option to extend for a further two years at the Department's discretion. Most of the staff, and all of the assets, will transfer to CSL.

Ian Greer Associates

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on how many occasions he or his Ministers met representatives of Ian Greer Associates in the last three months to discuss matters relating to their clients' interests.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 12 December 1994]: Our records show that there have been no such formal meetings arranged for such a purpose.

Company Investigations

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many companies were not investigated in the last two years due to lack of resources after receipt of an initial report highlighting misconduct under the Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jonathan Evans [holding answer 15 December 1994]: The number of cases of reported unfit conduct which on first consideration warranted further investigation but which could not be taken forward were:

Year	Number
1992–93	192
1993–94	657
1994–95 (to 30 November 1994)	354

The Insolvency Service has not been able to take forward as many disqualification cases as would have been considered appropriate because of the need to balance priorities within the resources available to it against the background of a sharp and substantial increase in the number of insolvencies with which it has had to deal. More resources have now been made available to the service, particularly in the area of director disqualification, and this is resulting in a very significant increase in the number of disqualifications taken forward.

ENVIRONMENT

Humber Estuary

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) on what basis he has determined that the Humber east of the Humber bridge is coastal waters for the purposes of the urban waste water treatment directive;

(2) what is the current level of waste water discharge into the Humber from Hull; and if it falls within the limit specified in paragraph 2 of article 6 of the urban waste water treatment directive;

(3) if he is yet able finally to determine whether primary treatment is appropriate for waste water discharges from Hull into the Humber estuary under the urban waste water treatment directive; and if he will make a statement;

(4) with whom the final decision rests as to appropriate treatment of waste water discharges into the Humber estuary from Hull under the urban waste water directive; and on what statutory basis any discharge consent or other approval will be given;

(5) how far is the Humber bridge from Spurn point;

(6) for what purposes the National Rivers Authority treats the Humber bridge as the outer limit of the estuary.

Mr. Atkins [holding answers Wednesday 14 December 1994]: The Humber bridge has been determined as the seaward limit of the Humber estuary, for the purposes of the urban waste water treatment directive, in the light of advice given by the National Rivers Authority.

The present sewage discharge at Hull represents a population equivalent of some 500,000 and is untreated. The final determination of whether primary treatment will be appropriate at any location will rest on whether the NRA is satisfied that the results of a comprehensive study demonstrate that a discharge treated to such standards will not adversely affect the environment. In the case of Hull, primary treatment as set out in article 6.2 will be permitted if the conditions set out in article 8.5 can be shown to apply. The NRA will then issue a discharge consent under regulation 6 of the Urban Waste Water Treatment (England and Wales) Regulations 1994 and chapter II of part III of the Water Resources Act 1991: the requirements will depend upon the outcome of the process described.

Ministerial Train Journeys

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many train journeys of one hour's duration or more he has made in Britain in 1994 in the course of official duties.

Mr. Gummer: Five.

Oil and Gas

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what involvement his Department has in the procedure for licensing offshore oil and gas exploration and extraction.

Sir Paul Beresford: Responsibility for the licensing of offshore oil and gas exploration and extraction rests with the Department of Trade and Industry. My Department is, however, consulted about blocks proposed for licensing and passes comments to DTI in cases where environmental issues are involved.

Elderly and Disabled People

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the publication of the study commissioned by his Department from Ernst and Young on the housing needs of elderly and disabled people and on the main conclusions of the research.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: This research confirms that the Government's policy of enabling frail elderly and disabled people to remain as far as possible in their existing homes, through house adaptations and domiciliary care support, is the preferred option of the majority and is the most cost-effective solution to their housing needs. It also establishes that this policy has been successful in targeting those who are in most need of help, that is, elderly and disabled people in the highest dependency groupings, low-income households, and the most elderly single people and couples.

The report argues, however, that housing providers should re-assess their priorities over specialised accommodation for elderly and disabled people, such as sheltered housing. There is nationally a significant over-provision of ordinary sheltered housing and, to a lesser extent, an under-provision of very sheltered or extra-care housing. This under-provision can be remedied, in many cases through up-grading ordinary sheltered housing.

I welcome this report as a major contribution to the debate about the housing needs of elderly and disabled people and about new and more flexible forms of providing for them. I have placed in the Library today copies of Living Independently—A Study of the Housing Needs of elderly and disabled people.

Polychlorinated Biphenyls

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish technical guidance about identifying, phasing out and destroying polychlorinated biphenyls following the decisions of the third North sea conference; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: My right hon. Friend is today publishing a new waste management paper 6, polychlorinated biphenyls: it supersedes the existing waste management paper 6, which was published in 1976. Because polychlorinated biphenyls are environmentally harmful, their use has been progressively restricted since the 1970s. Some older equipment, particularly electrical equipment, nevertheless still contains PCBs in quantity: these remaining PCBs must be prevented from causing any significant increase in the existing environmental PCB load. The eight North sea states therefore agreed to phase out and destroy all identifiable PCBs by 31 December 1999. A consequent United Kingdom draft action plan is the subject of current consultations. The technical guidance in the new waste management paper 6 will enable industry, commerce and the public sector to identify disposal measures for their remaining PCBs. I commend waste management paper 6 to all managers with a responsibility for premises or equipment. I am placing copies of the paper in the Library of the House.

Departmental Budgets

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to change his Department's cash limits and external financing limits for 1994–95.

Mr. Gummer: The DOE/HC, Housing Corporation, non-voted cash limit, covering grants and capital expenditure financed by the Housing Corporation in England, will be increased by £3,416,000 to £1,478,708,000. The increase is to fund an additional £3 million in respect of city challenge expenditure and for the take-up of end year flexibility entitlement of £416,000 as announced by the Chief Secretary on 14 July, Official Report, columns 729–34, for expenditure under the corporation's approved development programme, including city challenge schemes.

The DOE/LACAP, local authority capital, non-voted cash limit will be increased by £836,000 to £2,221,200,000. The increase is for the take-up of end year flexibility entitlement for supplementary credit approvals to local authorities to enable funding of projects within the housing partnership fund. The entitlement has been recalculated on outturn figures and revised from £530,000, announced by the Chief Secretary on 14 July, Official Report, columns 729–34, and based on forecast outturn data.

The external financing limit for the British Waterways Board will be increased by £500,000 to £48,866,000. This will help the board to cover the costs of canal repairs following a breach of the Leeds and Liverpool canal at Maghull and to bring forward essential maintenance work.

The increases will be offset by savings elsewhere or charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

WALES

Discretionary Grants

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations his Department has received over the last 18 months on the subject of discretionary grants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Young People

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the obstacles which reduce the likelihood of young people aged 16 and 17 years who are currently classified as (a) ILO unemployed or (b) economically inactive and not currently in full-time education taking up one of the opportunities available to them under Government programmes (i) in general and (ii) in respect of each category of opportunity and each category of young people.

Mr. Redwood: All school leavers who do not go into further education or employment are eligible to register with the careers service for vocational training under the youth guarantee. I am not aware of any obstacles which prevent young people from registering, although it is evident that not all do so.

The careers service is to receive additional resources in 1995–96 to strengthen careers guidance from age 13 and I very much hope that this will have a significant effect in reducing the numbers of school leavers who fail subsequently to register for vocational training.

My Department is also helping to sponsor seven projects in Wales which are being run by the training and enterprise councils, in conjunction with voluntary bodies and other organisations, to identify such young people and to develop different ways of promoting their interest in further education, training or employment. Details of these projects will be announced shortly.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (i) hold open meetings, (ii) conduct public consultation exercises, (iii) conduct consultation exercises with outside commercial interests, (iv) publish a register of members' interests, (v) publish agendas for meetings and (vi) publish the minutes of meetings; and whether this is in each case (a) under a statutory requirement of (b) voluntary.

Mr. Redwood: The information requested is as follows:

(i) Local Government Boundary Commission for Wales; (1)
(ii) Local Government Boundary Commission for Wales; Staff Commission for Wales;
(iii) Local Government Boundary Commission for Wales; (2)
(iv) None;
(v) Local Government Boundary Commission for Wales; (3) Welsh Economic Council;
(vi) Welsh Economic Council
(a) The Local Government Boundary Commission for Wales is under a statutory requirement to conduct public consultation exercises and, where appropriate, to hold open meetings in connection with the reviews it conducts. The Commission is also required to publish the reason for such meetings.
(b) The Staff Commission for Wales conducts public consultation exercises voluntarily. The Welsh Economic Council voluntarily publishes agendas for meetings and the minutes of its meetings.

Notes:

(1) The Commission's own meetings are not held in public.
(2) Although public consultations are not targeted at outside commercial interests, the Commission welcomes representations from commercial organisations with an interest in its reviews.
(3) The Commission does not publish the agendas for its own meetings.

Government Agencies

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 12 December, Official Report, column 515–16, to the hon. Member for the Vale of Glamorgan (Mr. Sweeney) if he will give the date of sale of any shares acquired in the course of underwriting activities by (a) the Welsh Development Agency and (b) any other Government agencies for which he is responsible.

Mr. Redwood: I will arrange for the chief executive of the agency to write to the hon. Member and for a copy of his letter to be placed in the Library of the House. The WDA has ceased to undertake such activity and no other agency for which I am responsible does so.

Regional Development Grants

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the monitoring arrangements for European Union grant aid in Wales under the RECHAR, RESIDER and the integrated programme of the regional development programme; if he will list the duties of the proposed monitoring committee; and if he will list the representations he has received on this subject.

Mr. Redwood: There will be two monitoring committees in Wales covering the objective 5b, rural Wales, and objective 2, industrial south Wales, areas. The committees will have responsibility for monitoring the implementation of their respective mainstream programmes, and also any community initiatives that are relevant to the appropriate area. The duties of the monitoring committees will be agreed at their first meetings in the new year. I have received a number of representations from interested bodies on this subject.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many parliamentary questions tabled in the last session of Parliament were not answered on the grounds that the information sought was not held centrally by the Department.

Mr. Baldry: During the period concerned, six questions were not answered on the grounds that the information sought was not centrally held.

Gibraltar

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 12 December, Official Report column 463, what representations he has made to the European Union regarding harassment at the frontier between Spain and Gibraltar.

Mr. David Davis: We are considering all possible options. In particular, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs shall be raising the issue in the strongest possible terms when he meets his Spanish colleague on 19 to 20 December. I have already summoned the Spanish ambassador and made a formal protest.

Norwegian Referendum

Mr. Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what effect the decision in the Norwegian referendum had on the agreement on qualified majority voting in the European Council of Ministers negotiated at Corfu on the understanding that European Union membership would rise to 16 countries.

Mr. David Davis: Article 2(2) of the accession treaty for Sweden, Finland, Austria and Norway provides for the Council to make the necessary amendments to the treaty to take account of non-accession of one of the applicants. A draft Council decision to take account of Norwegian non-accession had been submitted to the European Select Committees of both Houses for scrutiny. This amends the qualified majority voting articles of the treaty to remove Norway's allocation of three votes, and amend the qualified majority threshold from 64 to 62. A separate Council decision, a draft of which has also been submitted to the Select Committees, will amend the Ioannina decision to apply to dissenting minorities of between 23 and 25 votes. The Council will make these decisions on 1 January 1995.

European Union

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many specific decisions and powers hitherto in the ambit of Parliament to act have been ceded to the European Union in the form of (a) regulations, (b) directives incorporated into United Kingdom law and (c) adjudications of the European Court, since United Kingdom accession to the European Economic Community.

Mr. David Davis: This information is not held centrally.

Bosnia

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 1 December, Official Report, column 817, concerning the legal basis for the protection by the UN of the civilian population of safe areas in Bosnia Herzegovina, whether the bombs dropped within the UN-designated safe area of Bihac were dropped on UN troops and to what extent the counter-measures were taken in defence of UNPROFOR personnel.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We believe that the sporadic bombardment of Bihac safe area has not been targeted specifically against UNPROFOR. We understand from the UN that UNPROFOR has adjusted its deployment and operations activity to take account of the prevailing security situation in Bihac.

Departmental Telephones

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much has been spent on telephone charges and how many telephone calls have been made by his Department for each of the last five years.

Mr. Goodlad: Figures for the FCO, ODA and the Natural Resources Institute are set out below. Costs are the aggregates of voice, data and fax traffic over the telephone network, including line charges. FCO costs are given for 1992–93 and 1993–94. Information for previous years could only be made available at disproportionate cost. Details of call volumes are not available for FCO prior to 1993–94. Call volumes for the ODA are available from 1992–93 onwards.

Cuba

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the United States Government for ending the trade embargo with Cuba.

Mr. David Davis: We believe that the United States embargo against Cuba is primarily a bilateral matter for those two Governments to resolve. But we and EC partners made clear to the United States Government our opposition to the extraterritorial extension of the embargo by the Cuban Democracy Act before that Act was signed in 1992. We have reaffirmed our view on many occasions since.

Ministerial Travel

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the countries to which his Department's Ministers and civil servants based in Britain travelled in 1993 and 1994; and by which airline.

Overseas Travel

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 7 December, Official Report, column 265, about his Department's spending on air travel, what categories of people travel (a) first class, (b) business club class or (c) economy.

Mr. Goodlad: Ministers on official business travel first class. If this is not available, they travel business class. FCO officials accompanying Ministers who have work to transact with their Ministers during the flight travel in the same class.

On flights of two and a half hours or less, all other FCO officials of assistant under-secretary level and above on official business travel business class. All other staff travel economy class. On flights of more than two and a half hours, officials of permanent secretary level are entitled to first-class travel. All others travel business class.

As a rule, Queen's messengers travel business class. Where only economy and first class are available, they take the higher class.

Overseas Diplomatic Residences

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 6 December, Official Report, column 168, if he will make it his policy to collect figures on the cost of upkeep of each overseas diplomatic residence owned by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Goodlad: The FCO plans to introduce a new financial management accounting system in April 1996. It is the FCO's intention to utilise this facility to make aggregation of the relevant figures more readily attainable.

Entry Clearance Fees

Mr. Brandreth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to increase any of the entry clearance application fees.

Mr. Baldry: An Order in Council—the Consular Fees (Amendment) Order 1994—was made on 14 December which provides for changes in entry clearance application fees with effect from 4 January 1995.

A number of non-entry clearance consular fees were increased on 24 November. It is Government policy that the cost of entry clearance services should be borne by the users as far as possible. Some entry clearance fees, however, have remained unchanged for many years. To avoid too great a rise in the fee for settlement and analogous services, the increase will be made in two further annual stages until full cost-recovery is achieved in 1997.

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a statement on the forthcoming business of the European Union.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many parliamentary questions tabled in the last Session of Parliament were not answered on the grounds that the information sought was not held centrally by the Department.

Mr. Jack: According to the POLIS database, eight parliamentary questions, out of a total of 2,061, were answered during the last Session with the response that the information requested was not held centrally.

Slaughter Industry

Mr. Olner: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what support his Ministry is providing to encourage expansion of the United Kingdom slaughter industry.

Mrs. Browning: Since there is over-capacity in the slaughter industry, the demand will be determined by the market place.

Mr. Olner: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the estimated number of animals transported live for slaughter from the United Kingdom in (a) 1993, (b) 1983 and (c) 1973; and what was the total numbers of carcases exported for each of those years.

Mrs. Browning: Data on numbers of animals exported for slaughter and on numbers of carcases are not available. Figures for total recorded numbers of animals and weight of meat exported are given in the table. The figures given for live animals may be too low and are being investigated. I shall write to the hon. Member to inform him of the results of this investigation.

Advisory Committees

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of meetings held, the secretarial and advisory arrangements, the budgeted and actual expenditure and the subjects of the reports and submissions produced by each of the hill farming advisory committees in (a) 1992, (b) 1993 and (c) 1994.

Mr. Jack: The Hill Farming Advisory Committee for England, Wales and Northern Ireland is chaired by my noble friend the Earl Howe. The committee advises Ministers on hill farming matters. It does not produce reports or submissions and my Department provides the secretariat.

The following table shows the number of meetings held, the budgeted expenditure and actual expenditure for the years 1992, 1993 and 1994.

	Number of meetings	Budgeted expenditure £	Actual expenditure £
1992	2	7,000	7,000
1993	2	9,000	8,500
1994	1	4,000	3,000

Note:
Costs do not include MAFF staff time.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the functions and objectives of (a) the consumers committees, (b) the agricultural dwelling house advisory committees, (c) the hill farming advisory committees, (d) the Advisory Committee on Pesticides and (e) the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee.

Mr. Jack: The functions of the consumers' committees for Great Britain, for England and Wales and for Scotland are laid down in section 19 of the Agricultural Marketing Act 1958. The committees consider and report to Agriculture Ministers on the effect of approved schemes on consumers of the products concerned. Currently, there are approved schemes for potatoes and wool only.

The agricultural dwelling house advisory committees' functions and objectives are to give information and impartial advice to local house authorities on the agricultural need and urgency for the re-housing of agricultural tied cottage occupants so as to make their vacated accommodation available to incoming agricultural workers.

The hill farming advisory committees' functions and objectives are to advise the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Secretary of State for Wales on the exercise of their powers under the Hill Farming Act 1946 and on any matter relating to farming in the less-favoured areas that may be referred to the committee by them.

The Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee has been given the responsibility of maintaining an overview of research into the spongiform encephalopathies as well as advising the government on all matters relating to the spongiform encephalopathies.

The functions and objectives are of the Advisory Committee on Pesticides are published annually in its annual report, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of meetings held, the secretarial and advisory arrangements, the budgeted and actual expenditure and the subjects of the reports and submissions produced by each of the agricultural dwelling house advisory committees in (a) 1992, (b) 1993 and (c) 1994.

Mr. Jack: Agricultural dwelling house advisory committees, which are statutory bodies under the Rent Agriculture Act 1976, are convened in England,—separate parallel arrangements apply in Wales—as required, by the chairman of the local agricultural wages committee. Secretarial support is provided by MAFF staff from the Ministry's regional service centres. In most instances, the Agricultural Development Advisory Committee provides a technical appraisal of the farm business involved.

The budgeted and actual expenditure for these committees is as follows:

Expenditure	1992–93 £	1993–94 £	1994–95 £
Budgeted	43,304	37,000	35,000
Actual	26,243	31,888	[1]17,059

[1] To 31 October 1994.

The budgeted costs and actual expenditure in respect of the ADAS appraisals, on a financial year basis, were:

	1992–93 £	1993–94 £	1994–95 £
Budgeted Expenditure	[1]—	180,000	126,000
Actual Costs	—	154,400	[2]66,750

[1] Internal recharging for these services did not apply. No separate budget allocation was therefore made.

[2] To 31 October 1994.

The remit of the committees is to give confidential advice to local housing authorities on the agricultural need for and urgency of re-housing applications. The following information summarises the conclusions reached by the committees on the cases examined:

	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95[1]
Agricultural need identified	165	146	68
No agricultural need identified	25	29	15

[1] To 31 October 1994.

On the urgency of the application, immediate rehousing was advised in the following numbers of cases where an agricultural need had been identified:

	Number
1992-93	40
1993-94	32
1994-95[1]	18

[1] To 31 October 1994.

Animal Transportation

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the place of departure and the place of destination given in (i) the certificate required under article 5 (d) of the Welfare of Animals during Transport Order 1992 and (ii) the journey plan required under article 5 (e) of the order, in respect of a consignment of calves flown at approximately 9 am on Wednesday 7 December from Coventry airport to Rennes.

Mr. Waldegrave: I am unable to release the precise information which covers matters of commercial confidentiality but am informed that the calves began their journey from premises in Somerset. Their final destination was notified as being to premises at Cherance Craon, in France.

Market Testing

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those services that have been market tested by his Department and won by the private sector, indicating the organisation that won the tender and its value.

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 12 December 1994]: The services that have been market tested by my Department and won by the private sector, together with the organisations that have won tenders, are as follows:

Pigs

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what grant aid is available to pig producers in England to convert sow tether and stall accommodation.

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 12 December 1994]: In 1991, we decided that by giving producers eight years to phase out stalls and tethers the cost was reduced to containable levels and it was not a priority for the limited funds available. That remains our view.

Lindane

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy on the use of the pesticide lindane.

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 12 December 1994]: Lindane is approved for certain uses by the six Government Departments responsible for pesticide safety. The independent Advisory Committee on Pesticides initiated a review of agricultural uses in April 1992 and plans to complete this review by next spring.

Its review of other uses of lindane was completed in December 1992, and the committee recommended that these should continue. Ministers accepted this recommendation and the evaluation documents are available from the Pesticides Safety Directorate.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 19 December 1994

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Court Costs

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the average daily cost of running each level of court.

Mr. John M. Taylor: On the best information currently available, we calculate that the average daily cost of the county courts, including listing but excluding case preparation overheads, is approximately £900,000. An equivalent figure for the Supreme Court is £200,000, and for the Crown court £900,000. These figures are full costs, including costs borne by the Consolidated Fund, divided by the number of working days. A similar cost in the magistrates courts would be £1.2 million.

Social Security Commissioners

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many cases in each of the last five years have been presented to the social security commissioners on the grounds of breaches of natural justice; and how many have been successful.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information requested is not available. Appeals are registered at the office of the social security commissioners only on the basis of the nature of the benefit being appealed.

DEFENCE

Aircraft Engines

Mr. Brandreth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures he is taking to pursue collaboration on engine technology for future military aircraft.

Mr. Freeman: My Department has recently signed a memorandum of understanding with the French Ministry of Defence. This arrangement covers any collaborative aero-engine technology demonstration. Initially, collaboration has been agreed for an advanced small turbine engine, demonstrate technology for future helicopter engines and for an advanced military engine technology programme in support of future combat aircraft engines, and it is hoped that it will eventually include a number of other projects. Through such programmes, we would seek to increase significantly thrust-to-weight ratios while reducing fuel consumption and production, maintenance and life-cycle costs.

Manpower Reductions

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on manpower reductions in the armed forces.

Mr. Soames: As we announced on 14 July, the "Front Line First" initiative will lead to manpower reductions of some 1,900 for the Royal Navy, 7,500 for the RAF, 2,200 for the Army and 7,100 for the civil service, and that this involves redundancies. As was promulgated on Friday 16 December, the further detailed work that has been done envisages some 1,500 Royal Navy, 7,500 RAF and some 400 Army redundancies in addition to the 80 Army redundancies announced on 17 November; an additional 900 Royal Navy and 1,100 RAF redundancies, resulting from previously announced efficiency measures, are proceeding in the same timescale. Civilian redundancies are not in general pre-determined centrally. We would expect a significant proportion of the civilian job losses announced in "Front Line First" to result in redundancy.

HMS Vanguard

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when HMS Vanguard will make her first deterrent patrol; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: I am glad to inform my hon. Friend that HMS Vanguard, the first of the United Kingdom's four Trident submarines, is at present at sea on her first patrol. HMS Vanguard's entry into service on time is a major achievement for a project of this scale and complexity, and marks a key point in the progressive replacement of the Polaris force by Trident. The Trident system will ensure that the United Kingdom's strategic deterrent will remain effective well into the next century.

Spearfish Torpedoes

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the latest position regarding the main production for spearfish torpedoes.

Mr. Freeman: I am pleased to announce that we have today placed a main production contract with GEC-Marconi Naval Systems for the supply and in-service support of Spearfish submarine-launched torpedoes for the Royal Navy.

The Spearfish torpedo is a highly advanced, submarine-launched anti-submarine and anti-ship torpedo and provides the Royal Navy with a capability designed to counter all known and predicted ship and submarine systems. Spearfish, which is already in service, will progressively replace the Tigerfish torpedo in Royal Navy submarines by the turn of the century.

The contract is worth some £630 million and will create some 40 new jobs and help to safeguard many more at the company's underwater weapons division at Waterlooville, Hampshire. As over 80 per cent. of the manufacturing and processing work will be sub-contracted, this order will be very welcome for a wide section of British industry.

The Royal Naval armament depot at Beith in Ayrshire will be acting as a major sub-contractor to GEC-Marconi Naval Systems for both the final assembly of the torpedoes and for all in-service support. Consequently, this contract will also help to safeguard a large number of jobs at RNAD Beith.

TRANSPORT

West Coast Line

11. Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for future investment in the west coast rail line under the private finance initiative.

Mr. Watts: The then Secretary of State announced in December 1993 that the west coast main line would be modernised using private finance. These plans still stand.

Chelsea to Hackney Line

12. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made in the plans for the Chelsea to Hackney underground line.

Mr. Norris: I understand that London Underground Ltd. has been reviewing the route and is currently considering the results.

London Underground

13. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about investment in London Underground.

Dr. Mawhinney: We receive a large number of representations about a variety of issues relating to investment in London Underground.

Northern Line

14. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on progress on the private finance initiative in relation to Northern line trains.

Mr. Norris: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport was delighted to announce the go-ahead for this deal on Thursday 8 December.

A5

15. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last drove or was driven along part or all of the A5, Watling street; what congestion was apparent then; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Watts: Since becoming Minister for Railways and Roads, I have not travelled on the A5, Watling street. However, I am aware of peak-time congestion on the A5 between the M69 and A47 near Hinkley at the south of my hon. Friend's constituency.

European Transport Networks

16. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he plans to meet his European Union counterparts to discuss European transport networks.

Dr. Mawhinney: The next discussion of transport networks is planned for the Transport Council meeting on 14 March next year.

Road Building Schemes

19. Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy on funding road building schemes in the light of the Budget; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Watts: The Government remain firmly committed to substantial investment in the national roads programme and to making the most effective use of the existing trunk road network.

Decision Makers

20. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport to what extent lobbying by Decision Makers influenced departmental decisions on Ebbsfleet.

Dr. Mawhinney: Decision Makers had no influence on the Government's decision that three would be an international and domestic intermediate station on the channel tunnel rail link at Ebbsfleet, which I announced on 31 August. As I told the House on 21 November, the assessment of each of the intermediate station option was based on studies undertaken by Union Railways and its consultants. It was carried out on an entirely even-handed basis. No unfair advantage was given to the Ebbsfleet Promoters.

Channel Tunnel

21. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received regarding the channel tunnel rail link.

Mr. John Watts: I have received representations from a wide range of interests and on a wide range of subjects.

Railtrack

22. Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what legislation will govern the disposal by Railtrack of railway property; and what compensation will be available to those damaged by Railtrack decisions.

Dr. Mawhinney: The railway property transferred to Railtrack when it was established in April 1994 was limited to that necessary to run the network. The Railways Act 1993 contains provisions governing the closure of passenger networks and stations. The question of compensation for those affected by decisions taken by Railtrack is a matter for the parties concerned.

Bus Competition

23. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what analysis his Department has made of the competition in bus services following the Transport Act 1985.

Mr. Norris: The effects of competition in bus services has been fully monitored through a programme of research undertaken by the Transport Research Laboratory, which has published a number of reports on the situation nationally and locally.

Sliding-door Trains

24. Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the 317 sliding-door trains will now be brought into service on the London, Tilbury and Southend line.

Mr. Watts: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 25 November Official Report, column 381.

Traffic Casualties

25. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what new proposals he has to reduce traffic casualties.

Mr. Norris: A series of publicity campaigns aimed particularly at reducing speed in urban areas and reducing the amount of drinking and driving, the provision of grant—£50 million this year—in support of local safety schemes, approval of 20 mph zones, over 130 of which are now in operation, negotiation of improved vehicle standards and measures to facilitate the enforcement of road traffic law.

To reduce accidents involving newly qualified drivers, we are developing road safety education material for the 16-plus age group in schools and colleges, a scheme for post-test driver training—pass-plus—to be launched in early 1995, linked to lower insurance premiums, an enlarged theory element to be included in the driving test from 1996 and a scheme requiring newly qualified drivers to retake the driving test if they commit serious traffic offences.

Accident-damaged Vehicles

26. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider statutory controls over rebuilt accident-damaged vehicles.

Mr. Norris: I am looking at the whole matter of rebuilt accident-damaged vehicles. However, I would not wish to bring in new legislation unless it could be entirely justified on its merits.

A2

28. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his plans for the A2 highway and its upgrading in the context of the channel tunnel rail link project.

Mr. Watts: It is too early to be able to report on plans for the A2. We shall need to consider the effects of all the development in the area, including that related to channel tunnel rail link before deciding on appropriate improvements to the A2.

Public Transport (London)

29. Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to improve public transport in London.

Mr. Norris: The Government's plans provide for continuing and substantial levels of public funding to support investment in maintaining and improving public transport in London. We also look forward to a growing contribution from the private sector in financing and operating services.

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last had a meeting with the chairman of the British Railways Board to discuss progress on privatisation of Railtrack and rail services.

Dr. Mawhinney: I have regular meetings with the chairmen of the British Railways Board and of Railtrack to discuss a variety of railway privatisation issues.

Vehicle Inspectors

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has for increasing the number of vehicle inspectors to improve lorry safety.

Mr. Norris: None. However, the inspectorate is to continue to increase its enforcement effectiveness through better targeting and improved productivity and management of its enforcement resources.

National Roads Programme

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the national roads programme for 1995–96; whether the A5164 Stoke to Derby link and the Derby southern bypass are included; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: I have made it clear that the trunk road network is broadly complete. Our priority now must be to make the most effective use of the existing network—especially motorways—and to build to remove congestion and pollution blackspots.

I have instructed the Highways Agency to remove three major motorway bottlenecks. They cause congestion and pollution and damage the economic well-being of the country. They also cause frustration and diversion on to smaller, more unsuitable roads.

The schemes are:

phase one of the widening of the M1 between junctions 21 and 21A, at a cost of about £15 million, which is required to avoid congestion when the Leicester western bypass opens in 1995;

widening the M25 between junctions 8 and 10 from Reigate to the junction with the A3 at Wisley, at a cost of about £75 million. This adds a fourth lane in each direction within the existing boundary. Adjoining sections are currently being widened or already have been; building the M1-M621 link road, to the south of Leeds, at a cost of about £12 million. This will remove severe congestion at the junction of two important motorways.

I have also instructed the Highways Agency to proceed with four important schemes in London.

In line with the priority to improve the orbital network in London, two schemes are to be taken forward on the north circular road: A406 Silver street to Fore street improvement, costing about £34 million and A406/A1/A598 Regents' park costing about £50 million.

The other two schemes will improve the western approach to the capital, relieving congestion and improving blackspots: the A40 Gypsy corner at a cost of about £26 million and the A40 western circus junction improvement at a cost of about £27 million.

In addition, I will be funding a further 12 new contracts, including the A564 Derby southern bypass, at a cost of about £475 million.

By redirecting resources, I shall no longer be proceeding immediately with a further six publicly funded schemes where work was scheduled to begin in 1994–95. We will consider taking four of them forward by design, build finance and operate contracts.

The private sector is playing an ever increasing role in delivering transport infrastructure. The Department is already in the process of preparing tenders for the first four major road building projects to be designed, built, financed and operated by the private sector.

There is huge interest from the City and industry in this private-public sector partnership and we can expect many more schemes with an increased role for the private sector over the next few years. Work on the other schemes scheduled to start in 1994–95 will wait until there is space in the programme.

For one other scheme—the A34 Newbury bypass—I have concluded that work should be delayed while further consideration is given to the proposed route. I reached this view after a private visit to Newbury to examine the existing A34 and the proposed bypass route. I have asked the Highways Agency to look again at the plans for the bypass and to explore other options. Once the agency has reported back to me I will make a further announcement. I would expect to be in a position to do this in about a year's time, when I announce road scheme starts for 1996–97.

These proposals mean that significant progress will be made with the Stoke to Derby link, in addition to the Foston Hatton-Hilton bypass currently under construction; work will start on the Derby southern bypass, and phase two of the Blythe bridge to Queensway improvement; and the Doveridge bypass is a candidate for a DBFO contract.

A full list of the schemes covered by this announcement is available in the Library of the House.

Rail Accident Inquiries

Mr. Wolfson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the lengthy time lag between the date of serious rail accidents and the publication of the findings of any inquiry into them; and if he will speed up that process.

Mr. Watts: Her Majesty's chief inspecting officer of railways is committed to speeding up the publication of inquiry reports, while maintaining standards of investigation and analysis.

Inspectors immediately pass any emerging conclusions and recommendations to the operator concerned so as to avoid any recurrence of the accident.

Traffic Control and Parking

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to monitor the effectiveness of local councils over traffic control and parking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: Counties, metropolitan districts and London boroughs, as local traffic authorities, are primarily responsible for monitoring the effectiveness of traffic control and parking on all local roads in their areas. My right hon. Friend already monitors the effectiveness of the legal framework within which the local traffic authorities must work.

College Road, Dulwich

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what study his Department has made of the effect on local road traffic patterns of the decision by the governors of the Dulwich College estate to re-open the toll gate on College road, Dulwich; how many road accidents there have been in the locality since the re-opening of the toll gate compared with those in a period of equal length before the re-opening; what action he is taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: College road is a private road and no central record of local road traffic patterns is kept to measure the effect of the toll gate reopening. Similarly no central record of road accidents in the immediate vicinity is kept but total casualty figures for the London boroughs of Lewisham and Southward show a declining trend in recent years.

Railways (Funding)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to ensure that funding is made available for station information equipment on the intermediate railway stations between Shrewsbury and Aberystwyth; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Watts: This is a matter for British Rail.

Freight

Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the implementation of his Department's policy of transferring freight from road and rail since its introduction.

Dr. Mawhinney: Rail must improve its performance if it is to attract and retain freight customers. The key to this is liberalisation and privatisation. We have already opened up the rail network to competition. Privatisation of British Rail's freight businesses will follow as soon as possible. Rail freight is being further encouraged by a considerably enhanced grants regime and a 44 tonnes weight concession for lorries engaged in combined road and rail transport.

Cycle Tracks

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the total mileage of cycle tracks in each London borough and each English county.

Mr. Norris: No central record is kept of cycle track length.

Marchioness

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what funds he has allocated to meet the costs of legal representation for (a) the QC acting on behalf of the Marine Safety Agency and (b) his own Department at the inquest into the deaths following the Marchioness disaster scheduled for March 1995.

Mr. Norris: None. Officials from the marine accident investigation branch and the Marine Safety Agency will attend the inquest if requested to do so by the coroner. They will be legally represented if asked to attend and if necessary, but proceedings in coroners courts are usually informal and are concerned with the facts surrounding a death rather than issues such as civil or criminal liability. Legal representation is therefore generally unnecessary.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what basis he would be prepared to open a public inquiry into the Marchioness disaster; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: We do not consider that it would be appropriate or necessary to open a public inquiry into the loss of the Marchioness. The marine accident investigation branch has carried out a full and thorough investigation into the disaster and its report has been published.

Ports Office

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what will be the change in the number of administrative and civil service posts with the proposed privatisation of the Ports Office for Scotland in (a) Scotland and (b) London.

Mr. Norris: My Department has no proposals to privatise the Ports Office for Scotland.

Cyclists (Fatal Accidents)

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many female cyclists were killed in road accidents aged (a) five years, (b) six years, (c) seven years, (d) eight years, (e) nine years, (f) 10 years, (g) 11 years, (h) 12 years, (i) 13 years, (j) 14 years, (k) 15 years and (l) 16 years in (i) 1991, (ii) 1992 and (iii) 1993;

(2) what were the total number of cyclists killed in road accidents between the dates 26 to 31 December, inclusive, in 1991, 1992 and 1993.

Mr. Norris: The information requested is shown in the table.

Vehicle Accidents

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the number of accidents involving (a) heavy goods vehicles, (b) public service vehicles and (c) minibuses for the West Midlands police force area for each of the last five years.

Mr. Norris: The information requested is shown in the table.

Operator Licences

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the number of heavy goods and public service vehicles specified on operator licences for the west midlands area for each of the last five years.

Mr. Norris: The information requested for the west midlands traffic area is as follows:

Channel Tunnel

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the arrangements for joint health and safety protection of the safety of passengers on the channel tunnel rail link, following the construction and completion of the tunnel.

Mr. Watts: Union Railways has in consultation with the Health and Safety Executive, prepared an outline railway safety case for the proposed channel tunnel rail link from St. Pancras to Cheriton. I have today placed copies in the Library. The Health and Safety Executive has confirmed that there are no aspects of the outline design which would call for an objection.

The outline safety case recognises that an updated and more detailed safety case will need to have the approval of the Health and Safety Executive before the rail link is brought into use.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many meetings have been held with the French railways to discuss the safety of the channel tunnel rail link.

Mr. Watts: Union Railways, which has been responsible for developing the channel tunnel rail link project, is a member of European Union committees preparing standards relating to high-speed railways. SNCF is also represented on these committees. In addition, Union Railways is involved with a continuous dialogue with SNCF and other European railways on matters of common interest, including safety.

Public Transport

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to guarantee the provision of public transport to rural areas following petrol price increases.

Mr. Norris: The provision of bus services is primarily a matter for bus operators commercially and for local authorities who have powers to subsidise the running of additional services where they see a need which is not being met commercially. In addition, the rural transport development fund, which is run by the Rural Development Commission in England with funds from the Department of Transport, is available to assist with the provision of innovative rural transport services, including village community buses and post buses. Over 360 new projects have been funded and resources have been increased in the past two years to encourage further schemes. The Scottish and Welsh Offices run similar grant schemes.

Unadopted Roads

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the cost of adopting currently unadopted roads in residential areas in England.

Mr. Norris: We have made no estimate of the cost.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the number of miles of unadopted roads in Lancashire.

Mr. Norris: We have made no such estimates.

Pass-plus

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to make the pass plus scheme compulsory.

Mr. Norris: None.

Driver Training

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of light goods vehicle drivers received formal training before completing their light goods vehicle test.

Mr. Norris: A survey conducted by the Driving Standards Agency in 1992 found that 99 per cent. of LGV test candidates had undertaken some formal training before taking the test. The vast majority had taken this training solely with professional training bodies. The remainder had combined this formal instruction with further practice with a friend or relative.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies his Department has conducted into the prior training of light goods vehicle drivers who have been involved in accidents.

Mr. Norris: None.

Executive Search Agencies

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what use his Department has made of executive search agencies in filling vacancies within his Department and executive agencies administered by his Department during the last year; and how much these services have cost his Department.

Mr. Norris: The Department used executive search agencies to assist in filling two vacancies within the Department and its executive agencies in 1994. The total cost was £55,300.

ICAO

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how regularly the activity of the United Kingdom's representatives' office to the International Civil Aviation Organisation is monitored or audited.

Mr. Norris: Monthly.

Standing Advisory Committee on Trunk Road Assessment

Mr. Brandreth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he proposes to publish the report of his Standing Advisory Committee on Trunk Road Assessment on traffic generation.

Dr. Mawhinney: I am today publishing SACTRA's report and, following the normal practice with such reports, a full Government response. I am very grateful to SACTRA for the comprehensive and detailed work it has done in this difficult area. Copies of its report and the Government response, together with a brief summary, have been placed in the Library of the House.

SACTRA was asked to report on traffic generation because the Department recognised that, as economic growth over the last 15 years has greatly increased traffic levels, the number of congested areas has gone up and with them, the cases where a road scheme might bring costs as well as benefits. There was also a growing feeling that there should be a more general examination of whether roads do to some degree increase traffic as well as relieve congestion.

SACTRA has made the case for taking greater account of changes to the origin, destination and timing of existing trips, particularly when projecting traffic flows for road schemes in places where the road network is already congested. Although the report is consistent with our long-standing view that new schemes do not generate a significant number of trips which are entirely new, the overall amount of traffic on the network may in some cases rise by more than is usually allowed for under current appraisal methods.

The Department accepts this and is now looking at all national road schemes in the planning stages, to see if the changes in traffic considered by SACTRA are likely to be significant. If they are, the best means currently available for identifying possible changes in traffic patterns will be applied.

This work will be done with all speed. There is no reason to require or expect delay to road schemes or public inquiries. The important task is to ensure that, for those cases where extra traffic might adversely affect the cost-benefit justification, new traffic modelling is done so that the results can be examined.

However, some of SACTRA's work is not conclusive. There is insufficient evidence to support any simple rule governing the relationship between the amount of time saved on a journey and the use of that time on more travel.

It is clear that a great deal of research needs to be done to develop improved traffic modelling techniques for use in congested conditions. Additional research is already under way, and more will now be commissioned.

I have also been studying the recommendations that SACTRA made on strategic, economic and environmental appraisal and traffic modelling. SACTRA shows the way forward, but it recognises that further studies need to be undertaken before these recommendations could be put into practice. My Department will therefore be developing and testing new techniques in these areas.

I am determined that important, and often very difficult, decisions on road schemes are taken on the basis of the best and most up-to-date methods for forecasting their effects. SACTRA has made a valuable contribution to advancing our understanding of these issues.

Sickness Absence

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 5 December, Official Report, column 32, if he will list separately for each agency in his Department and for the Central Transport Group, all the programmes and initiatives which fall within the approaches set out in the occupational health service notice 93/3.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 16 December 1994]: A number of common initiatives exist throughout the Department of Transport. The Department is committed to the "Look After Your Heart" programme; has, or is currently, offering health screening to staff; has announced its intention to provide a non-smoking working environment with facilities for those who wish to smoke; is currently reviewing areas of work activity; operates staff suggestions schemes; and gives advances of salary for purchase of bicycles for home to office travel;

In addition, agencies pursue local initiatives. These are:

Agency	Programme/Initiative
Coastguard Agency	Health awareness seminars stress awareness seminars workstation reviews Training Needs Analysis Coastal Staffing Review

River Thames

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for increasing passenger and freight traffic on the River Thames.

Mr. Norris: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 13 December, column 544-45.

PRIME MINISTER

Special Advisers

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement regarding his Department's expenditure on special advisers for each of the last three financial years, and for the financial year 1979–80.

The Prime Minister: I refer to the reply which my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer gave to the hon. Member today.

Parliamentary Private Secretaries

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 12 December, Official Report, column 447, if he will specify where in the public record are to found the numbers of parliamentary private secretaries in November 1989, November 1984 and May 1979.

The Prime Minister: The information can be obtained from the Library of the House.

Managerial Systems

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister which Departments have MINIS—managerial information systems—or an equivalent system; and if he will list the names of the systems and whether hon. Members can access them indicating those Departments which do not have a similar system; and what is his policy towards introducing such systems or a Government-wide system.

The Prime Minister: A number of Departments have developed management information systems similar to MINIS since the launch of the financial management initiative in 1982. The main responsibility for developing such systems rests with Departments, and up-to-date information on such systems is not available centrally. A multi departmental efficiency scrutiny is currently examining management information and planning systems and is expected to report in the spring.

Honours

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Prime Minister how many (a) peerages and (b) knighthoods have been awarded since November 1979 to (i) Conservative hon. Members, (ii) Conservative former hon. Members, (iii) Labour hon. Members and (iv) Labour former hon. Members.

The Prime Minister: Forty-nine peerages have been awarded to ex-Conservative Members and 32 to ex-Labour Members. One hundred and fifteen knighthoods have been awarded to Conservative Members—60 of whom are no longer Members of the House of Commons—and two to Labour Members, one of whom is no longer a Member of the House of Commons.

Details of knighthoods awarded to ex-Conservative and ex-Labour Members after they have left the House can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Prime Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Byers: To ask the Prime Minister on what occasions and on what dates between 1982 and 1990 his predecessor met (a) the Prime Minister, (b) the President and (c) the Defence Secretary or Foreign Secretary of (i) Turkey, (ii) Indonesia and (iii) Botswana.

The Prime Minister: Archived material of this nature is not centrally recorded and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Turkey

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on how his Department's use of overseas aid helps promote good government in Turkey, in particular relating to the promotion of human rights as set out in paragraph 38 iii, page 58, of his Department's report 1994 Cm. 2502.

Mr. Baldry: In Turkey, British aid funds are used on projects which contribute to a number of the key objectives set out in paragraph 38 of the Department's report, particularly enhancing productive capacity and human development, as well as good government.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the total amount of overseas and grants made to Turkey for each year since 1979 in cash and constant 1993–94 prices.

Mr. Baldry: Prior to 1987–88, separate figures for annual amounts of aid grants made to Turkey are not available. The table gives gross public expenditure on aid to Turkey for each year since 1979, with the amount spent on grants for the years 1987–88 to 1993–94 inclusive.

1. Before 1987–88 data is only available on a calendar year basis. It is not possible to compare expenditure produced on a calendar year basis with that produced on a financial year basis. The calendar year data has been deflated to constant 1993 prices.
2. The 1993–94 figures are provisional until the publication of the 1993–94 edition of British Aid Statistics.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list (a) the current aid projects and (b) the current Government contracts with Turkey.

Mr. Baldry: Aid projects in Turkey currently supported by the aid programme are:

> provision of an English Language teaching specialist, plus training and equipment, for the School of Foreign Languages in Cukurova University at a cost of £475,000 over 1992–95; > support from the Aid and Trade Provision for British sub-contractors to provide goods and services for the construction of a metro in Ankara £22.069 million over 1993–97. On 13 December my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs announced that in future expenditure on this project will be met from funds voted by Parliament outside the scope of the Overseas Development and Cooperation Act.
> £1,030,000 for awards under the Chevening Scholarship Scheme in 1994–95;
> support from the Aid and Trade Provision for a contract between a British company, TecQuipment International, and the Turkish Council of Higher Education for the supply of technical teaching equipment to 27 state universities in Turkey; £23.363 million over 1993–96.

Biological Diversity

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much money the United Kingdom Government will be spending over the next five years on assistance to countries overseas for the implementation of the convention on biological diversity; and what it will be spent on.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 16 December 1994]: We are providing help through both bilateral and multilateral aid channels. Between 1991–92 and 1993–94, ODA spent £34.7 million in bilateral aid on projects wholly or partly concerned with biodiversity conservation. In addition, the Department of the Environment has committed £9 million to the Darwin initiative over the next three years. This supports collaborative projects with developing countries in biodiversity conservation. On the multilateral side, we have committed a total of £130 million to the global environment facility, which, inter alia, is the financial mechanism of the convention and is designed to help developing countries and economies in transition to implement their undertakings under the convention.

Biwater Group

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those applications for aid and trade provision finance which were sought and subsequently withdrawn by Biwater group since 1983, together with the costs of contracts, the amount of aid and trade provision assistance sought, the countries involved and the dates on which the applications were (a) made and (b) withdrawn.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 16 December 1994]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 15 December, Official Report, column 782–83.

Know-how Fund

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list each organisation in receipt of contracts from the know-how fund with respect to advice and support systems for small and medium sized enterprises in (a) the Moscow region and (b) Russia as a whole.

Mr. Baldry: A list of organisations currently in receipt of contracts from the know-how fund in the categories mentioned, together with a list of completed fund projects in Russia in the same sector, will shortly be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Sudan

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government (1) will give development as well as humanitarian aid to areas in the south of Sudan controlled by the Government of Sudan;

(2) how much (a) humanitarian and (b) development aid is annually being sent to the Sudan from Her Majesty's Government; and what are the reasons for this.

Mr. Baldry: We provided £14.7 million in emergency aid to Sudan in 1993–94 in order to meet urgent humanitarian needs. Our bilateral development aid programme to Sudan was closed in January 1991 for economic and political reasons, including the Sudan Government's record on human rights and their attitude towards terrorism. We have no plans to reopen it. Support for small projects including those managed by British NGOs under the joint funding scheme continues at about £250,000 per annum.

Aid and Trade Provision

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to his oral statement of 13 December, if he will state the month and year in which it was agreed to provide ATP to the projects in (a) Turkey, (b) Botswana and (c) Indonesia; if he will identify the United Kingdom companies who benefited from the agreement and where there was a joint project, the local companies involved.

Mr. Baldry: The information requested is as follows:

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Recruitment

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish an update of the table, staff in post and grade on entry, produced for the 1988 Treasury document on departmental requirements in the recruitment of administrative assistants and administrative officers.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: I know of no such document.

Research Councils

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total annual amount paid by each of the research councils in research stipends.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: In 1993–94, the Agricultural and Food Research Council spend £2.2 million, the Economic and Social Research Council £6.9 million, the Medical Research Council £7.6 million, the Natural Environment Research Council £6.3 million and the Science and Engineering Research Council £53.7 million.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many research students made grant applications for the year 1993–94; how many were accepted and began their courses; and how many were refused.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: The Economic and Social Research Council received 5,050 applications. The other councils did not collect data on the number of applications, which were made directly to course supervisors, but universities reported no shortage of applicants. The numbers taking up awards were: Agricultural and Food Research Council, 108; ESRC, 895; Medical Research Council, 439; Natural Environment Research Council, 530; and Science and Engineering Research Council, 4,845.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the annual amount paid to research students by each of the research councils and the number of students in each category.

Mr. Robert. G. Hughes: The figures for 1993–94 were: Agricultural and Food Research Council, £6,200 and 318; Economic and Social Research Council, £4,720 and 1,486; Medical Research Council, £6,145 and 1,071; Natural Environment Research Council, £4,950 and 1,190; and the Science and Engineering Research Council, £4,720 and 10,636. The councils supplemented the stipends for London and second and third year students and for those involved in collaborative projects with industry.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the criteria by which each of the research councils decide which category of stipend each research student receives.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: A student receives the stipend advertised by the council for the type of studentship for which he or she has applied.

Citizens Charter Panel of Advisers

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will list all those appointed to the citizens charter panel of advisers since its inception showing which members have resigned and the dates of their resignations;

(2) if he will publish a table showing the number of meetings held, the secretarial and advisory arrangements, the budgeted and actual expenditure and the subjects of any reports and submissions produced by the citizens charter panel of advises in each year since its inception.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: The table gives details of the appointments made to the Prime Minister's panel of advisers on the citizens charter since inception. Those members who have since left the panel did so at the end of their agreed periods of appointment, with the exception of Mr. John Spiers, who resigned as a panel member on 6 September 1994.

Since the panel of advisers on the citizens charter was set up, it has officially met on 48 separate occasions. However, the duties of the panel extend beyond these meetings and include other meetings with the Prime Minister, other Government Ministers and officials.

The citizens charter unit, headed by Miss Genie Turton, provides secretarial and general support to the panel of advisers. Expenditure on panel members fees, travel and subsistence to date totals £257,636.37. The panel has not published any reports. It is not a function of the panel to produce or publish its own reports.

Open Government

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) how many requests for information, made under the code of practice on access to Government information, have been received by each Government Department;

(2) how many requests for information, made under the code of practice on access to Government information, have been refused by each Government Department.;

(3) how many cases of refusal, by each Government Department, to provide information under the code of practice on access to Government information have been referred to the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration;

(4) how many requests have been made to each Government Department to review a decision to refuse information which has been sought under the code of practice on access to government information.

Mr. David Hunt: This information is not as yet held centrally. Work has begun on the report on the first year's operation of the code of practice, which was promised by my predecessor before the launch of the code. The report will appear in the early part of 1995, and will give details such as the number of requests made under the code of practice.

My own Department, Office of Public Service and Science, has received four requests for information under the code of practice on access to Government information. Of these requests, one was refused in part. There have been no requests for internal review, nor have any of these cases been the subject of an appeal to the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) hold open meetings, (b) conduct public consultation exercises, (c) conduct consultation exercises with outside commercial interests, (d) publish a register of members' interests, (e) publish agendas for meetings and (f) publish the minutes of meetings; and whether this is in each case (i) under a statutory requirement of (ii) voluntary.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes [holding answer 16 December 1994]: The answers to each part of this question are:

(a) None.

(b) The Citizen's Charter Complaints Task Force and the Technology Foresight Steering Group.

(c) The LINK Steering Group and the Technology Foresight Steering Group.

(d) The Advisory Committee on Advertising, which is sponsored by the Central Office of Information, for which the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster has Ministerial responsibility.

(e) None.

(f) None.

In each case, it is voluntary.

None have a statutory requirement for any of the above.

My Department also sponsors the Standing Committee on Standards in Public Life, which will determine its own procedures. It has already conducted public consultation exercises, and has announced its intention to take evidence in public.

Market Testing

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the savings which have been achieved through market testing in his Department.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: Savings in excess of £9.2 million have been achieved as a result of market testing under the "Competing For Quality" initiative by the Cabinet Office, Office of Public Service and Science, including its agencies, Her Majesty's Stationery Office and the Central Office of Information.

Citizens Charter

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many requests have been received by the citizens charter unit for copies of each of the citizens charters; how many such requests have been fulfilled by the unit; and how many have been referred to (a) other Government Departments, (b) agencies and (c) non-departmental Government bodies.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: Individual public services, including Government Departments, deal with requests for copies for their own service charters. Information about the number of requests for these charters, either made directly to the relevant service, or through the citizens charter unit, is not held centrally.

Since 17 October 1994, Inform Communications has operated for the citizens charter unit a citizens charter publication line on 0345 22 32 42. This sends out on request certain citizens charter publications issued by the Office of Public Service and Science, but not the individual service charters. Customers requesting such information are sent a list showing which charters exist and where they can be obtained from individual public services. The current list is as follows:

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and place a copy of the letter in the Libraries of the House.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Syndicated Oral Questions

44. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Lord President of the Council what measures he intends to take to prevent syndicated oral questions.

Mr. Newton: I have no plans to recommend any changes to the existing arrangements. If my hon. Friend wishes to make any proposals, he might wish in the first instance to put his thoughts to my right hon. Friend the Chairman of the Procedure Committee.

Parliamentary Recesses

45. Mr. Barnes: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make it his policy to reduce the length of parliamentary recesses.

Mr. Newton: I have no such plans.

Parliamentary Timetable

46. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make it his policy to publish the estimated full year's parliamentary timetable at once, revise the programme monthly and give a firm programme of the business of the House a fortnight in advance.

Mr. Newton: The unpredictable nature and demands of parliamentary work would make the advance publication of an annual timetable impractical. I am, however, seeking to give earlier notice of recesses wherever possible.

Committee Membership

47. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Lord President of the Council what plans he has to clarify the entitlements of appointment to Committees of hon. Members deprived of a party Whip; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The membership of Standing Committees is a matter for the Committee of Selection under the terms of reference set by Standing Order No. 86.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many train journeys of one hour's duration or more he has made in Britain in 1994 in the course of his official duties.

Mr. Newton: In my duties as Lord President, none.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Indonesia

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 7 December, Official Report, column 264, about the export of weapons to Indonesia, if he will list export equipment refused a licence because it was deemed likely to be used for internal repression; and if he will give dates.

Mr. David Davis: This Government, like all previous Governments, does not comment in detail on information on specific export licence applications since this information is commercially confidential.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to inquire from British civil personnel working on arms sold to Indonesia by Britain whether the arms have been used for internal repression.

Mr. Goodlad: We have made inquiries of those sources likely to be well informed on this question. No evidence has emerged that British-supplied defence equipment has been used against civilians in Indonesia or East Timor.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what monitoring of the use of British-manufactured armaments and aircraft in Indonesia is undertaken by British diplomatic representatives.

Mr. Goodlad: It would be impracticable on a regular basis to monitor, after transfer, equipment which we have licensed for export. We are, however, ready where necessary to ask recipient countries, on a confidential basis, about the location and use of defence equipment we have supplied. The Indonesians have assured us that British-supplied defence equipment will not be used against civilians, in Indonesia or East Timor.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what support was given by the British embassy in Indonesia to the recent trip made by a delegation of hon. Members from the all-party anglo-Indonesian Committee to Indonesia.

Mr. Goodlad: The embassy provided an oral briefing. Her Majesty's ambassador gave a dinner in the group's honour. The deputy head of mission invited the group to meet representatives of Indonesian non-governmental organisations. Embassy representatives accompanied the group on most of their official calls.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the cost of official entertainments, both at diplomatic residences, whether owned or rented and elsewhere, in Indonesia for each of the last three years.

Mr. Goodlad: The costs for entertainment at diplomatic residences cannot be extracted from the overall cost of entertainment in Indonesia. These are as follows:

1991–92: £44,554

1992–93: £49,227

1993–94: £51,423

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the cost of ministerial and civil servants' commercial overseas flights to Indonesia in each of the last three years.

Mr. Goodlad: Expenditure for duty travel to Indonesia for both Ministers and civil servants located in Britain in the FCO and ODA in 1993 and 1994 is as follows:

1993 (January to December): £20,416

1994 (January to November): £12,319

It is not possible to provide a figure for expenditure in 1992.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the cost of upkeep of diplomatic residences owned by Her Majesty's Government in Indonesia in each of the last three years.

Mr. Goodlad: The information requested is not immediately available. I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as it has been obtained.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the cost of entertaining officials and representatives of the Government of Indonesia in each of the last three years.

Mr. Goodlad: These cannot be extracted from the overall cost of entertainment by our diplomatic mission in Indonesia and on Indonesian visitors to the United Kingdom. These are as follows:

1991–92: £105,221

1992–93: £ 73,452

1993–94: £ 83,238

The costs in the United Kingdom include the cost of accommodation and transport for official visitors.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many train journeys of one hour's duration or more he has made in Britain in 1994 in the course of his official duties.

Mr. Goodlad: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs made only one train journey this year in the course of his official duties. This was from Brussels to London by Eurostar on November 28.

Sudan

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of changes in the level of respect for human rights in the Sudan.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The grave human rights situation in Sudan has not improved over the past year. The latest report by the UN special rapporteur, Dr. Biro, catalogued numerous abuses committed by the Government of Sudan and also the Sudan People's Liberation Army and other groups

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will sponsor a peace initiative aimed at containing the civil war in the Sudan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We fully support the ongoing peace initiative sponsored by four regional countries, members of the Inter-Governmental Authority for Drought and Development. We provide practical support for this initiative and, together with EU partners, have urged all parties to the conflict to negotiate in good faith.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about British arms manufacturers supplying arms to either side in the civil war in the Sudan; and if he will name them.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are not aware of any violations by British companies to the EU arms embargo imposed on Sudan in March this year.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about the disappearance of children from the Nuba mountains of Sudan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are disturbing reports of widespread human rights violations committed against civilians in the Nuba mountains region by Government of Sudan forces. References to these abuses are contained in the recent report by the UN special rapporteur.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current extent of rebel-held areas in the south of Sudan.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In large areas of southern Sudan, Government forces hold the main towns while the forces of the Sudan People's Liberation Army and other factions control much of the countryside. The precise areas held by the various forces varies constantly.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British citizens travelled to the Sudan in each of the past five years; and how many Sudanese citizens entered Britain over the same period.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no means of calculating how many British citizens travel to Sudan, nor do we keep statistics on the number of visas issued worldwide to Sudanese nationals. The numbers of visas issued by HM embassy in Khartoum during the past five years were: 1993–4,450; 1992–3,730; 1991–8,030; 1990–7,490; 1989–7,450.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to review Her Majesty's Government's policy on the Sudan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We remain concerned about a number of issues including: the civil war, the appalling human rights situation, and problems over the distribution of humanitarian relief supplies. We shall continue to raise these issues with the Government of Sudan, and to press for action to resolve them.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the role and function of the remaining British diplomatic personnel in the Sudan; and what assessment he has made of whether they are being adequately monitored.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Her Majesty's embassy in Khartoum conducts a range of diplomatic activities, with political, aid, consular, commercial and visa sections. As with all our diplomatic missions, the embassy's activities are supervised from London.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in resolving the diplomatic impasse between Britain and the Sudan in relation to the exchange of ambassadors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are in contact with the Sudanese authorities about this but a final decision has not yet been taken.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his assessment of the extent of Islamic extremism in the Sudan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are concerned at reports of the presence in Sudan of Islamic militants from various countries.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British non-governmental organisations are currently operating in the Sudan; and if he will list them and their locations.

Mr. Baldry: There are nine British non-governmental organisations now operating projects in Sudan, with ODA funding.

These are:

Acord	Qala En Nahal, Port Sudan
British Red Cross	Juba
CARE	North Kordofan

Addis Ababa

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current staffing level of entry clearance officers at the British embassy in Addis Ababa.

Mr. Baldry: The number of officers currently employed on entry clearance work at the British embassy in Addis Ababa is four. They include the consul and vice-consul, who have other duties in addition to entry clearance work and two full-time entry clearance officers with the effect from 31 December 1994.

There are plans to increase the staffing complement of the section by a further full-time ECO as soon as new offices are completed. This is expected to be in September 1995.

Ethiopia

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the waiting time for entry clearance interviews at Her Majesty's post in Addis Ababa on the latest available information and in the last three years.

Mr. Baldry: Straightforward applications in Addis Ababa are dealt with in two working days. Those who require detailed interviews are now being given appointments in January. The visa section will be closed over the Christmas, new year and Ethiopian new year holidays.

The waiting time for straightforward Somalia reunion cases is currently one week. In other cases, where referral to the Home Office is necessary, applicants are being given appointments for interview in June 1996.

Corresponding information for the last three years could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Gibraltar

D. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the European Union legislation that Gibraltar has not implemented.

Mr. David Davis: There is a backlog of EC legislation awaiting implementation in Gibraltar including directives in the areas of financial services, money laundering, the environment and health and safety. We are addressing this problem in co-operation with the Government of Gibraltar to whom we are giving substantial support in London and Gibraltar.

Visas

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 12 December, Official Report, column 487, what considerations underlie the practice of British embassies in Belgrade, Sofia and Zagreb not recording the nationality of those to whom they issue visas to visit the United Kingdom; how many visas were (a) granted, (b) refused and (c) are awaiting decisions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 16 December 1994]: As the immigration rules are applied without regard to nationality, and as the recording of applications by nationality is not operationally necessary, it is not the practice to record the number of applicants by nationality.

During 1993, the last full year for which figures are available, the following visas were issued, refused or awaiting decision in Belgrade, Sofia and Zagreb.

	Issued	Refused	Awaiting
Belgrade	1,772	105	62
Sofia	9,005	476	42
Zagreb	1,753	414	—

It is estimated that 95 per cent. of applicants in Sofia are Bulgarian nationals. Estimates are not available for Belgrade or Zagreb.

Mr. Beith: I understand that a debate on this matter has now been arranged for 12 January.

WALES

Smoking

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what initiatives he is taking to discourage smoking amongst those under 16 years of age.

Mr. Richards: A wide variety of organisations are working locally and nationally to reduce the number of young people smoking. Health authorities were asked in "Caring for the Future" to pay particular attention to this group when drawing up their activity plans for promoting healthy lifestyles. Together with local education authorities, they are involved in projects such as life education centres and smokebusters, which are run through the Health Promotion Authority for Wales. Other, more general health education programmes include smoking as part of their broader approach.

The Government also encourage and monitor the enforcement of existing laws and voluntary agreements relating to tobacco sales to under 16-year-olds, and to relevant advertising and sponsorship issues.

Secure Accommodation

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a summary of the actions that were taken by his Department arising from the report by the working party chaired by Mr. Owen Hughes into the question of the provision of secure accommodation in Wales for people with psychiatric needs.

Mr. Richards: The Report, "Security in Psychiatric Hospitals in Wales", was produced in July 1975 and has long since been overtaken by more recent policy developments, culminating in the publication of the report of the all-Wales advisory group on forensic psychiatry in 1991, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

On 19 April 1993, it was announced that additional funding of £9.25 million for new hospital facilities in Wales for mentally ill offenders. This included £1.2 million for the expansion of the Caswell clinic from 14 to 33 beds and to provide additional revenue support to compensate health authorities for the high cost of maintaining these patients. Three million pounds was made available to fund the development of a medium secure unit for north Wales.

The new beds at the Caswell clinic should be available by 31 March 1995. In north Wales, planning approval to develop a purpose-built, 25-bed medium secure unit at Llanfairfechan was obtained on 9 November 1994. The facility is expected to open in the latter half of 1996.

Repair and Renovation Grants

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many houses in Wales (a) are in a condition which would qualify them for repairs or renovation grants and (b) were given such grants in 1993–94; and what is the average cost per household of such grants in that year.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Recent estimates are available only for mandatory renovation grants where the 1993 Welsh house condition survey estimated that 151,000 dwellings were in a condition which would qualify for such grants. Estimates of the number of houses in a condition which would qualify for discretionary grant are not available.

Householders' eligibility for grants depends on their means. Therefore, not all of the properties could be improved with grant aid. The number of completed grants in 1993–94 and the average amount paid are shown in the following table:

	Number of grants	Average grant paid £
Mandatory renovation grant	7,565	18,489
Discretionary renovation grant	422	17,184
Minor works	4,966	852

Hospital Closures

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many hospitals have closed since April 1991.

Mr. Richards: Seventeen NHS hospitals in Wales have closed, and remain closed, since 1 April 1991. In all but one case this has enabled patients to be moved to better facilities or into the community.

In one instance, responsibility for the care provided was transferred from the NHS to social and probation services.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales for how many accident and emergency departments there are currently proposals for closure.

Mr. Richards: None. The strategic reviews in south and west Glamorgan do, however, involve a transfer of these services to more appropriate locations nearby.

Telecentres

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many applications have been made by (a) each county council, (b) each district council and (c) Wales as a whole for telecentres under the strategic development scheme; and how many and what proportion of such bids have been successful.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There has been: (a) one successful bid by Gwynedd county council for 1995–96; one successful bid by Powys county council for 1994–95 and three unsuccessful bids for 1995–96—two bids were joint bids with Radnor district council and Brecknock borough council respectively. No other county councils have made applications for SDS funding of telecentres centres.

There has been: (b) one unsuccessful bid by Aberconwy borough council for 1994–95; one unsuccessful bid from Colwyn borough council for 1995–96; one unsuccessful bid by Ceredigion district council for 1994–95 and one unsuccessful bid by Brecknock borough council for 1995–96, which was a joint bid with Powys county council; oneunsuccessful bid by Radnor borough council for 1995–96, which was a joint bid with Powys county council. No other borough or district councils have made applications for SDS funding of telecentres.

There have been: (c) nine bids for SDS funding of, telecentres for the 1994–95 and 1995–96 SDS rounds: the joint bids have been counted as one in both cases. Three bids were successful, a 33 per cent. success rate.

Planning Applications

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many planning applications his Department has called in during the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In the five years beginning December 1989, my right hon. Friend has called in 32 planning applications. The Government's policy is to be very selective about calling in planning applications, which will in general be called in only if planning issues of more than local importance are involved.

Secondary Schools

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total number of secondary schools in Wales.

Mr. Richards: There are 227 maintained secondary schools in Wales.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what was the total sum allocated to Welsh police authorities in 1994–95 and 1995–96; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what was the budget available to his Department to allocate to Welsh police authorities in 1994–95 and 1995–96; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: For 1994–95 there are no standard spending assessments for police authorities in Wales on which to base year-on-year comparisons. County council SSAs include provision for police services. Expenditure on policing is determined by county councils in the light of their statutory responsibilities, local needs and available resources. Some 51 per cent. of current and capital expenditure incurred by police authorities is met by Home Office grant. For 1994–95 this is expected to amount to £150.6 million.

From 1 April 1995, police authorities will be self-standing local authorities with their own cash-limited police grant and SSA allocations. I announced on 1 December that I propose to make £300.7 million available from total standard spending in Wales to fund police services in 1995–96.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has for the future functions of the Land Authority for Wales, the Development Board for Rural Wales and the urban regeneration division of the Welsh Development Agency in urban redevelopment.

1992–93	74	1,416

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 13 December, Official Report column 606, if he will institute a system for the central collection of information on the use of consultants by non-departmental public bodies in Wales, and of monitoring its effectiveness and for the issuing of guidelines with respect to controlling the use of consultants.

Mr. Redwood: The two-year disqualification period ended on 14 December 1994. Therefore, Mr. Trew may now apply to me in writing at any time to remove his disqualification for membership of the CHC. There is no requirement to convene a hearing to consider such an application.

Lynon Valley

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for the Vale of Glamorgan (Mr. Sweeney) at 12 December, Official Report, columns 515-16, what legal opinions he has obtained from leading counsel and disclosed to his Department in relation to the propriety of participation by the Welsh Development Agency in underwriting or sub-underwriting of (a) Government privatisation share issues and (b) Welsh-based private company stock market flotations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: None. My Department's lawyers are currently considering the legal advice obtained by the agency in 1988 and recently revealed to my Department, and whether further legal advice should be sought.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 12 December, Official Report, columns 515-16, to the hon. Member for the Vale of Glamorgan (Mr. Sweeney), if he will make a statement on the legal and corporate status of joint venture boards in publicly-funded urban regeneration schemes in Wales.

Mr. Eggar: No. These responses were submitted in confidence. However, for a summary of the responses I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Windsor and Maidenhead (Mr. Trend) on 14 December 1994, Official Report, column 658-59.

Mr. Ian Taylor: Details of departmental charges for telephony for 1989–90 and 1990–91 are not readily available. Comparison of the figures for successive years must be treated with caution as they are affected by major accommodation moves and, for the DTI agencies and regional offices, only include the use of the Government telephone network.

Year	£ million
1991–92	3.2
1992–93	4.2
1993–94	3.9

Details of the number of calls made per year are not held centrally.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I have written to the hon. Member.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of output for aerospace equipment for 1995.

Mr. Charles Wardle: It is not this Department's practice to forecast industrial output by sector.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the change in constant purchasing power for aerospace equipment from the second half of 1992 to the first half of 1994.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Between the third quarter of 1992 and the second quarter of 1994, the producer price index for aerospace equipment increased by 5.75 per cent. This index is the most appropriate for converting aerospace sales figures into constant prices.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had with the aerospace industry regarding change in constant purchasing power.

Mr. Charles Wardle: None.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had with his right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer, about a strategy to meet any concerns expressed by the industry regarding output for the aerospace industry.

Mr. Eggar: The Government have consistently pressed for strict implementation of the rules governing state aids to the steel industry. We have continued to impress upon the Commission the importance we attach to rigorous implementation of the monitoring arrangements agreed at the December 1993 Industry Council. At the June 1994

1992	388.5
1993	363.5
1994	283.5

Mr. Ingram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what facilities and services provided by the National Engineering Laboratory have closed or contracted since it became a next steps agency.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The only facility to have closed is the calibration service, which was provided by NEL for the Scottish calibration service. There has been a reduction in all existing areas of work for DTI, reflecting reduced demand. However, since NEL was created as a next steps agency, there has been an increase in work done for other customers.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the remuneration of the chief executive of the National Engineering Laboratory payable in each of the last five years.

Mr. Needham: Information on United Kingdom trade with the Sudan is regularly published by the Central Statistical Office in the overseas trade statistics of the United Kingdom. Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (i) hold open meetings, (ii) conduct public consultation exercises, (iii) conduct consultation exercises with outside commercial interests, (iv) publish a register of members' interests, (v) publish agendas for meetings and (vi) publish the minutes of meetings; and whether this is in each case (a) under a statutory requirement or (b) voluntary.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 16 December 1994]: A list of advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by my Department is set out in the annual publication "Public Bodies", copies of which are in the Library of the House. These bodies are consulted by the Department on a wide range of issues and provide a valuable source of independent advice.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Heating Costs

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will estimate the percentage of extra fuel which is required to heat an identical house in Belfast taking Bristol as a base.

Mr. Ancram: The percentage of extra fuel required to heat a typical semi-detached house in Belfast compared with Bristol is estimated to be 19 per cent. This figure has been calculated using the building research establishment domestic energy model.

Objective 1 Funding

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will place in the Library his Department's guidelines on eligibility for objective 1 funding for agricultural projects.

Mr. Ancram: The guidelines on eligibility for objective 1 funding of agricultural projects are contained in the Northern Ireland single programming document, which is being published by the European Commission and is expected to be available shortly. I will make arrangements for a copy to be placed in the Library as soon as possible thereafter.

Agriculture (EC Aid)

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on progress towards the implementation of agricultural measures under objective 1 status.

Mr. Ancram: The agriculture measures under Northern Ireland's objective 1 status are contained in the sub-programme for agriculture, fisheries and rural development—SPARD—a constituent part of the Northern Ireland single programming document, which was approved by the European Commission in July 1994.

Some aspects of the sub-programme are support measures, such as hill livestock compensatory allowances, and expenditure on these has been ongoing throughout 1994. The capital grants and farm innovation schemes opened for applications on 14 November 1994. The processing and marketing grants for agricultural products has not yet opened for applications as the Northern Ireland sectoral plan has still to be approved by the European Commission.

Hospital Closures

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many hospitals have closed since April 1991.

Mr. Moss: Eight. With the exception of one hospital, which provided GP maternity and obstetric services, these facilities provided services for elderly people and people with a mental handicap.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for how many accident and emergency departments there are currently proposals for closure.

Mr. Moss: I am not aware of any current proposals from health and social service boards or trusts for the closure of accident and emergency departments.

Executive Search Agencies

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what use his Department has made of executive search agencies in filling vacancies within his Department and executive agencies administered by his Department during the last year; and how much these services have cost his Department.

Sir John Wheeler: During the last year no use has been made of executive search agencies by the Northern Ireland Departments or the Northern Ireland Office.

Market Testing

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 12 December, Official Report, columns 477–78 on market testing, what is the total value of the contracts awarded.

Sir John Wheeler: The total value of the contracts is £8.26 million. The duration of individual contracts making up this figure varies from one to five years.

Child Care

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of the total social services budget was spent on child care provision in each of the health board areas in each of the last five years.

Mr. Moss: Resources are allocated to health and social services boards by the Department on a block grant basis. The level of resources expended on child care provision is determined by each board in accordance with the strategic priorities for the board area. Actual expenditure on child care provision expressed as a percentage of total personal social services expenditure in each of the health and social services boards in each of the last five years was as follows:

Per cent.

Board	1988–89	1989–90	1990–91	1991–92	1992—93
Northern	11.5	11.0	11.0	11.1	16.8
Southern	10.7	10.7	10.8	12.4	11.9
Eastern	14.6	13.4	12.3	12.9	13.9
Western	14.4	14.6	15.1	15.8	10.2

(1) Expenditure figures for 1993–94 are not yet available.

(2) Expenditure figures for the provision of child care services used to calculate the above percentage figures do not include Administration or Fieldwork costs.

(3) The financial reporting arrangements of Boards were revised in 1992–93 to accommodate the Health Service reforms. It is therefore difficult to meaningfully compare the 1992–93 percentage figures with those of previous years.

Tourism

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish figures showing the number of inquiries made to the Northern Ireland tourist board by potential holidaymakers; what further measures are proposed to encourage visitors on vacation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram [holding answer 14 December 1994]: For the year to date, the NITB has handled 281,411 inquires—a 28 per cent. rise on 1993. In particular, inquiries during October 1994 increased by 92 per cent. on the same period last year. NITB is planning a stepped up promotional campaign for 1995 in all its main markets to capitalise on this increasing interest.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the recent announcement of a £6.8 million initiative to boost tourism in the island of Ireland in co-operation with the Government of the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Ancram [holding answer 14 December 1994]: The tourism marketing initiative builds upon existing co-operative activities by the tourism authorities in Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland. It consists of a set of pilot programmes and will be concentrated on marketing the island of Ireland in the United States, Great Britain and Holland. For a limited investment by the Northern Ireland tourist board, it will bring significant benefits to an industry with considerable potential to assist economic growth throughout Ireland.

EDUCATION

Special Needs

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make it his policy to ensure that when children are given statements of special educational needs that their parents or guardians are advised to investigate whether their children may be eligible for benefits and or the disabled living allowance.

Mr. Forth: Statements for children with special educational needs are made by local education authorities. The code of practice on the identification and assessment of special educational needs, issued jointly by the Department and the Welsh Office in May this year, advised LEAs to work in close partnership with the parents of such children, and also with the local health and social services. How, within these collaborative arrangements, parents or guardians are advised on entitlement to benefit is best decided locally by the parties concerned.

Market Testing

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to her answer of 12 December, Official Report, column 456, on market testing, what is the total value of the contracts awarded.

Mr. Boswell: The total value of the contracts concerned, two of which are still in the process of being finalised, is some £1,036,000 per annum.

Teaching Qualifications

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education for each main subject, what percentage of teachers, according to the 1993 secondary schools staffing survey, without a past A-level qualification in that subject, taught that subject in the survey week.

Mr. Boswell: The following table is derived from the 1992 secondary schools staffing survey and shows the percentage of full-time secondary teachers in England who gave some tuition in a subject in which they held no post-A level academic qualification, and the percentage of tuition this represented. About half of this tuition was by teachers with five or more years experience of teaching the subject.

The Government have, for a number of years, provided substantial support for programmes to enhance and update teachers' subject knowledge in support of the national curriculum.

Disabled Access

Mr. Kilfoyle: To asks the Secretary of State for Education what directions she has issued concerning the provision of disabled access within new school buildings.

Mr. Forth: The requirements for disabled access to new school buildings are currently set out in the Department's design note 18 "Access for Disabled People to Educational Buildings". As my hon. Friend the Minister for the Disabled announced on 24 November, Official Report, column 743, the Government intend to bring the requirements into line with the national standards specified in part M of the Building Regulations 1991. We shall be consulting on the necessary measures shortly.

Overseas Students

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will publish the responses to the consultation exercise engaged in by her Department regarding the proposal to amend the Education (Fees and Awards) Regulations 1983 to allow institutions to charge overseas students on part-time courses higher fees.

Mr. Boswell: In line with the code of practice on access to Government information, a summary of the responses to the consultation exercise will be provided in the new year following a decision on the proposal. Copies of individual responses will be made available in the public enquiry room of the Department, unless the respondent has specifically requested confidentiality.

City Technology Colleges

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will list for each city technology college the percentage of pupils entitled to receive free school meals.

Mr. Robin Squire: Using January 1994 data, the percentages are as follows:

	Percentage
Kingshurst	30
Djanogly	32
Macmillan	27
Emmanuel	11
Dixons	13
Leigh	12
Harris	23
BRITschool	22
Bacon's	31

Thomas Telford	14
Brooke Weston	12

John Cabot	19

Grant-maintained Schools

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what has been the total number and the percentage of parents (a) voting in favour of grant-maintained status, (b) voting against it and (c) not voting in parental ballots on grant-maintained status (i) from September 1988 to date and (ii) from September 1993 to date.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is as follows:

Period	Number and percentage of eligible parents Voting yes	Voting no	Not voting
1 September 1988–15 December 1994	558787 (41%)	324986 (24%)	493830 (36%)
1 September 1993–15 December 1994	70116 (34%)	63564 (31%)	73499 (35%)

because of rounding, the sum of percentages shown may not be 100 per cent.

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many complaints her Department has received about the admissions policies of grant-maintained schools; to which schools they relate; and, in each case, what action has been taken.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department receives a substantial number of inquiries, both in writing and by telephone, about school admissions. Sometimes concern is expressed about the particular admissions arrangements operated by a school or local education authority. The Department does not keep a central register of admissions inquiries, but it is comparatively rare to receive a specific complaint about the admissions policy of an individual GM school.

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education which grant-maintained secondary schools include as part of their admissions policy an interview with (a) pupils and (b) parents which forms a significant part in the allocation of places, other than church schools which do so solely to judge religious suitability and make this clear in their written policy.

Mr. Robin Squire: This information is not readily available. I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible in the new year.

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the total value of the formula allocation of capital grant to grant-maintained schools in each year since 1990.

Mr. Robin Squire: Capital formula allocations to grant-maintained schools in the years between 1990–91 and 1993–94 are set out in the table. Formula allocation 1994–95 is now the responsibility of the Funding Agency for Schools. I have asked the chairman of the agency to write to the hon. Member with this information.

Year	Allocation £ million
1990–91	0.7
1991–92	2.5
1992–93	6.4
1993–94	16.0

Universities (Business Links)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps she is taking to measure the number of joint projects between universities and (a) local authorities, (b) chambers of commerce and (c) training and enterprise councils.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend welcomes the growing number of such joint projects, of many diverse kinds. Their development is a matter for autonomous universities and their partners, and no information is collected centrally.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps he is taking to encourage university involvement in business links initiatives.

Mr. Boswell: Responsibility for developing links with business, of all kinds, rests with individual institutions. Many are conscious of the need to do so, and some are working with the local business links promoted by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade. Ministers take opportunities, by means of speeches or visits, to encourage universities to see the importance of developing links with business. Equally, we encourage the world of business to recognise the value of working with universities.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many train journeys of one hour's duration or more she has made in Britain in 1994 in the course of her official duties.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Whenever possible, I travel by train to official engagements. I have made eight journeys as defined by train since my appointment.

Student Loans and Grants

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the total predicted saving to the Treasury in 1995–96, based on the latest available record, from the phasing out of the means-tested allowance payable as part of the maintenance grant to students over 26 years who had previously been in employment.

Mr. Boswell: We estimate that the total saving in the 1995–96 financial year will be about £5 million. This reflects the maintenance of the allowance to existing students, and savings will increase substantially in subsequent years.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what is the new rate of loan to apply to students who are studying in London and living away from the parental home but who could conveniently live with their parents while studying;

(2) what is the total saving based on the latest available student numbers which would accrue in 1995–96 from the introduction of the new rate of loan to apply to students who are studying in London and living away from the parental home but who could conveniently live with their parents while studying; and what guidelines he has issued regarding the definition of convenient.

Mr. Boswell: The maximum rate of student loan for students who are studying in London and living away from the parental home but who could conveniently live with their parents will be £1,530 in the 1995–96 academic year. Resources available through full year loan and grant to these students will increase broadly in line with the general uprating for student support. It is for local education authorities to decide whether it is convenient for students to live with their parents. We do not collect data on the number of students affected by such decisions by their local education authorities.

Science Subjects

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list for each year since 1979 the numbers and percentages of (a) students attaining GCSE, or equivalent, in each science subject, (b) students attaining A levels in science subjects, (c) students studying science and technology to degree level and (d) graduates in science and technology by university.

Mr. Boswell: The table lists for England the numbers and percentages of (a) students attaining GCSE, or equivalent, in each science subject and (b) students attaining A-levels in science subjects for each year since 1979.

Information on the numbers of students each year studying, and graduating in, science—including technological—subjects at English former University Funding Council funded universities is contained in volume 1 of "Students and Staff" published by the "Universities Statistical Record", copies of which are in the House Library. Comparable information for institutions recently awarded university status is not available in published form and I will write to the hon. Member with the data.

Executive Search Agencies

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what use her Department has made of executive search agencies in filling vacancies within her Department and executive agencies administered by her Department during the last year; and how much these services have cost her Department.

Mr. Boswell: During the last year, no use has been made of executive search agencies in filling vacancies within the Department or the Teachers' Pensions Agency, which is the only executive agency administered by this Department.

Departmental Telephones Calls

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much has been spent on telephone charges; and how many telephone calls have been made by her Department in each of the last five years.

Mr. Forth: Departmental charges for telephony for years 1990–1994 were:

1990–91: £539,000
1991–92: £846,000
1992–93: £863,000
1993–94: £938,000

Figures are not available centrally for 1989–90 or for the number of telephone calls made in each year.

The sums include installation, rental and maintenance costs, as well as call charges, for the use of telecommunication links. Call charges currently amount to £350,000 a year.

EMPLOYMENT

Jobfinders Grants

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when his Department will publish the results from the evaluation of the jobfinders grant pilots that ran between February and July 1994.

Miss Widdecombe: The jobfinders grant pilots were extended to run until the end of December 1994. A report based on analysis of management information will be available in February 1995. Further information from a survey of participants and a follow-up study will be available in August 1995.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many train journeys of one hour's duration or more he has made in Britain in 1994 in the course of his official duties.

Miss Widdecombe: Whenever it is appropriate, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State travels by train to official engagements. We estimate that my right hon. Friend and his predecessor have made 25 train journeys of one hour's duration or more on official duties since January 1994.

Absenteeism

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the absenteeism rate for his Department in 1991, 1992 and 1993.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the absenteeism rate for the Employment Service in 1991, 1992 and 1993.

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. David Chidgey, dated 19 December 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the absenteeism rate in the Employment Service for the years 1991, 1992 and 1993.

Our central payroll records hold information on individual absence details for sickness absence, special leave without pay and maternity leave but not aggregated information on absenteeism.

I am therefore unable to provide this information which could only be obtained at a disproportionate cost.

I am sorry I cannot be more helpful.

Employment Service

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many casual staff have been made redundant from Employment Service offices in each region and at each office in the past year.

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Jim Dowd, dated 19 December 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about how many casual staff have been made redundant from the Employment Service in the past year, by both Region and local office.

The Employment Service (ES) has always employed a proportion of casual staff to enable it to manage staffing levels as unemployment rises and falls. At a time when unemployment is falling, termination of casual contracts is the obvious, sensible step to take and in fact avoids any necessity for redundancies among permanent staff.

Casual staff in the ES have contracts which are renewable up to a maximum of 51 weeks (103 weeks in exceptional circumstances). Under the terms of the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978, only an employee who has a minimum two years continuous service can be regarded as redundant. The number of casual employees who have been made redundant by the ES during the past year therefore is nil.

However, in line with the fall in unemployment, the ES has recently reduced the number of casual appointments, with the number of contracts terminated in the 12 months ending 30 November being 7,300. The majority (7,142) were of Administrative Assistant and Administrative Officer level.

Breakdown of this figure by Regional and Head Office locations is as follows, although details of contracts terminated by individual offices are, unfortunately, not available.

Regional/head office location	Contracts terminated
Office for Scotland	564
Northern Region	353
North West Region	1,050
Yorkshire and Humberside Region	465
Office for Wales	291
West Midlands Region	930
East Midlands Region	520
South West Region	416
London and South East Region	2,578
London Head Office	3
Sheffield Head Office	130
Total	7,300

I hope this is helpful.

Departmental Budgets

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was his Department's projected budget for this financial year and for each quarter.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department's projected budget for this financial year is £3,770 million. This information is set out in table 1 of the Employment Department group's departmental report 1994, Cm 2505. The Department does not produce quarterly budgets.

Staff Statistics

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many staff have been drafted into the London region on detached duty for each month of this year.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many staff drafted into the London region on detached duty have had to stay overnight.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is not available.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what were the proportions of full-time employees earning less per week than (a) £221.50, (b) £208.53, (c) £156.40, (d) £150.80, (e) £131.95, (f) £113.10 and (g) £94.25, excluding overtime payments, and part-time employees earning less per hour than (i) £5.88, (ii) £5.53, (iii) £4.15, (iv) £4.00, (v) £3.50, (vi) £3.00 and (vii) £2.50, excluding overtime payments, in April 1994 in (1) Great Britain as a whole, (2) each county in England, (3) each county in Wales, (4) each London borough and Greater London as a whole and (5) each regional authority and borough in Scotland;

(2) what was the number of adult (a) male and (b) female part-time workers in Great Britain in April 1994, and the proportion of (a) and (b) whose earnings, excluding overtime, fell below (i) £5.88 per hour, (ii) £5.53 per hour, (iii) £4.15 per hour, (iv) £4.00 per hour, (v) £3.50 per hour, (vi) £3.00 per hour, and (vii) £2.50 per hour;

(3) if he will give the proportions of (a) manual, (b) non-manual and (c) all full-time employees (i) male, (ii) female and (iii) all, earning less per week than (1) £221.50, (2) £208.53, (3) £156.40, (4) £150.80, (5) £131.95 and (6) £94.25 in April 1994, excluding overtime payments, by standard economic region, for Great Britain as a whole, and for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Oppenheim: As the information is contained in a number of tables, I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy in the Library.

Fraud

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the measures available to the Employment Service in respect of people it suspects of fraud on unemployment benefit.

Miss Widdecombe: Employment Service inspectors have been vested with inspection powers since the Social Security Act 1975, section 144, and more recently under section 110 of the Social Security Administration Act 1992, which empowers them to examine employers' records at any reasonable time. In England and Wales, they must also operate within the guidelines of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984. In Scotland, inspectors operate within common law and apply the rules of fairness.

Fraudulent benefit claimants may be prosecuted under the following legislation:

Social Security Administration Act 1992

112. (1) If a person for the purpose of obtaining any benefit or other payment under the legislation to which section 110 above applies' whether for himself or some other person, or for any other purpose connected with that legislation:

> (a) makes a statement or representation which he knows to be false;
> (b) produces or furnishes, or knowingly causes or knowingly allows to be produced or furnished, any document or information which he knows to be false in a material particular,

he shall be guilty of an offence.

(2) A person found guilty of an offence under subsection (1) above shall be liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 5 on the standard scale (maximum £5,000), or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 3 months, or both.

> (a) the Social Security Act 1973;
> (b) the Contributions and Benefits Act;
> (c) this Act;
> (d) the Pensions Act;
> (e) Part 1 of the 1986 Act.

Theft Act 1968

A person who by any deception dishonestly obtains property—belonging to another with the intention of permanently depriving the other of it, shall on conviction on indictment be liable to:

> Summary conviction—A fine not exceeding £5,000 and/or imprisonment not exceeding 6 months.
> Indictable conviction—A statutory limitless fine and/or imprisonment not exceeding 10 years.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) hold open meetings, (b) conduct public consultation exercises, (c) conduct consultation exercises with outside commercial interests, (d) publish a register of members' interests, (e) publish agendas for meetings and (f) publish the minutes of meetings; and whether this is in each case (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntary.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 16 December 1994]: The Department sponsors the following advisory non-departmental public bodies:

> The National Advisory Council on Employment of People with Disabilities;
> Committees for the Employment of People with Disabilities (sixty local committees);
> Supported Employment Consultative Group;
> Race Relations Advisory Group.

None of these hold their meetings in public, or make minutes or agendas public, carry out public consultation or have a register of members' interests. They are bodies set up by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to advise him and the Department on particular matters.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Hostels

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what standards are required at private hostels provided by his Department.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The Department of Social Security does not provide any private hostels.

State Pension

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion annually, by percentage, of gross domestic product is spent by the United Kingdom on payment of state pensions.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The information for Great Britain is in the table.

For information on Northern Ireland, I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Percentage of gross domestic product spent by Great Britain on payment of state pensions

Year	Per cent.
1992–93	4
1993–94	4
1994–95	4
1995–96	4

1. The data source is the 1994 Departmental Report and the Financial Statement and Budget Report 1995–96.

2. 1992–93 is the latest year for which the outturn figures for expenditure for State pensions are available, therefore the percentage figures from 1993–94 to 1995–96 are estimates.

Income Support

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will estimate the effect on the number of claimants of mortgage interest assistance with income support (a) from April to October 1995 and (b) from October 1995 to April 1996, of the decisions to (i) reduce the cap for income support mortgage interest payments to £100,000 and (ii) to pay income support for mortgage interest only after the first nine months on benefit; and what will be the savings in benefit expenditure which result from each of these measures;

(2) what savings he estimates will result from the proposed reduction of the cap on mortgages for mortgage interest payment purposes in a full financial year.

Mr. Roger Evans: The effect on the number of claimants of mortgage interest assistance with income support, from April to October 1995, of the decision to reduce the cap for new income support mortgage interest payments to £100,000 will negligible. The estimated savings for the period April to October 1995 is around £1 million, and for October to April 1996 a further £1 million. These estimates are based on the 1993 annual statistical inquiry, uprated to 1995–96 levels.

The new arrangements to pay income support mortgage interest only after the first nine months on benefit will not come into operation until 1 October 1995 and will be subject to wide consultation. The financial effect will depend on the outcome of the consultation and the final detail of the scheme.

National Insurance

Mr. Hawksley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many national insurance numbers are currently on issue in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Arbuthnot: There are approximately 64.2 million national insurance numbers currently in issue in the United Kingdom. This is the total number of national insurance numbers issued to date, and, as such includes numbers issued to persons now deceased.

Mortgage Interest Payments

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what savings have resulted in each of the last three years from the introduction of a period of reduced mortgage interest payments.

Mr. Roger Evans: The information requested is set out in the table. Savings are estimated to be the annual cost of paying half mortgage interest payments, based on average weekly expenditure from the May 1991, May 1992 and May 1993 annual statistical inquiry.

Year	Estimated annual savings from reduced mortgage interest payments £ million
1991	135
1992	100
1993	65

Incomes

Sir David Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the net spending power figures for (a) a single-wage couple with two children aged four and six, and (b) a lone mother with two children aged four and six, each working full time, for 30 hours a week or more, earning £100, £110, £120, £130, £140, £150, £160, £170, £180, £190, £200, £210, £220, £230, £240, £250, £260, £270, £280, £290 and £300 a week assuming child care costs for the lone mother of £70 a week and taking into account the £40 child care allowance introduced last October and also assuming that the £10 a week family credit premium for full-time workers announced in the Budget was already in place.

Mr. Burt: The information is in the table:

Net spending power after payment of rent, council tax and childcare charges

	Spending power (£ net)
Earnings level (£ gross)	Lone parent with two children aged 4 and 6	One-earner couple with two children aged 4 and 6
100	106.66	139.14
110	107.71	139.46
120	108.76	139.77

210	114.91	148.06
220	116.86	150.01
230	118.81	151.96

270	126.61	177.15
280	128.56	183.65
290	130.51	190.15
300	135.50	196.65

Notes:

1. Each family type is assumed to pay estimated average local authority rent and council tax for 1994–95.

2. Families are assumed to be receiving any Family Credit, Housing Benefit, Council Tax Benefit and Child Benefit to which they are entitled. The lone parent families are also assumed to be in receipt of One Parent Benefit.

Departmental Telephone Calls

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much has been spent on telephone charges and how many telephone calls have been made by his Department for each of the last five years.

Mr. Hague: Departmental telephony charges for years 1989–94 are:

1989–90: £29,738,061.83
1990–91: £36,195,446.12
1991–92: £36,762,993.82
1992–93: £52,665,961.71
1993–94: £61,699,223.12

Details of the number of calls made per year are not held.

VAT (Fuel)

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what special notice will be included in pensioners' order books explaining the compensation arrangements for the first stage of VAT on fuel at eight per cent. following the decision not to proceed with the second stage of VAT on fuel to 17.5 per cent.

Mr. Arbuthnot: Help with 8 per cent. VAT on domestic fuel has been included in order books since April this year; introducing explanations now would be inappropriate. In addition, there is little evidence that there is any need for them.

The uprating in April 1995 will be higher as a result of the 8 per cent. levy feeding through in the retail prices index and Rossi. However, with a further tranche of help now unnecessary, there will be no additional increases above normal uprating. A special explanation next year would therefore also be inappropriate.

Executive Search Agencies

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what use his Department has made of executive search agencies in filling vacancies within his Department and executive agencies administered by his Department during the last year; and how much these services have cost his Department.

Mr. Hague: Such agencies have been used on three occasions in the last year. The total cost was £75,100.

Habitual Residence Test

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many British citizens have failed the habitual residence test since the introduction of the regulations designed to clamp down on European benefit tourism; and what information he has on their ethnic origins.

Mr. Roger Evans: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Ms Jackson) on 5 December, Official Report, column 10. Information on the ethnic origin of claimants is not collected.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many train journeys of one hour's duration or more he has made in Britain in 1994 in the course of his official duties.

Mr. Lilley: Three return journeys and one single.

Severe Disability Premium

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps the Benefits Agency intends to take to review income support claims to establish whether the severe disability premium is payable.

Mr. Roger Evans: I have asked the Benefits Agency to check all live claims where potential entitlement to the severe disability premium has not previously been considered. We are taking steps to establish whether similar action is needed in claims where income support is no longer in payment. This will be a large and complex task, which will not be completed until well into next year.

Pensions

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the names and addresses of the persons and organisations from whom he invited comments on each of the discussion papers relating to the future of pensions issued since June 1994; if he will place in the Library copies of the responses received which did not include a request that they be kept confidential; and if he will list the other organisations from whom he has received representations since June 1994 on the Government's proposals for legislation on pensions.

Mr. Arbuthnot: This Department has issued four consultation papers since June 1994: "The Selection and Appointment of Member-nominated Trustees", "The Structure of the Levies", "A Requisite Benefits Test" and "Age Related Rebates for Contracted Out Money Purchase Occupational Pension Schemes". I shall shortly place in the Library a list of the persons and organisations to whom copies were sent, together with copies of their responses, except where these included a request that they be kept confidential.

We have received a large number of comments and representations on the Government's proposals for legislation on pensions. A list of the organisations concerned could be compiled only at disproportionate cost.

Disabled People (Rights)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to ensure by legislation that disabled people have the same civil rights as non-disabled people.

Mr. Hague: Our policy is to combine legislation with education and persuasion to produce positive and lasting results in tackling discrimination against disabled people.

I announced a comprehensive package of anti-discrimination measures on 24 November, which outlined the Government's plans to introduce legislation in the areas of employment, access to goods and services and the establishment of a national disability council and other initiatives in the areas of transport and education to give disabled people greater independence. Our goal is the elimination of discrimination against disabled people.

The first phase of a publicity campaign aimed at raising awareness amongst the general public was launched in early December.

Information Technology Services Agency

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list those organisations which have submitted a bid to take over the day-to-day running of the information technology operations and support services of the Information Technology Services Agency.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The following companies have each submitted proposals

Electronic Data Systems Ltd
Hoskyns Group plc
ICL plc and ICL plc/De La Rue plc as a consortium
Integrated Systems Solutions Company Ltd
SEMA Group plc
Siemens Nixdorf Information Systems Ltd

Income Support

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to address the needs of parents on income support who are having difficulty supporting their student sons and daughters in further education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Roger Evans: Parents in receipt of income support or other social security benefits are entitled to child benefit and a dependency addition for any dependent child aged under 19 who is in full-time non-advanced education.

We believe that young people remaining at school after their 19th birthday to complete their studies, and their families, should turn for any necessary additional financial assistance to the sources of funding available through the educational maintenance system.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in how many cases income support payments by his Department were discontinued within nine months of payment commencing; and what percentage that represented of the total number of claimants in the latest period for which figures are available.

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is not available in the form requested. The income support statistical inquiries collect information only on the stock of people actually in receipt of benefit on a single day each quarter.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to alter the claims and payments regulations for income support in order to amend preserved rights to income support and end the consequent two-tier system in sheltered housing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Roger Evans: The reference to sheltered housing is inferred to mean persons living in residential care and nursing homes.

Preserved rights to income support at the higher levels are available to most people living in residential care and nursing homes on 31 March 1993. Preserved rights were introduced to provide reassurance to vulnerable people that the introduction of community care would not affect their eligibility for the higher levels of income support and to assist in the smooth changeover to the new community care arrangements. Preserved rights are lost only if the resident is absent from residential care for a specific length of time, depending on the circumstances. We have no plans to change these arrangements.

Social Fund

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in the last year for which figures are available applied for (a) grants and (b) loans from the social fund in respect of expenses incurred in visiting sick children in hospital.

Mr. Roger Evans: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Figures on the number of social fund awards for travelling expenses for the current financial year to 30 November 1994 are set out in the table.

Award types	Number[1]
Grants	51,056
Loans	10,324

[1] The reason for travel cannot be identified.

Fraud

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many people are employed by his Department to deal with fraud in relation to people who are falsely claiming to be unemployed;

(2) what is his estimate of the cost to his Department of organised fraud relating to benefits for the unemployed;

(3) if he will make a statement on benefit fraud among people who are claiming benefits as unemployed and failing to declare income from (a) casual work and (b) full-time work;

(4) what is his estimate of the number of people who are claiming benefits on the basis of being unemployed despite being in full-time work;

(5) what was the estimated cost of fraud in benefits for the unemployed in each year since 1978–79 (a) in total and (b) for each specific category of benefit;

(6) what is his estimate of the number of people claiming benefits as unemployed, who are failing to declare income from (a) casual work and (b) full-time work.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The number of claimants receiving benefit as unemployed while failing to declare income from work, and the costs of these frauds, are not known.

We have estimated that 60 per cent. of all fraud involves misrepresentation of a claimant's financial circumstances. This includes, for example, income from investments and savings as well as undeclared income from employment.

The Benefits Agency employs over 3,000 staff, combating fraud of all types, whether committed by an individual or by organised teams. Last year—1993–94—312,000 irregularities were identified and a record £654 million of fraud was detected.

My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Social Security announced recently the investment of £300 million, over the next three years, in measures to prevent and deter fraud, and to improve further the effectiveness of investigations.

Benefits Statistics

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish figures showing, for each year since 1987 (a) the total amount of cash losses due to irrecoverable payments of pensions, etc., income support and family benefits recorded during the year, (b) the total amount of errors in benefit payments recorded and (c) total savings for the year from anti-fraud initiatives.

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of benefits is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Donald Dewar, dated 16 December 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking about irrecoverable overpayments of benefits, recorded benefit payment errors and benefit savings obtained from fraud initiatives.

Decisions about whether an overpayment of benefit has occurred, how much has been overpaid, whether it is recoverable and from whom it should be recovered are made by the independent adjudicating authorities. However, an officer acting on behalf of the Secretary of State may subsequently decide not to pursue recovery.

Complete information concerning the amount and number of irrecoverable overpayments is not available. I have provided the details which are available at Appendix A, B, C and D. These give the total benefit losses and do not differentiate between irrecoverable and unrecovered losses. The data provided was used to compile the Benefits Agency's (BA) annual accounts for the years 1987–92; figures for 1993–94 are not included because the National Insurance Fund Annual Account has neither been audited by the National Audit Office, nor signed by the Accounting Officer.

Records and data on Retirement Pension and Widows Benefit for the year 1987–88 are no longer available. In addition, the data on losses by category for Income Support and Family Benefits for the period 1987–92 are no longer available as they have been routinely destroyed.

A statistically valid sample of payments is selected for accuracy checking and I have provided at Appendix E the percentage accuracy and error rates as requested. These figures are taken from the BA's Management Information Statistics. They do not tally directly with National Audit Office figures because they are derived from different forms of check.

The DSS/BA Fraud estimated benefit savings are set out at Appendix F. All the Appendices have been placed in the Library.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Habitual Residence Test

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if it is intended that the habitual residence test should be applied by local Benefits Agency officers to those applying for asylum in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Roger Evans [holding answer 5 December 1994]: The application of the test to asylum seekers was unforeseen but has no practical effect on their benefit entitlement. We will correct the position at the earliest opportunity.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will indicate the additional cost to his budget if the European Court of Justice upholds the Social Security Commissioner's decision of 1 April 1992 on the payment of invalidity benefit to women on their reaching pension age.

Mr. Hague [holding answer 7 December 1994]: The estimated additional cost is £210 million in 1995–96.

Note:

1. Figure expressed at 1994–95 prices, rounded to the nearest £5 million, and taking account of income related benefit costs and the introduction of incapacity benefit from April 1995.

Child Dependency Additions

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost, in a full year, of full uprating of child dependency additions of all categories using their year of introduction as a base.

Mr. Roger Evans [pursuant to his reply, 12 December 1994, c. 542]: I regret that the notes accompanying the reply contained a typographical error. A further copy of the reply and a revised set of notes follows:

The estimated net cost would be £90 million in 1994–95.

1. The estimate has been calculated by:
    (i) taking the child dependency increase (CDI) rate for the eldest child payable in 1948—the year of introduction—then
    (ii) inflating that figure to take account of upratings from 1948 up to and including April 1994. The percentage rate of increase used is the same as that of personal Retirement Pension; then
    (iii) deducting the rates of Child Benefit payable from April 1994 to arrive at the rates that would apply for both the eldest child and subsequent children; then
    (iv) following conversion to an annual gross figure, applying an offsetting reduction on expenditure on income-related benefits.
2. The estimate excludes the cost of restoring Sickness Benefit, Maternity Allowance and Unemployment Benefit CDIs, which were discontinued with effect from November 1984.
3. The estimate has been rounded to the nearest £5 million and should be treated with caution owing to small sample sizes.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, if he will make it his policy to ensure that housing authorities should not pay housing benefit until they are satisfied that the property is fit for human habitation.

Mr. Roger Evans: Local authorities already have considerable powers to ensure that dwellings meet standards of fitness for human habitation. Housing benefit is available to help people who have a legal liability to pay rent for their accommodation.

TREASURY

Special Advisers

Mr. Vaz : To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) of 1 December, Official Report, column 803, if he will make a statement regarding his Department's expenditure on special advisers in each of the last three financial years and for the financial year 1979–80.

Mr. Aitken: Salaries for special advisers are negotiated individually in relation to their previous earnings and are confidential. The total pay bill[1] for all the Government's special advisers in November 1994 was £1.29 million at 1994–95 prices[2]. The figures for the other years requested—in 1994–95 prices[2]—are as follows:

As at	Paybill[1] £ million
June 1993	1.40
September 1992	1.36
September 1991	1.2
May 1979	0.53

[1] These figures have been calculated by annualising the salaries in payment at the dates shown. They do not include earnings related national insurance contributions and other personnel overheads.

[2] Calculated using the gross domestic product deflator.

Banking Ombudsman

Mr. Tracey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will review the terms of reference of the banking ombudsman in dealing with complaints by non-customer third parties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: The office of the banking ombudsman is not a statutory one. The ombudsman is appointed not by the Government, but by an independent council which is responsible for his terms of reference.

Child Benefit

Mr. Wicks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate by how much child benefit would rise if the savings from the abolition of the married couples allowance and additional personal allowance were added to child benefit.

Sir George Young: Married couples allowances and the additional personal allowance have not been abolished. If these allowances were abolished in 1995–96 and the savings added to child benefit, the child benefit rate could be increased by £6.30. This assumes no compensating increases in the income support and family credit child allowances.

Gross Domestic Product

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was (a) gross domestic product per head of population in pounds sterling at constant prices and (b) column (a) expressed as a percentage of the United Kingdom average in (i) Wales, (ii) south-east England, (iii) the United Kingdom and (iv) each of the member states of the OECD, for the last three years for which comparable figures are available.

Mr. Nelson: Constant price GDP per head in the United Kingdom is published in table 2.4 of "Economic Trends" and the Central Statistical Office databank, which can be accessed through the Library. Constant price GDP per head is not available for the regions of the United Kingdom nor is comparative data for the member states of the OECD.

Herr Walter Laup

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the involvement of the United Kingdom Government or its agencies in supplying evidence or statements in the trial of Herr Walter Laup, a former employee of British Aerospace, in Germany.

Mr. Heathcoate-Amory: Customs provided evidence in the form of a statement to German Customs for use in the trial of Herr Walter Laup, a director of Hechler and Koch, Obendorf, Germany, but the German authorities did not use this evidence during the trial.

Manufacturing

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will show, for manufacturing for each year since 1970, the net operating surplus as a percentage of net average capital employed based on historic costs.

Mr. Nelson: Estimates for net average capital employed by manufacturing companies are not readily available on a historic cost basis. The equivalent series calculated on a current cost basis is published in CSO "First Release" 94(205)—Profitability of United Kingdom companies: rates of return of United Kingdom industrial and commercial companies". Data are available between 1970 and 1991 on a historic cost basis, but these are based on the old definition of manufacturing and do not include any revised information since they were last calculated in September 1992.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what non-oil export and import prices his calculation in paragraph 3.51 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" of a 2 per cent. fall in terms of trade was based; and if he will list comparable figures for manufactures, finished manufactures and semi-manufactures, together with the increase in the terms of trade for finished manufactures since the second half of 1973, the fourth quarter of 1976, the second quarter of 1979 and the fourth quarter of 1986.

Mr. Nelson: The figures for trade prices quoted in paragraph 3.51 of the FSBR are based on average value indices. Comparable figures for manufactures, semi-manufactures and finished manufactures can be calculated from the value and volume numbers available on the CSO database, which can be accessed through the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will break down his 1993 figures and forecasts in paragraph 3.51 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" for EEC and non-EEC countries showing (a) the increase in non-oil import and export prices and corresponding change in the terms of trade, (b) comparable figures for semi-manufactures, finished manufactures and manufactures and (c) figures on the same basis as (a) and (b) for the second half of 1973, the fourth quarter of 1976, the second quarter of 1979 and the fourth quarter of 1986.

Mr. Nelson: Average value indices by commodity are available separately for trade with other EC countries and non-EC countries from 1988. These can be calculated from the value and volume figures available on the CSO database, which can be accessed through the House of Commons Library. Forecasts are not made separately for trade with other EC countries and non-EC countries.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the level of volume for imports and exports in respect of (a) manufactures, (b) finished manufactures and (c) semi-manufactures with (i) the EEC and (ii) other countries for (1) the last three months for which figures are available and (2) the equivalent months in 1992; and what is his assessment of the growth of the market for imports in those markets.

Mr. Nelson: Figures for export and import volumes by commodity for trade with other EC countries and with non-EC countries are available from the Central Statistical Office database, which can be accessed through the House of Commons Library. The Government's assessment of trade performance, published in chapter 3 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report", took into account all relevant factors, including market growth.

Prices

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the weighted average increase in the price of goods in the retail price of non-food goods since August 1992; and how much of the increase has been due to the fall in the exchange rate.

Mr. Nelson: The information requested is not available as there is no single definition of goods in the retail prices index.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he made in December 1992 of the effect of the fall in the exchange rate on retail prices after (a) one and (b) two years.

Mr. Nelson: The Government published an assessment of economic prospects, including the outlook for retail prices, in the November 1992 Autumn Statement. The depreciation of sterling that followed the suspension of the United Kingdom's membership of the exchange rate mechanism was one of the many factors taken into account in this forecast.

Sterling (Velocity of Circulation)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will lift the annual increase in velocity of circulation of sterling M4 between 1986 and 1991 and since 1991 together with his estimate of the effect on output and employment (i) in the whole economy and (ii) in manufacturing;

(2) what was the change in velocity of circulation of sterling M0 at an annual rate between 1986 and 1989 and since 1989; and what is his estimate of the effect on output and employment (a) in the whole economy and (b) in manufacturing.

Mr. Nelson: Data on the velocity of circulation of M0 and M4 is published in "Financial Statistics", table 3.1B. Data on output and employment are published in "Economic Trends", tables 2, 15 and 21. If shifts in velocity reflect changes in willingness to hold money, it is not clear that they would have any implications for output and employment.

Exchange Rates

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the present level of the exchange rate; and what is his assessment of its effects on competitiveness.

Mr. Nelson: Movements in the exchange rate are considered as part of the general assessment of monetary conditions in setting monetary policy. The Government recognise the value of a stable exchange rate but do not set target rates. The United Kingdom is very competitive, as demonstrated by our strong export performance; in the third quarter of 1994 export volumes—excluding oil and erratics—were up 14 per cent. on a year earlier.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what criteria are used by the Government in assessing whether the exchange rate is correctly valued.

Mr. Nelson: The Government do not have a target rate for sterling. Movements in the exchange rate are considered as part of the general assessment of monetary conditions in setting monetary policy.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the change in the exchange rate of (a) pound sterling and (b) the lira against the ecu and non-ecu currencies since August 1992; and what has been the change in (i) the United Kingdom non-oil balance of trade and (ii) the Italian visible balance of trade in the first half of the current year with the EEC and non-EEC countries.

Mr. Nelson: Exchange rate data can be found in the CSO publication "Financial Statistics".

The United Kingdom's non-oil trade deficit with other EU member states widened by some £300 million in the first half of 1994 compared to the same period a year before; while the trade deficit with countries outside the EU narrowed by £600 million over this period. However, the improvement in the third quarter of 1994 has been marked: the deficit with other EU countries narrowed by around £500 million, compared with the second quarter of 1994; and the deficit with non-EU countries narrowed by some £600 million. Italy's visible trade surplus with other EU countries was largely unchanged between the first halves of 1993 and 1994, but increased by £2.5 billion on trade with non-EU members.

Executive Search Agencies

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what use his Department has made of executive search agencies in filling vacancies within his Department and executive agencies administered by his Department during the last year; and how much these services have cost his Department.

Mr. Nelson: Her Majesty's Treasury has not made use of executive search agencies during the last 12 months.

Departmental Telephone Calls

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much has been spent on telephone charges and how many telephone calls have been made by his Department for each of the last five years.

Mr. Nelson: Departmental telephone charges within the Treasury for the past five years are:

1989–90: £798,243
1990–91: £740,185
1991–92: £721,751
1992–93: £628,599
1993–94: £662,310

Details of the number of calls made per year are not held centrally.

Italian Imports and Exports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the change since 1992 in the dollar value of Italian imports and exports of goods expressed as a percentage difference from the United Kingdom figures to the United Kingdom for the latest three months for which like figures are available; and what has been the corresponding change in the exchange rate against the ecu, the deutschmark and the dollar respectively.

Mr. Nelson: United Kingdom exports to Italy, expressed as a proportion of Italian exports to the United Kingdom, have risen by around 6 percentage points, from 1992Q3 to 1994Q3. Over the same period sterling has depreciated by some 9.5 per cent. against the ecu, 15.5 per cent. against the deutschmark, and 19.5 per cent. against the United States dollar.

Interest Rates

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the Government's assessment of the economic role of interest rates.

Mr. Nelson: It is the role of monetary policy to deliver low inflation. As monetary policy influences inflation with a lag, interest rate decisions are based on an assessment of the prospects for underlying inflation in one to two years' time.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer to what extent he expects the rises in interest rates in the current year will benefit the economy.

Mr. Nelson: My right hon. Friend's decisions this year to increase interest rates will help to ensure that inflation is kept under control and the current healthy recovery is sustained.

EU Membership

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, if he will publish his recent assessment of the advantages and inconveniences of EU membership.

Mr. Nelson: No. I have nothing to add to the replies I gave to the hon. Member on 17 March, Official Report, column 822, and on the 30 June, Official Report, column 680, the reply my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister gave on 18 May, Official Report, column 470, the reply my hon. Friend the Paymaster General gave on 25 November, Official Report, column 468, and the reply my right hon. Friend the Member for Eddisbury (Mr. Goodlad), the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs gave on 29 November, Official Report, column 583.

Tobacco and Alcohol

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect of the abolition of frontier checks on the recording of imports of (a) alcoholic drinks and (b) tobacco in (i) 1993 and (ii) this year to date.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Since the abolition of frontier checks for the import of goods from European Community countries on 1 January 1993, import statistics on alcoholic drinks and tobacco have been captured through the Intrastat system. In December 1993 Her Majesty's Customs and Excise and the Central Statistical Office commenced a joint review of the Intrastat system and the results were published in the August edition of "Economic Trends". This showed that the system was generally functioning well. The system for recording imports of these goods from outside the EC has not changed.

Energy-Saving Products (VAT)

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations have been made to him regarding VAT rates on energy-saving products.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Treasury Ministers and Customs and Excise receive representations about the VAT treatment of a wide variety of goods and services. No record of the number of such representations specifically in respect of energy-saving products is available, but they are relatively few and infrequent.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost to the Treasury of reducing VAT on energy-saving products to 8 per cent.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The information on which such an estimate of revenue effect would be based is not available.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect on the national economy of delaying the Nirex repository project for nuclear waste for 50 years.

Mr. Aitken: As part of the review of radioactive waste management policy, the Government carried out an assessment of whether there is an economic case for delaying developing of the deep repository for radioactive waste being undertaken by UK Nirex Ltd. The results of this assessment are set out in the consultation document "Review of Radioactive Waste Management Policy Preliminary Conclusions" published by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment on 5 August. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

Living Standards

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures he has used to define the standard of living.

Mr. Nelson: A wide range of statistics illustrating aspects of the standard of living are published in "Social Trends", including household disposable income, real take-home pay, GDP per head, housing standards and access to consumer durables.

Central Bank

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the benefits to the United Kingdom of the existence of a central bank.

Mr. Nelson: The Treasury and Civil Service Select Committee—first report, Session 1993–94—reported recently on the role of the Bank of England. The Government's response to the report was published on 13 April 1994.

Mortgage Tax Relief

Mr. Burden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the reduction in income to the Exchequer, to date, from the changes in the 1993 Budget which extended mortgage tax relief to loans taken from non-British lenders.

Sir George Young [holding answer 16 December 1994]: Negligible to date, since the first tax year to which this provision applies is the current year. No estimate can be made of the longer-term cost. But it is likely to be slight: the main effect of the change is on non-residents buying United Kingdom property for letting rather than on mortgage tax relief for owner-occupiers. In the latter case, relief on loans by non-United Kingdom lenders would already, in general, have been available under pre-existing law.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the reduction in income to the Exchequer from the changes in the Budget which allow people with a mortgage on an overseas property rented out all year to offset, against income tax, the interest paid on the loan.

Sir George Young [holding answer 16 December 1994]: This measure, to bring the treatment of income from the letting of properties overseas more into line with that of letting United Kingdom properties, is likely to have a negligible effect on Exchequer receipts.

Taxation

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update his answer to the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms Harman) of 19 January 1994, Official Report, column 635—42, take account of changes he is making in the Budget, and to provide latest estimates of the burden of direct and indirect taxes for 1993–94, 1994–95, 1995–96 and 1996–97, including figures for the effect of the council tax.

Sir George Young: Real household disposable income per head has risen by nearly a half since 1979. Tax increases taking effect over the next year will cost all households on average about £2.30 a week. The impact on pensioners should be, on average, neutral. After taking account of these tax changes, real personal disposable income is still expected to rise by 1.5 per cent. next year. This should mean that households will on average be about £5 a week better off after tax and inflation.

The tables show revised estimates of tax payments in 1993–94, 1994–95 and 1995–96. These figures relate to hypothetical households assumed to have particular characteristics and do not represent the effect of the tax system on the population as a whole. For example, less than 1 per cent. of households are one-earner couples with two children and income close to male average earnings.

Changes in the figures shown in the tables for different years mainly reflect assumed growth in average earnings and should not be taken as the impact of Budget measures. Real take-home pay at average earnings for all the family types in the table is now 40 per cent. higher—over £80 a week—than in 1978–79.

Tax payments in 1994–95 and 1995–96 are based on illustrative assumptions for growth in earnings and take account of revised Budget measures. Tax payments in 1996–97 will depend on decisions in the November 1995 Budget and on what happens to earnings and prices. Estimates of council tax payments in 1993–94 will not be available until analysis of the 1993 family expenditure survey is complete.

[1] Figures for indirect taxes are only shown for a narrow earnings range because the margin of error outside this range is too high to produce even illustrative estimates using the methods outlined in notes 4-6 below. Spending patterns vary widely between households with the same income and composition and all figures shown for indirect taxes are very approximate.

[1] Figures for indirect taxes are only shown for a narrow earnings range because the margin of error outside this is too high to produce even illustrative estimates using the methods outlined in notes 4-6 below. Spending patterns vary widely between households with the same income and composition and all figures shown for indirect taxes are very approximate.

Notes:

(1) Income tax payments are calculated on the assumption that the households receive no tax reliefs other than the standard allowances and only have income from employment. All earners, including wives, are assumed to pay Class 1 NI contribution at the contracted-in rate. Child benefit is treated as a negative income tax in order to provide comparability with support given through child tax allowances.

(2) Earnings are taken to be the average gross weekly earnings of all full-time males on adult rates with pay unaffected by absence. Estimates of earnings in 1994–95 and 1995–96 are based on earnings growth assumptions of 3½ per cent. in 1994–95 and 4½ per cent. in 1995–96.

(3) Figures for indirect taxes include estimates of the intermediate taxes on households as well as the impact of taxes on final goods and services. Estimates of the impact of taxes on final goods and services assume that these taxes are fully incident on households. Estimates of the impact of intermediate taxes are based on the relation between intermediate production costs and final consumption derived using input-output techniques.

(4) Estimates for most indirect taxes are based on equations derived from the 1985 Family Expenditure Survey uprated to later years using forecasts of aggregate tax receipts. Estimates of VAT on domestic fuel and power, Airline Passenger Duty and Insurance Premium Tax are based on equations using results from the 1991 and 1992 Family Expenditure Survey uprated using a similar methodology. All estimates are based on the illustrative assumption that 10 per cent. of disposable income is saved.

(5) These figures do not include estimates of council tax payments. Estimates of council tax burdens in 1993–94 will not be available until analysis of the 1993 Family Expenditure Survey is complete.

(6) Estimates of indirect taxes are very approximate, even within the range for which figures are shown, because spending patterns vary widely between households with the same composition and income. The margin of error is even higher outside the range shown, and even illustrative estimates cannot be made. Because of sampling variation, there can be substantial differences between estimates obtained from Family Expenditure Surveys for different years.

SCOTLAND

Flow Country

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment his Department has made of the effect on carbon release from peat bogs of continued afforestation in the flow country of northern Scotland.

Sir Hector Monro: Research undertaken by the Forestry Commission indicates that afforestation of areas of deep peat may lead to the net release of up to 2.5 tonnes of carbon per hectare per year.

Inner City Regeneration

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to increase funding for inner city regeneration projects in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Inner city and other urban regeneration projects are supported by a wide range of public expenditure programmes, including the urban programme and those relating to local authorities, the enterprise bodies and Scottish Homes, and my right hon. Friend announced his expenditure plans for these and other programmes on 6 December. We plan to announce shortly the outcome of the review of urban regeneration policy in Scotland, which was launched last year with the publication of the consultation paper, "Progress in Partnership".

Salmon Roe

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the potential trade in salmon roe and the legal constraints upon it.

Sir Hector Monro: Sales of all salmon roe are prohibited by the terms of section 18 of the Salmon Fisheries (Scotland) Act 1868, which is a conservation measure for wild salmon to discourage interference with gravid fish or spawning redds. My Department is currently considering whether it would be possible to relax this prohibition and permit trade in farmed salmon roe without reducing the protection afforded to wild salmon stock. There is a market for salmon roe both at home and abroad.

Hospital Closures

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many hospitals have closed since April 1991.

Lord James Douglas Hamilton: Thirty-four hospitals have closed in Scotland since April 1991.

Since that time, however, the number of patients treated in hospital has increased by 14.1 per cent.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland for how many accident and emergency departments there are currently proposals for closure.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Ministerial approval has been given for the accident and emergency departments at Dundee royal infirmary and the Royal infirmary of Edinburgh to close.

Accident and emergency services will transfer to Ninewells hospital from the functionally unsuitable accommodation at Dundee royal infirmary when that hospital closes. In Edinburgh, most of the royal infirmary will close and services, including accident and emergency services, will transfer to the new royal infirmary to be built in the south-east of the city.

I understand that Ayrshire and Arran health board is currently consulting on options for alterations to acute hospital provision. One of the options proposed would involve the transfer of accident and emergency services from Ayr hospital to Crosshouse hospital, Kilmarnock. Ministers look forward to seeing the board's final proposals in due course.

Sheep Annual Premium

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 5 December, Official Report, column 51, how many outstanding sheep annual premium payments will be made in the week beginning 12 December; when payment will be made in respect of the remainder; if sufficient financial resources are available to make all outstanding sheep annual premium payments in the week beginning 12 December; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: On 9 December the Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department issued payments totalling £25 million to 3,560 claimants under the 1994 sheep annual premium scheme. In total £50.4 million has now been paid to 12,900 claimants—around 85 per cent. of the total. The remaining claims will be processed as soon as possible and most should be paid in January. Funding is available as soon as claims are cleared for payment.

Land Transfers

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to review his policy in respect of Scottish land asset disposals following the transfer of ownership of the island of Dun Maraig, off Skye, via a German television game; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: We have no plans to impose restrictions on the market for land. In a free society, sellers must generally be allowed to dispose of their possessions as they think best.

Correspondence

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many "Dear Accounting Officer" letters his Department has written to his non-departmental public bodies in each year since 1984.

Mr. Lang: "Dear Accounting Officer" letters are issued by the Treasury. Where appropriate my departments draw the contents of "Dear Accounting Officer" letters to the attention of non-departmental public bodies which they sponsor.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many train journeys of one hour's duration or more he has made in Britain in the course of official duties in 1994.

Mr. Lang: In the course of official duties throughout Britain in 1994, I have made two train journeys of one hour's duration or more.

Right-to-buy Legislation

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what measures are in place to ensure that the right-to-buy legislation is not exercised for profit motives by a resident's family instead of for genuine residency need;

(2) what measures are in place to ensure that the right-to-buy legislation does not deplete council housing stocks to nothing;

(3) what measures are in place to ensure that the right-to-buy legislation does not prevent those in real need to secure housing places from obtaining council places.

Mr. Lang: The right-to-buy legislation has been an outstanding success in enabling thousands of public sector tenants to exercise the choice of becoming home owners rather than continuing to rent their homes.

Tenants who are buying their homes are free to make whatever financial arrangements they consider appropriate, subject to the right of the former landlord to recover some or all of the discount if the house is sold within three years of its initial purpose.

Local authorities will continue to be significant providers of housing for the foreseeable future. There is no question of council housing stocks being reduced to nothing as a consequence of the right-to-buy legislation as there will always be tenants who are unable or unwilling to assume the responsibility of home ownership.

Local authorities are also free to invest the substantial capital receipts generated by the right-to-buy in improving their stocks or in new building to meet local housing needs if they consider it appropriate. In addition, local authorities can act in an enabling capacity in partnership with Scottish Homes, housing associations and the private sector to ensure that housing is available for those in need.

Agricultural Grants

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what assessment he has made of the impact upon environmental and conservation considerations in placing limits on payments to farmers in environmentally sensitive areas in Scotland and of the system outside Scotland;

(2) what reasons spending limits are in place on support for farmers and crofters in environmentally sensitive areas in Scotland; and what assessment he has made of the system outside Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The limits on annual payments to participants in the Scottish environmentally sensitive areas scheme are intended to ensure value for money and to maximise the conservation benefits of the scheme within the resources available. The limits are set in the light of the conservation requirements in each area and are kept under review. The Scottish environmentally sensitive areas scheme is distinct from the agri-environment schemes in other parts of the European Union and reflects Scottish circumstances.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) when the first payments of hill livestock compensatory allowance and sheep annual premium were made in 1994; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is the current value of hill livestock compensatory allowance and sheep annual premium for the average recipient; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what factors have led to delay in paying hill livestock compensatory allowance and sheep annual premium in the current year; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what percentage of Scottish claims for hill livestock compensatory allowance had been settled by (a) 20 May 1994 and (b) 2 December 1994; and if he will make a statement;

(5) what has been the average delay in the current year in the receipt of hill livestock compensatory allowance and sheep annual premium by Scottish farmers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The first payments under the 1994 HLCA scheme were issued on 25 February 1994. The first payments of advances under the 1994 sheep annual premium scheme were issued on 27 October 1994.

The average payments per claim under the 1994 HLCA scheme and the 1993 sheep annual premium scheme were £2,510 and £6,665 respectively. The full rate for the 1994 sheep annual premium is not yet known.

There was no delay in the payment of 1994 HLCA claims. Eighty-eight per cent. had been paid by 31 March 1994, which compares favourably with previous years. Ninety seven per cent. of claims had been paid by 20 May 1994 and 99 per cent. by 2 December 1994.

Concerning the 1994 sheep annual premium, the EC regulations do not specify a date for the payment of advances of the premium, but I refer the hon. Member to the answers which my hon. Friend the Minister with responsibilities for agriculture and the environment gave to the hon. Member for Angus, East (Mr. Welsh) on 24 November.

Nursery School Education

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the number of nursery school places which will be available in each of the next three years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The provision of nursery school places is a matter for local authorities to decide, in the light of their own policies and local circumstances. However, the Government have given a long-term commitment to provide quality pre-school places for all four-year-olds whose parents wish to take them up, with the first new places being provided during the life of this Parliament. Detailed proposals are currently being worked up, following preliminary consultations with interested bodies. Against this background, it would be premature to provide estimates of the number of nursery places which might be available in the future.

Vocational Education

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the results of the consultation he has initiated on the EU's Leonardo proposals on vocational education in the upper secondary school.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Copies of summaries of the responses to the consultation exercise mounted early this year by the Scottish Office education department on the Socrates and Leonardo proposals were circulated, together with other documents, on 19 May to the bodies consulted. Copies of these papers have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Nursery Education

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to carry forward the Prime Minister's commitment to increasing the availability of nursery places.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Following my right hon. Friend's announcement in October, officials in the Scottish Office education department have made preliminary contacts with parents' groups, education authorities and interested bodies in the private and voluntary sectors to obtain their views. Detailed proposals are now being worked up. We shall make a further announcement in due course.

Higher Education

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what discussions he has had on the Howie committee's proposal that pupils leaving before the end of S5 should not receive any external certification;

(2) if he will ensure that implementation of the Howie committee proposals will not result in the creation of schools that concentrate effort on either Scotbac or Scotcert;

(3) how many hours per week he expects will be devoted to each subject taken at higher level, assuming that five higher courses are studied in a single year; and how many hours per week would be available for the totality of non-higher education;

(4) what discussions he has had on the content of higher and advanced higher vocational courses and how they might differ from existing higher and CS75 and higher national certificate courses which cover similar ground;

(5) what is his policy concerning a national curriculum in relation to the introduction of Howie committee proposals;

(6) what action he will take to prevent streaming in secondary schools, following the introduction of assessment for some pupils for standard grade at the end of standard 3.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Details of our decisions on upper secondary education following consideration of the report of the Howie committee are set out in the policy document "Higher Still: Opportunity for All" published by The Scottish Office in March. A high level development programme strategy group and three task groups on curriculum and assessment, staff development and information and publicity have been established to take forward work on detailed aspects of the programme. There will be full consultation on these at appropriate stages throughout the planning period.

State Veterinary Service

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration has been given by the Scottish Office to the consequences of local government re-organisation for the work of the state veterinary service.

Sir Hector Monro: The state veterinary service will continue to co-operate closely with the new local authorities on the enforcement of animal health, animal welfare and, where appropriate, food safety legislation.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number and location of (a) main offices and (b) sub-offices relating to the work of the state veterinary service.

Sir Hector Monro: There are seven main animal health divisional offices located at Ayr, Dumfries, Galashiels, Hamilton, Inverness, Inverurie and Perth. A further eight sub-offices are located at Edinburgh, Elgin, Forfar, Kirkwall, Oban, Stirling, Stranraer and Thurso. In addition, there are two regional veterinary offices located in Edinburgh and Inverurie and one headquarters unit also located in Edinburgh.

Health Authority Finance

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what (a) surpluses and (b) deficits were recorded by each health authority in each of the last three years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 12 December 1994]: In Scotland, health boards have broadly similar responsibilities to regional district and family health authorities in England and Wales. The table shows the surplus or deficit for each health board, special health board and the Common Services Agency for each of the last three years.

The information has been taken from the annual accounts of health boards and the Common Services Agency in Scotland. Prior to 1993–94 the accounts of these bodies were produced on a cash basis. From 1993–94 these accounts have been produced largely on an accruals basis.

Bellwin Formula

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what alteration to the Bellwin formula for flood compensation will occur following the establishment of unitary local government authorities under the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1994; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 16 December 1994]: There are no plans at present to alter the basis on which grant under the Bellwin scheme is calculated, but it will be necessary to alter the scheme to reflect the fact that the new unitary local authorities, like the islands councils at present, will perform all continuing local authority functions.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Doncaster Prison

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many and what percentage of the staff at Doncaster prison on 1 November had previous employment in a prison prior to joining Doncaster.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. John Gunnell, dated 19 December 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the staff employed at Doncaster prison.

I understand from the Director of Doncaster prison that sixty of the staff employed there on 1 November had previous employment in a prison. This represents 14 per cent. of the workforce of the prison.

Boards of Prison Visitors

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the number of (a) men and (b) women who have been appointed to boards of visitors to prisons in England and Wales during the last 12, six and three months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In the last 12 months, up to 14 December 1994, 109 men and 90 women have been appointed to boards of visitors in England and Wales. Of these, 47 men and 36 women were appointed in the last six months and 37 men and 22 women in the past three months.

Members of boards of visitors carry out vital work and I am sure that the forthcoming review of their role, which I am undertaking, will serve to emphasise the importance of their contribution to the efficient running of prison establishments.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of (a) men and (b) women of an ethnic minority background who are members of boards of visitors at prisons in England and Wales.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There are currently 84 men and 44 women of an ethnic minority background who are members of boards of visitors at prisons in England and Wales.

Prison Security

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what checks are made and how often on alarm systems and security cameras at prisons in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 19 December 1994):

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about checks on alarm systems and security cameras at prisons in England and Wales.

Governors of Prison Service establishments are responsible for the maintenance of security at their establishments. Checks on all key security systems are regular and frequent. In addition, governors of all establishments are required to carry out security audits of their physical and procedural security at least annually. Procedural security includes the maintenance of an effective alarm system and of any security cameras installed in the establishment. All establishments should have a planned maintenance system and a testing schedule for any security cameras and alarm systems. Prison Service area managers are responsible for verifying that these procedures and systems are in place.

Asylum Seekers

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers in each of the past three years have been granted permission to work in advance of their having waited six months or more for a decision on their applications.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The information requested is not separately identifiable in the statistics.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what provisions have been made by his Department to provide translators, and translation facilities to asylum seekers detained under the Immigration Act 1971.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: All asylum seekers, whether detained or not, are interviewed in a language which they understand, using an interpreter if necessary, to assess their claim. A large pool of interpreters is available.

Information for detainees in detention centres is provided in a large number of languages. This includes advice on how to seek free legal assistance. Interpreters are called in to assist when there are difficulties in communicating with detainees.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers detained under the Immigration Act 1971 have (a) committed suicide or (b) attempted suicide during the past five years.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The information available does not distinguish between asylum seekers and others in detention.

One suicide of a person detained under powers in the Immigration Act 1971 has occurred in the past five years. This was in the Harmondsworth detention centre in 1990.

Records of the number of attempted suicides are not held.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what provisions have been made by his Department for asylum seekers who have been detained to contest the reasons for detention at an independent and automatic review hearing; and what assessment he has made of the application of article 5 of the European convention on human rights to such provisions.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Anyone refused asylum may appeal under the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993 and may apply for bail to the independent appellate authorities at any time while an appeal is pending. Bail may also be sought from the appellate authorities by any passenger who has been detained for longer than seven days pending further examination. These statutory provisions are supplemented by the general power of the courts to grant a writ of habeas corpus and to grant bail in any case before them.

I am satisfied that detention under the Immigration Act 1971 does not breach the United Kingdom's obligations under article 5 of the European convention on human rights.

Whitemoor Prison

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to receive the report of Sir John Woodcock concerning Whitemoor prison; and when it is likely to be published.

Mr. Michael Howard: The report has been published today and placed in the Library.

Sudanese Citizens

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Sudanese citizens were given exceptional leave to remain or refugee status in the United Kingdom in each of the past five years.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Information on the number of Sudanese nationals recognised as refugees and granted asylum and the number granted exceptional leave to remain in the United Kingdom, for the years 1989–1993, is given in tables 3.1 and 3.2 of the Home Office statistical bulletin, "Asylum Statistics United Kingdom 1993", issue 17/94, a copy of which is available in the Library.

In the period 1 January 1994 to 30 November 1994, 30 Sudanese nationals were recognised as refugees and granted asylum and 20 were granted exceptional leave to remain in the United Kingdom.

Prisons (Floating Structures)

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to convert any floating structures into prisons.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. George Howarth, dated 19 December 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about converting floating structures into prisons.

At present there no plans to convert floating structures into prisons.

Prisoners

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners in England and Wales at the most recent date available had previously served a term in (a) an approved school, (b) a community home with in-house education facilities, (c) a detention centre, (d) a borstal or (e) under section 53 of the Children Act 1993.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is not available in the form requested.

Offenders (Warrants)

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many offenders who were breached for not complying with a probation or community service order and who are the subject of a magistrates court warrant have had that warrant outstanding for (a) more than 12 months, (b) more than six months and (c) more than three months.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The information is not available centrally.

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many offenders the subject of a probation or community service order, breached them by failing to comply with the conditions of that order during 1993 and for the first six months of 1994; in how many cases a warrant was issued by the relevant magistrates courts; and in how many of these cases the warrant is still outstanding.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The available information published in "Probation Statistics, England and Wales 1993" is as follows:

Persons whose supervision terminated early due to failure to comply with requirements of the order in England and Wales for 1993

	Number of persons	Percentage
Probation	1,500	3
Community service	6,700	16

Probation Service

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) probation orders, (b) community service orders, (c) combination orders and (d) parole cases were being supervised by the probation service on (i) 30 June 1993 and (ii) 30 June 1994.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Persons supervised by the probation service in England and Wales were as follows:

	Thousands of persons
	30 June 1993	31 December 1993
Probation	46.7	48.2
Community service	36.3	38.8
Combination	5.1	9.0
Parole	9.1	7.0

Figures for 30 June 1994 are not yet available.

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the resource implications of extra duties in respect of victims for the probation service.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: I have received a number of representations that changes to national standards for the supervision of offenders in the community which were published for consultation in the autumn would impose additional costs for the probation service in relation to contacts with the victims of crime. I am still considering whether those representations have substance and whether the earlier proposals should in any event be modified.

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much the Probation Service's overall budget in England and Wales changed as a result of the Chancellor's statement in November 1993 for the financial years 1994–95 and 1995–96.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Planned levels of central Government support for probation service expenditure both before and after the Chancellor's statement in November 1993 were:

	1994–95	1995–96
		£ million
Pre-Statement
Probation current grant	307.4	323.6
Probation capital grant	20.1	20.7
Post-Statement
Probation current grant	306.3	309.1
Probation capital grant	19.2	19.3

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many probation service posts will be abolished or frozen as a result of reductions in the Probation Service budget during 1994–95 and 1995–96.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: It is for individual probation committees to decide what measures to take to live within their budget. I understand that committees are still considering how best to plan their 1995–96 expenditure in the light of the Chancellor's Budget statement.

"Continuity and Change"

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the effects of the White Paper, "Continuity and Change", published in July 1994 for the Prison Service.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Many of the developments outlined in the White Paper, such as taking responsibility for pay and grading, developing effective management systems and improving the measurement of performance, are already reflected in the Prison Service's programme of work. A review of the senior management structures in Home Office agencies, including the Prison Service, is planned to take place in the second half of 1995; this will take into account the White Paper's proposals for a new senior management structure in the civil service.

Lowdham Grange Prison

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to re-open Lowdham Grange prison.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. George Howarth, dated 19 December 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about plans to re-open Lowdham Grange prison.

Proposals for the re-opening of Lowdham Grange prison are currently under consideration. No final decision has yet been reached.

Immigration

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 14 December, Official Report, column 693 on what grounds the immigration officer was satisfied that the requirements of section 128–130 of the immigration rules effective on 1 October 1994 were complied with in relation to the crew of the Ofelia having regard to its journey from Ullapool on or about 10 December 1994 to Lerwick; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: A relief crew for the FV Ofelia arrived at Glasgow airport on 10 December 1994 and they were given leave to enter as the immigration officer was satisfied that they were seamen under contract to join a ship on which they were to leave the United Kingdom. I understand the Ofelia has now arrived in Lerwick from Ullapool in order to take on fuel prior to leaving British waters with possible further stops at United Kingdom ports en route.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will immediately investigate the manning of FV Ofelia in or near Lerwick harbour and in British waters in respect of contravention of immigration rules.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The present crew of the FV Ofelia were given leave to enter the United Kingdom at Glasgow airport on 10 December on condition that they joined the vessel and subsequently left the United Kingdom in that vessel. The Immigration Act 1971 contains powers to deal with seamen who fail to comply with the conditions of their admission and the Immigration Service will not hesitate to use these where necessary. I therefore see no need for any further investigation.

Parole Board

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what rights the victim of crime in an individual case will have to challenge the Parole Board's decision to release a prisoner.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Victims of crime have no rights to challenge a decision of the parole board, although any relevant representations submitted before a decision is taken would normally be included in the papers which are considered by the parole board.

ENVIRONMENT

Pollution

Sir Peter Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans his Department has to undertake a full economic appraisal of all the recommendations included in the Royal Commission on environmental pollution's 18th report on transport and the environment.

Mr. Atkins: Assessing and consulting upon the relative costs and benefits of the recommendations of the report will be one of the principal considerations in determining the Government's response.

Sir Peter Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the organisations and individuals who contributed oral evidence to the Royal Commission on environmental pollution's 18th report on transport and the environment.

Mr. Atkins: The names of those who submitted evidence to the royal commission are listed in appendix H to the report.

Birmingham

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how the amount of money allowed by his Department for the inclusion of 9,000 Frankley residents into Birmingham reflects the pro rata to population formula used by his Department;

(2) what is the pro rata to population calculation which his Department has used in the calculation of the capping limit for Birmingham city council for 1995–96;

(3) how much he has allowed in Birmingham city council's capping limit for 1995–96 for the addition of an extra 9,000 residents of Frankley transferred to Birmingham as a result of boundary changes.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Non-domestic rates are distributed on the basis of population adjusted for boundary changes. Revenue support grant is determined by standard spending assessment calculations. In general, SSAs, other than the part relating to capital financing, are adjusted for boundary changes using population figures. However, for 1995–96 we are proposing to use pupil numbers to adjust three elements of the education calculation—for primary, secondary and post-16 education.

Relevant authorities have been sent information showing the calculations used in the boundary change adjustments. The boundary change involving 8,750 Bromsgrove residents has the following effect on the provisional SSAs for 1995–96:

Birmingham City Council	+2,447,310
Bromsgrove District Council	–664,019
Hereford and Worcester County Council	–1,928,991
West Midlands Fire and Civil Defence Authority	+145,700
West Mercia Police Authority	–379,115
West Midlands Police Authority	+379,115

The boundary change adjustment within Birmingham city council's notional amount for 1995–96 is therefore £2,447,310.

The Department is consulting on proposals for 1995–96 standard spending assessments and the content of the draft limitation of council tax and precepts (relevant notional amounts) report (England) 1995–96, sent to authorities on 1 December, and would welcome representations from authorities. We have had a representation from Birmingham city council, and we will consider it before taking our final decisions on the settlement.

Water

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his policy towards water companies that supply water unfit for human consumption.

Mr. Atkins: The supply of water unfit for human consumption by water undertakers is an offence under section 70 of the Water Industry Act 1991. Where incidents occur which may involve such a supply, they are investigated on behalf of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment by the drinking water inspectorate. Consideration is given as to whether there is sufficient evidence to justify proceedings, and whether the public interest requires them.

Burlington House

Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to transfer the freehold of Burlington house to a third party.

Sir Paul Beresford: A number of learned societies occupy courtyard buildings at Burlington house, which were erected for them in the late 19th century at Government expense. The accommodation has since been provided rent free to the societies, including external and structural repairs. Following recommendations on future management of the Government's civil estate made earlier this year by the Prime Minister's efficiency unit, my Department approached the learned societies to discuss future arrangements for ownership and management of their buildings. At a preliminary meeting in September, it was agreed that it was essential to establish, as clearly as possible, the legal basis for the present arrangements. The societies now anticipate being able to provide copies of the relevant documentation which they hold, early in the new year. Once the legal uncertainties have been resolved, I intend to have discussions with representatives of the societies about the future of their buildings.

Commercial Property

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table setting out, for each Government Department (a) the total stock of commercial property owned by each Department, by both square footage and number of units, (b) the amount of such commercial property which is currently empty, by both square footage and number of units and (c) the proportion of such empty commercial property as a percentage of the total stock owned by each Department, in terms of both square footage and of number of units.

Sir Paul Beresford: The Secretary of State for the Environment is responsible for the Government office estate, space on which is allocated to Departments in relation to their operational needs. This estate, known as the common user estate, is made up of over 3,000 buildings with a total floor area of approximately 7,515,000 m^2, of which 2,801,000 m^2 is freehold and the remaining 4,714,000 m^2 is leasehold. Currently, some 934,700 m^2 or, 12.5 per cent., of the CUE is vacant.

In addition, the Department of the Environment has its own, specialist, departmental estate with an area of some 87,000 m^2, none of which is vacant.

Skyglow

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on skyglow; and what assessment he has made of the matter.

Mr. Atkins: Representations have been made by the British Astronomical Association through its campaign for dark skies about skyglow, which is caused when artificial light is scattered by dust particles and water droplets in the atmosphere.

Light can be reflected upwards from a variety of sources. Given the legitimate desire for roads and public areas to be well lit for security and amenity reasons, there is a limit to how much of this reflected light can be eliminated. However, significant improvements can be achieved by lowering the intensity of and redesigning some existing lighting schemes and encouraging the sensitive design of new ones.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to deal with skyglow.

Mr. Atkins: Useful guidance on improvements in the design and sensitive use of lighting schemes has been issued by Government Departments and a number of professional organisations.

We are keeping under review whether other measures might usefully be taken to minimise excessive lighting, taking account of the recent findings of an informal survey of local authorities' handling of complaints about light pollution. At present it seems that many of these problems are most appropriately tackled through education and guidance, rather than regulation.

Single Regeneration Budget

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the reasons why single regeneration budget bids in the north-west failed.

Mr. Curry: No. Bids for funding from the single regeneration budget were considered individually against the criteria set out in the bidding guidance. Government regional offices will be ready to discuss with the partnerships concerned issues relevant to the performance of the bid.

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those authorities whose single regeneration budget bids were unsuccessful.

Mr. Curry: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment further to his statement of 6 December on projects to be funded under the single regeneration budget (a) how many bids were not successful, (b) what was the total value of the unsuccessful bids, (c) how many (i) successful and (ii) unsuccessful bids involve a local authority as active participant (d) how many (1) successful and (2) unsuccessful bids support the teaching of ethnic minority pupils, and (e) what was the value of (x) successful and (y) unsuccessful bids to support the teaching of ethnic minority pupils; and if he will make a statement for (A) Eastern region, (B) East Midlands region, (C) London region, (D) Merseyside region, (E) North East region, (F) North West region, (G) South East region, (H) South region, (I) West Midlands region. (J) Yorkshire region and (K) Humberside region.

Mr. Curry [holding answer Friday 9 December 1994]: The information requested is as follows:

(a) 268 bids were unsuccessful;

(b) the total value of funds requested by these bids in 1995–96 was approximately £144 million;

(c) (i) 183 successful bids had local authorities as a partner;

(c) (ii) 192 unsuccessful bids had local authorities as a parnter;

(d) (1) 51 successful bids contained proposals to support the teaching of ethnic minority pupils;

(d) (2) 38 unsuccessful bids contained proposals to support the teaching of ethnic minority pupils;

(e) (x) the total value of funds obtained by successful bids which contained proposals to support the teaching of ethnic minority pupils is approximately £92 million in 1995–96;

(e) (y) the total value of funds requested by unsuccessful bids which contained proposals to support the teaching of ethnic minority pupils is approximately £49 million in 1995–96.

The breakdown by Government offices for the regions is given in the table, using the references in the hon. Gentleman's question:

	Question reference number:
Government Office	(a)	(b) £ million	(c)(i)	(c)(ii)	(d)(1)	(d)(2)	(e)(x) £ million	(e)(y) £ million

Rough Sleepers

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much he proposes to spend on assistance to people sleeping rough on streets outside London this winter.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: It is the responsibility of each local authority, in drawing up its annual housing strategy, to consider the housing needs of all people living in its area, including people sleeping rough. In 1994–95 the Government are providing £6.8 million in grants to over 150 projects across England that provide direct, practical assistance to people who are either homeless or in danger of becoming so and who might otherwise sleep rough.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the average cost to a local authority of submitting a bid to the single regeneration budget.

Mr. Curry: None.

Executive Search Agencies

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what use his Department has made of executive search agencies in filling vacancies within his Department and executive agencies administered by his Department during the last year; and how much these services have cost his Department.

Sir Paul Beresford: Executive search agencies have been used to assist with the filling of three vacancies in the planning inspectorate and the Buying Agency during the last year. The cost of their services was £73,536.

Cemfuel

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the components used in the manufacture and production of Cemfuel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Cemfuel is a blend of residues from solvent recovery plants and other solvents that are not suitable for economic recovery. Cemfuel can be used only if it meets a specification agreed in advance with Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and which covers limits on, for example, chlorine, polychlorinated biphenyls, sulphur and heavy metals content.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what investigations and research his Department has carried out into the impact of the use of Cemfuel by industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: As I said in my statement in answer to a question from the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Duncan) on 23 June Official Report, column 261 before trial burning of secondary liquid fuel in cement kilns is approved, satisfactory baseline data on the normal operation of the cement manufacture will need to be provided to Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution. This will cover details of the kiln, its operating characteristics and the emissions to the environment during normal operation.

Trials will be run in accordance with a schedule of conditions to be agreed in advance with HMIP. Operators will be required to make ongoing reports in the progress of all trials. For monitoring purposes, HMIP will impose an enhanced and stricter regime to meet the particular circumstances of the trials.

The trials will be principally concerned with the testing and monitoring of releases. Continuous monitors for particulate matter, sulphur dioxide, nitrogen oxides, carbon monoxide and oxygen, calibrated to the satisfaction of HMIP, will have to be installed before trials commence. HMIP will carry out independent testing to verify the results of the trials.

Monitoring results obtained during trial burns will be used by the company to prepare an environmental impact assessment report which will be submitted to HMIP. This report will be evaluated by HMIP when deciding whether the practice of burning these materials can be allowed on a more permanent basis. The monitoring results, plus any application from the company to burn secondary liquid fuel on a permanent basis will be placed on the public register.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what health hazards have been discovered by his Department in the use of Cemfuel by industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution is responsible for protecting the environment under the terms of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 and has been closely supervising these tests.

Results obtained so far indicate no cause for concern. The emissions of dioxins and heavy metals are well within the limits that HMIP will impose on incinerators. Milk monitoring by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for dioxins has indicated no ill effects from the burning of Cemfuel.

HMIP is keeping a close watch on the emissions from the trials and will shut them down if the environment is being damaged.

Opencast Planning Applications

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a list of opencast planning applications which have been refused by the mineral planning authorities and appeals that have been lodged since January 1989 with his Department, indicating in each case (a) the date of refusal, (b) the date of the appeal, (c) the date the inspector submitted his report to the Secretary of State, (d) the date when he arrived at his decision and (e) whether the appeal was granted or refused.

Sir Paul Beresford: This information is not readily available. I will however arrange for it to be assembled and then write to the hon. Member with the information.

Anglo-Great Lakes Corporation

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what inquiries the National Rivers Authority has undertaken and what reports it has received in respect of releases of toxic material into the Tyne from the site of the Anglo-Great Lakes Corporation, Newcastle, after the works ceased operating.

Mr. Atkins: The results of National Rivers Authority monitoring of controlled waters, including the Tyne, are on public registers in NRA regional offices. I understand that relevant monitoring shows no evidence of pollution before or since the Anglo-Great Lakes Corporation ceased operations.

Scrap Yards

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations his Department has received regarding control of scrap yards; what plans his Department had to introduce changes regarding the control of scrap yards; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Paul Beresford: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Surrey, East (Mr. Ainsworth) on 7 December, Official Report, column 216.

Housing Renovation Grants

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what recent representations he has had from local authorities regarding grants for housing renovation and improvement;

(2) what discussions he has had regarding problems in meeting commitments for mandatory housing renovation and improvements grants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Matters relating to grants for house renovation and improvement were on the agenda of the housing investment programme meetings offered by the Department to all housing authorities in England. In addition, the Department has received 149 written representations.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he now proposes to introduce changes in the housing renovation and improvement grant schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: We will announce our conclusions on the future of private sector renewal programmes, following last year's consultation exercise, in due course.

Seven Estuary

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to commission a study into the mineral resources of the Severn estuary.

Sir Paul Beresford: Minerals planning guidance note No. 6 published by the Department in April 1994, which sets out guidelines for aggregates provision in England, states that the Government will undertake an examination of the marine sand and gravel resources in the Bristol channel. It is expected that this research will be commenced next year.

Local Government Act 1992

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the legislation repealed or otherwise affected by the Local Government Act 1992.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Legislation repealed by the Local Government Act 1992 is listed in schedule 4 to that Act. Other legislation that was affected is referred to, where relevant, in the body of the Act and in schedules 1 and 3.

Home Energy Efficiency Scheme

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by region the current waiting list times and numbers for schemes under the home energy efficiency scheme; what additional steps he intends to take to reduce waiting times; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The average waiting times by region for work under the home energy efficiency scheme, based on information supplied by installers appointed by the energy action grants agency, are set out in the table. It is not possible to provide a regional breakdown of the numbers of householders waiting for HEES work to be done, because the practice of installers in recording information about their clients, who contact them directly, varies. However EAGA estimates that, nationally, about 100,000 householders are waiting. My right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor has announced that an extra £30 million will be allocated to the home energy efficiency scheme in each of the next three years. This will bring the total budget for the scheme to more than £100 million a year—a 185 per cent. increase on the 1993–94 allocation. This will enable 600,000 homes a year to be treated.

Public Phone Boxes

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he has given to making the installation and removal of public call boxes subject to planning permission.

Sir Paul Beresford: It would not be appropriate to require planning permission to be obtained simply for the removal of a public call box; that is more properly a matter for commercial judgment. Telecommunications code system operators are granted a general planning permission to install, alter or replace public call boxes through the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1988. However, before carrying out such works they must give the local planning authority the opportunity to say whether it wishes to approve details of siting and appearance. If the authority is not satisfied and there is a serious threat to amenity, it can refuse such approval.

Lancashire

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to refer back to the Local Government Commission its recommendation for the status quo in Lancashire.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: My right hon. Friend is still considering the Local Government Commission's recommendations about the future structure of local government in Lancashire.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the Government's commitment to reducing carbon dioxide emissions following the Chancellor's statement on value added tax on domestic fuel.

Mr. Atkins: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave to the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms Ruddock) on 12 December 1994, Official Report, column 435.

Landfill Tax

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the consultation paper on the proposed landfill tax will be published; and to whom it will be distributed.

Mr. Atkins: We anticipate launching a consultation exercise on the proposed landfill levy early in 1995. The consultation document will be sent to a wide range of interested bodies, including representatives of waste producers, the waste disposal industry, local authorities and environmental interests.

Toxic Materials

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 6 December, Official Report, column 134, if he will list the sites at which all current and planned trials of substitute fuels in kilns are being carried out.

Mr. Atkins: The following kilns are currently undertaking trials with substitute fuels.

Castle Cement Clitheroe—Ribblesdale Works, Clitheroe, Lancashire
Rugby Cement Barrington—Barrington Works, Barrington, Cambridge.

Rugby Cement Ketton—Ketton Cement Works, Ketton, Stamford, Lincolnshire.
Blue Circle Weardale—Weardale Works, Eastgate, Bishop Auckland, County Durham.
Redland Aggregates Thrislington—Thrislington Works, West Cornforth, Ferryhill, County Durham.

The following plant has made an application to undertake trials.
Rugby Cement Southam—Southam Works, Long Itchington, Rugby, Warwickshire.

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Khabra: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with the Home Secretary about the effect of Home Office decisions in respect of section 11 funding on decisions in respect of allocating single regeneration budget resources to a borough with particular reference to ethnic minorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The criteria for decisions on the allocation of the SRB bidding round and section 11 resources were set out respectively in the SRB bidding guidance issued on 14 April and in letters sent by the Home Office on 7 September and 24 November to local authorities and others. These were agreed by both Departments and recognise the needs of ethnic minorities. Decisions on section 11 bids will take into account relevant funding under the SRB.

Housing Associations

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what encouragement his Department is giving to encourage housing associations to refurbish properties rather than new-build.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: We are placing an increasing emphasis on regeneration in the Housing Corporation's approved development programme. Some 40 per cent. of approved development programme resources for new housing association schemes in 1995–96 will be for regeneration purposes, including rehabilitation and short-life housing, and schemes in city challenge and renewal areas.

Unitary Authorities

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the official working definition of a unitary authority.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: There is no statutory definition of "unitary authority". I would understand it to mean a local authority responsible for carrying out both county and district level functions.

Planning Inspectorate

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to review the planning inspectorate.

Mr. Gummer: The planning inspectorate, as an executive next steps agency, is being reviewed. As part of the usual arrangements for next steps agencies, performance and activities will be subjected to the normal prior options tests set out in the 1993 "Next Steps Review", Cm 2430.

Comments and contributions from those with an interest in the work of the agency will be welcome, and should be sent, by 28 February 1995, to Richard Jones, Planning Directorate, Department of the Environment, Room C13/16a, 2 Marsham street, London SW1P 3EB for England or to Peter Roderick, Planning Division, Welsh Office, Cathays Park, Cardiff CF1 3NQ for Wales.

The planning inspectorate was launched as an executive agency in the Department of the Environment and the Welsh Office in April 1992. It serves the Secretaries of State for the Environment and Wales on appeals and other casework under planning, housing, environment, highways and allied legislation.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the undertakings given by the Government in their response to the first report from the Environment Select Committee, Session 1993–94, on standard spending assessments, Cm. 2494, indicating in respect of each undertaking what action has been taken and when.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The undertakings that were given in the Government's response to the Select Committee report and the action that has been taken are as follows:

Subject—Openness (Recommendation 1)

Undertaking—The Government will continue to discuss possible changes in SSA methodology with the local authority associations and to provide them with the data underlying any analyses.

Action—Between March and September 1994 there were 11 meetings of the SSA sub-group. This sub-group is the forum for discussions between the local authority associations and central Government Departments about possible changes in the formulae for SSAs. A report of the work of this sub-group was received by the Consultative Council on Local Government Finance in October.

Subject—Judgment (Recommendation 4)

Undertaking—Later this spring, the Department of the Environment will publish an updated edition of the SSA "Background and Underlying —Methodology" booklet which will explain how Ministers reached decisions on the choice of particular indicators and the research underpinning those decisions.

Action—The publication of the methodology handbook has been delayed. I hope it will be possible to publish it in January.

Subject–Information for authorities on calculation of SSAs (Recommendation 5)

Undertaking—To discuss with the local authority associations the value to individual authorities of providing them with completed calculations. If there is agreement that information in this form would be of use to individual authorities we will consider, with the associations, whether this can be provided.

Action—We discussed the issue with local authority associations and completed calculations have been sent to individual local authorities. The authorities have been invited to comment on their usefulness.

Subject—Use of regression analysis (Recommendation 6) and Factors which influence local authority spending (Recommendation 19)

Undertakings—The Government will be setting in motion some research to consider the scope for alternatives to regression, particularly those involving expenditure data ... It is unlikely that this research would be completed in 1994.The Government are looking carefully at the priorities for future work into SSAs in consultation with the local authority associations. This work is likely to include an examination of alternative ways in which the assessment might be made. This work would need to include consideration of any extra information which might be required and the cost and feasibility of collecting it.

Action—We have drafted a specification for research which we plan to discuss with the local authority associations on 17 January. The research would consider alternatives to regression analysis as ways of examining the factors which influence local authority spending.

Subject—Change in SSA methodology following reorganisation (Recommendation 7) and Damping effects of changes following reorganisation (Recommendation 10).

Undertakings—The Department will be reviewing whether any SSA methodology changes will be necessary as a result of the local government review and will discuss such matters with the local authority associations within the forum of the settlement working group, which is informed by the SSA sub-group and the restructuring finance sub-group. The impact on SSAs of the reorganisation of local authorities and the need for any safety net arrangements will be discussed extensively with the local authority associations during the course of this year within the forum of the settlement working group.

Action—We have analysed the likely effects of local government reorganisation and considered whether damping and any methodology changes are necessary. We discussed the effects with the local authority associations in the restructuring finance sub-group. For 1995–96 we considered that no damping and only minimal changes were required, though more substantive changes may need to be considered for 1996–97. Changes for 1996–97 will be considered initially by the SSA sub-group.

Subject—Future recalibration of SSAs (Recommendation 9) and future work on SSAs (Recommendation 20)

Undertakings—During 1994 the Government intend to discuss with the local authority associations more limited changes in SSAs which now require examination, such as changes in the formula relating to the police which were not examined as part of the 1993 review of SSAs. The SSA sub-group will meet again in 1994 to consider SSA data and methodology issues. Among the Government's priorities for work in 1994 will be the police SSA and the way in which the area cost adjustment tapers outside London.

Action—Possible changes to SSA methodology, put forward by Department of the Environment, other Government Departments and local authority associations, were considered by the SSA sub-group and, in respect of police formula, by a working party chaired by the Home Office. The Government's proposals for SSAs in 1995–96, which incorporate proposed changes in methodology, were published on 1 December 1994. The proposed changes include a significant change relating to police and a change to the taper on the area cost adjustment, but are more limited than those arising from the 1993 review.

Subject—Stability and the SSA reduction grant (Recommendation 14)

Undertakings—The Department of the Environment will be considering with other Government Departments and the local authority associations whether to commission research into ways of updating before 2001 the proxy variables derived from the census. Decisions on whether to pay SSA reduction grant for 1995–96 will be taken, together with other decisions on the local government finance settlement for that year.

Action—Discussions have taken place with the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys about work it has started in this area. Their proposals will be discussed with the local authority associations early in 1995. The proposals for local authority finance in 1995–96 include payment of SSA reduction grant in respect of changes resulting from the 1993 review of SSAs, and in respect of changes in the police SSA, and police grant.

Subject—Community Care (Recommendation 15)

Undertaking—The distribution—of the special transitional grant—will continue to be discussed with the local authority associations in the normal way and in the light of overall monitoring.

Action—The arrangements for distributing the 1995–96 STG for community care were discussed at a meeting between officials of Department of Health and the local authority associations. The associations were also given the opportunity to comment on these matters in writing. In the light of the views expressed, it is the Government's intention to base the distribution of the 1995–96 STG wholly on the SSA for personal social services. The Government remain of the view that it is not possible to monitor the effect of the chosen distribution in isolation from other factors.

Subject—Day visitors (Recommendation 18)

Undertaking—A number of issues regarding the day visitor estimates have been raised in discussion with local authority associations and by individual authorities. These issues and other matters concerning potential enhancements to the day visitor estimates will be addressed in the coming year as part of the process of keeping this indicator under review.

Action—In 1994, the SSA sub-group considered a paper presented by DOE and Department of National Heritage looking at the strategy for updating the day visitor numbers. It was generally agreed that, pending a more comprehensive review during 1995, when updated information will become available, there should be no change for 1995–96.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if county councils are permitted to exceed standard spending assessment limits by the use of reserves.

Mr. Robert B. Jones [holding answer 16 December 1994]: Yes. Expenditure funded from reserves or balances lies outside an authority's budget requirement, which is the quantity to which the capping principles apply.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what procedures exist for the review of individual standard spending assessments issued to individual county councils in the event of substantial and unexpected increases in the demand for services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones [holding answer 16 December 1994]: Standard spending assessments are calculated using a uniform methodology which is applied to all authorities. The methodology is discussed in detail with the local authority associations. Where possible, the data used in the calculation of SSAs are brought up to date each year to reflect the changing conditions in the area of each individual local authority. Where demand for an individual authority's services increases we would normally expect this to be reflected in the data underlyings its SSA, albeit with a time lag.

The proposed SSAs for 1995–96 were announced on 1 December. Authorities have the opportunity to make representations in the period to 6 January. Having considered the representations, the Secretary of State will lay before the House of Commons a local government finance report setting out SSAs for each authority for 1995–96.

Once the report is approved, there can be no more than one amending report. There is a separate scheme, the Bellwin scheme, to deal with major emergencies.

The capping principles recognise that SSAs cannot reflect precisely every local circumstance, by allowing a margin of 12.5 per cent. over an authority's SSA before its budget requirement is regarded as excessive. In addition, local authorities will normally hold balances to meet expenditure unexpected at the time of their budget.

Coventry Airport

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he received a letter from the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth about matters raised by B. Oakley about Coventry airport; when he decided to refer the matter to the Department of Transport; and what were the reasons for the lapse of time.

Sir Paul Beresford [holding answer 12 December 1994]: A letter from the hon. Member dated 31 October, addressed to the Minister for the Environment and Countryside, about matters raised by B. Oakley about Coventry airport was received in my Department on 3 November. The subject matter was confirmed as being for the Department of Transport on 30 November and the correspondence transferred on 2 December. The main reason for the delay in confirming that the matter was not for this Department was an oversight by staff in my Department.

Sewage Disposal

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the Government's policy with regard to the disposal of sewage through long sea outfall pipes.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 14 December 1994]: Government policy is that all significant discharges of sewage into coastal and estuarial waters should be treated. This will be achieved through implementation of the EC urban waste water treatment directive.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the location and date of commissioning for long sea outfall pipes for sewage which are (a) proposed, (b) already commissioned and (c) under construction.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 14 December 1994]: Comprehensive information on the numbers and locations of existing or proposed long sea outfall pipes is not kept by my Department.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what are the estimated volumes for low-level radioactive waste which the recent consultation document proposes shall be dumped in public refuse tips;

(2) what are the origins of the low-level radioactive waste from the nuclear industry which it is proposed to dump on public refuse tips according to the recent consultative document;

(3) what consideration has been given to the transportation problems associated with the dumping of low-level radioactive waste on public refuse tips as proposed in the recent consultative document.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 15 December 1994]: The consultation document, "Review of Radioactive Waste Management Policy: Preliminary Conclusions", proposed that there would be advantage in encouraging greater use of controlled burial of low-level radioactive waste in landfill sites.

Low-level waste from the nuclear industry includes discarded protective clothing, used paper towels and plastic wrappings, and other lightly contaminated items of equipment, as well as building rubble and steelwork from decommissioned plant. No estimate has been made of the volumes of waste which producers might seek to dispose of in this way. No transportation problems were anticipated; where the level of radioactivity requires it, waste consignments are subject to control under international regulations made by the International Atomic Energy Agency.

The consultation document was sent to a wide range of interested bodies and we shall be considering future policy in the light of the many responses received.

Water Authorities

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people are employed, and at what locations, by (a) the National Rivers Authority, (b) Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution, (c) the London Waste Regulation Authority, (d) local waste regulation authorities, (e) the nuclear installations inspectorate and (f) the drinking water inspectorate.

Sir Paul Beresford [holding answer 15 December 1994]: The numbers of persons employed by the following organisations are, from recent information available to the Department, as follows:

(a) the National Rivers Authority: 7,709;

(b) Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution: 430;

(c) the London Waste Regulation Authority; 122;

(d) other local authorities in England and Wales who are waste regulation authorities—the number of persons working on those authorities' waste regulation functions: 982;

(e) the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate: 269; and

(f) the Drinking Water Inspectorate: 30.

The figures for different organisations are not necessarily on a comparable basis or at the same date. Details of the location of the employees of all these organisations are not held centrally.

Biological Diversity

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the first conference of the parties meeting for the convention for biological diversity.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 16 December 1994]: The first meeting of the conference of the parties to the convention on biological diversity took place in Nassau, the Bahamas from 28 November to 9 December 1994. A good start was made towards implementing the convention and setting up the administrative machinery to operate it. The United Nations environment programme was designated as the organisation to host the convention secretariat. The work of the scientific advisory body was set in train, with its first meeting due to take place in Paris from 4 to 8 September 1995. A working group was established to enable the next COP to consider the need for a biosafety protocol. A three-year work programme was agreed for the COP which reflects the three objectives of the convention, namely conservation of biodiversity, its sustainable use, and sharing of the benefits derived from it. On finance, appropriate policy guidance was issued to the global environment facility, which was confirmed as the interim financial mechanism to fund the incremental costs of projects in developing countries designed to deliver the objectives of the convention. The rules on voting on financial provisions were left to be resolved at a future meeting.

The provisional dates for the next meeting of the conference of the parties are 6 to 17 November 1995. It will consider, inter alia, voting on financial provisions, the location of the convention secretariat and the designation of the permanent financial mechanism and will make decisions on the substantive work of the convention, including the consideration of biodiversity under threat.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps the United Kingdom Government took at the first meeting of the conference of the parties for the convention on biological diversity to ensure that the convention is used as a means of conserving forests.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 16 December 1994]: The conservation of forests was not a substantive item on the agenda of the first meeting of the conference of the parties to the convention on biological diversity held in Nassau, the Bahamas from 28 November to 9 December 1994. However, a statement to be conveyed to the Commission on Sustainable Development on behalf of the COP emphasises the importance of conservation, management and sustainable use of forests for achieving the objectives of the convention and makes clear that the COP stands ready to develop measures to achieve the convention's objectives with respect to forests. The convention will undertake a programme of work on terrestrial biological diversity. This will take account of the consideration of forests and biodiversity by the third session of the UN Commission on Sustainable Development next year.

National Theatre

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to call in the current planning application for alterations to the National theatre for public inquiry.

Sir Paul Beresford [holding answer 16 December 1994]: I will await the local planning authority's consideration of the applications before considering whether or not to call them in.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) hold open meetings, (b) conduct public consultation exercises, (c) conduct consultation exercises with outside commercial interests, (d) publish a register of members' interests, (e) publish agendas for meetings and (f) publish the minutes of meetings; and whether this is in each case (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntary.

Sir Paul Beresford [holding answer 16 December 1994]: A list of my Department's advisory bodies can be found in "Public Bodies". The following bodies carry out activities falling within the specified categories:

(a) hold open meetings,
Local Government Commission
Local Government Staff Commission
(b) conduct public consultation exercises,
Local Government Commission
Local Government Staff Commission
Building Regulations Advisory Committee
Inland Waterways Amenity Advisory Council
(c) conduct consultation exercises with outside commercial interests,
Local Government Commission
Building Regulations Advisory Committee
Inland Waterways Amenity Advisory Council
Advisory Panel for Construction Research
(d) publish a register of members' interests,
Advisory Committee on Hazardous Substances
(f) publish the minutes of meetings,
Inland Waterways Amenity Advisory Council

The Local Government Commission is required by statute to carry out consultation exercises. None of the other activities are statutory requirement.

Wolf Hybrids

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will apply the provisions of the Dangerous Wild Animals Act 1976 in regard to the trading in wolf hybrids and to the keeping of these animals as domestic pets.

Sir Paul Beresford: The 1976 Act already applies to wolves and wolf hybrids, which may not be kept by individuals without a licence. Licensing under the Act is the responsibility of district councils, which may impose conditions on licences, including requirements that an animal must be kept only by particular persons at specified and secure premises. The Act also allows district councils to control the movement of any wolf or wolf hybrid. Trade in threatened species of wolves and first-generation hybrids is covered by EC regulation 3626/82 and other regulations applying the convention on international trade in endangered species within the European Union.

National Rivers Authority

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what considerations he is giving for the merging of the National Rivers Authority closed fund with the National Rivers Authority active fund.

Mr. Atkins: The National Rivers Authority is sponsored by the Department of the Environment. In the course of establishing the Environment Agency, consideration is being given to the future arrangements for the National Rivers Authority's closed and active pension funds. The arrangements must protect the position of the beneficiaries, while minimising any cost for the taxpayer.

One of the options being looked at is the merger of the funds.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Lindane

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish the research conducted by his Department in 1981 in respect of Lindane and breast cancer.

Mrs. Browning: The Ministry has not conducted research on Lindane and breast cancer. The hon. Member may be referring to a 1981 study on lindane residues in milk following treatment of cattle with delousing powder. I have arranged for copies of this study to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Executive Search Agencies

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what use his Department has made of executive search agencies in filling vacancies within his Department and executive agencies administered by his Department during the last year, and how much these services have cost his Department.

Mr. Jack: Only the Agricultural Development Advisory Service, an executive agency, has used an executive search agency, at a cost of £6,068.18.

Departmental Telephone Calls

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much has been spent on telephone charges and how many telephone calls have been made by his Department for each of the last five years.

Mr. Jack: Departmental charges for telephone for years 1989–94 are:

	1989–90 £000s	1990–91 £000s	1991–92 £000s	1992–93 £000s	1993–94 £000s
HQ		1,377	943	1,089	1,045
GTN		471	595	989	873
AHVG		397	421	639	705
Regions		388	389	419	581
Other		457	480	392	415
ADAS		1,421	1,279	—	—
CVL		99	112	—	—
CSL		175	182	—	—
Total	4,481	4,785	4,401	3,528	3,619

Details of the number of calls are not held centrally.

1. The figures include CSL, CVL and ADAS up to 1991-92. After this date figures for them are not available. ADAS and CSL became agencies in April 1992 and CVL became an agency in April 1990.
2. Only the total figure for 1989–90 is available. A breakdown between major areas (as for other years) cannot be done until 6 January at the earliest.
3. Figures include line rental, hardware maintenance, call charges, minor capital spending, telex, agency operators, cellphones and pagers.
4. Budgetary responsibility is decentralised to over 150 operating units within MAFF and so a more detailed breakdown would require more time.
5. All figures are in thousands of pounds.

Bovine Immunodeficiency Virus

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many herds have been affected by bovine immunodeficiency virus.

Mrs. Browning: No specific disease condition caused by bovine immunodeficiency virus in cattle in the field has been identified in this or any other country. Investigations are continuing in a herd in Cheshire where cattle with serological evidence of exposure to BIV and a range of other common ailments have been identified. Investigations have also been carried out on one farm in Scotland.

Animal Exports

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will legislate to ensure that animals for export are slaughtered in the United Kingdom; if he will commend to other countries across Europe the principle that animals for export are slaughtered in the country of origin; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Browning: It would be against the terms of the treaty of Rome to prevent the export to other member states of live animals for slaughter. This trade is, however, subject to statutory requirements designed to ensure that the welfare of animals is properly protected.

We have pressed hard in the Community negotiations for tough controls, enforceable in all member states, on feeding and watering intervals and journey times. It is disappointing that a number of member states, mostly from the south of the Community, have so far blocked any improvements to the package of measures which the United Kingdom and others opposed as inadequate last June. However, in the light of the lack of progress at Community level, a new order has been made, to come into force on 23 January 1995, to help tighten up enforcement of the national requirements on journey plans, through which we safeguard the welfare of animals in transit pending the adoption of Community measures.

State Veterinary Service

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the total sum expended in connection with the direct work of the state veterinary service in each year since 1990; what expenditure is envisaged for the next five years; and what will be the financial consequences of the Lebrecht review.

Mr. Waldegrave: Pay costs for the state veterinary service, comprising the veterinary field and investigation services together with veterinarians at headquarters, are;

Year	Pay costs £'000
1990–91	[1][2]19,936
1991–92	[1][2]20,477
1992–93	[1]25,925
1993–94	30,060
1994–95 (forecast)	30,903
1995–96 (allocation)	31,154
1996–97 (baseline)	31,135
1997-98 (baseline)	31,581

[1] Excludes superannuation.

[2] Excludes administration in the regions.

The financial consequences of the review cannot be assessed until final decisions have been taken following the consultation exercise.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what number and percentage of visits by the state veterinary service have identified infringement of welfare legislation since 1990; and what emphasis has been placed on follow-up visits.

Mrs. Browning: In the four years 1990–93, the state veterinary service carried out 16,977 welfare inspection visits to farm premises. This figure includes follow-up visits, which are always undertaken where appropriate. In the same period, the SVS initiated or assisted with 493 successful prosecutions.

TB and Brucellosis

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consultations have recently been held between his Department and the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons on TB and brucellosis testing.

Mrs. Browning: The royal college has received a copy of the consultation document which my Department circulated on 24 October about the management review of animal health and veterinary group which dealt with a number of issues including tuberculosis and brucellosis testing. The royal college has yet to reply.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the names and status of those consultants participating in the policy evaluation of the brucellosis eradication arrangements.

Mrs. Browning: The team of consultants whose competitive bid was successful to carry out the evaluation of the bovine brucellosis eradication policy comprises agricultural economists, statisticians, veterinarians and epidemiologists from the Centre for European Agricultural Studies (Wye) Ltd; Wye College (University of London), farm business unit; and the Royal veterinary college (University of London).

Animal Health and Veterinary Group

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many responses he has received from (a) groups and (b) individuals to the publication of the review of the animal health and veterinary group.

Mr. Waldegrave: As at 15 December, I had received 15 responses from organisations and 13 from individuals. The consultation period runs to 31 December 1994.

HEALTH

Redundancies

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what have been the costs of redundancy payments to staff in each of the last five years;

(2) if she will list the number of redundancies among NHS staff (a) by grade and (b) by reason for each of the last five years.

Mr. Malone: Redundancy in the national health service is not a new phenomenon. Compensation for loss of office was introduced in 1948 as part of the establishment of the service. NHS redundancies in recent years have resulted from re-organisation and mergers at local level as part of continuing improvements in patient services. In 1989–90, gross redundancy payments to staff by regional health authorities were £516,000, by district health authorities £8,975,000 and by special health authorities £243,000. In 1990–91, gross redundancy payments by regional health authorities were £948,000, by district health authorities £10,722,000 and by special health authorities £68,000.

The increase in expenditure in this and subsequent years by regional health authorities is largely accounted for by restructuring and contraction while the largest single factor in redundancies in district health authorities during this and subsequent years is the reorganisation of mental health services in connection with care in the community, involving the closure of psychiatric hospitals. In 1991–92, gross redundancy payments by regional health authorities were £2,720,000, by district health authorities £25,875,000, by special health authorities £481,000 and by NHS trusts £3,675,000. Increases in expenditure in this and subsequent years by special health authorities and trusts result largely from reorganisation and mergers at local level and, in London, especially from the implementation of the report of Professor Sir Bernard Tomlinson. In 1992–93, gross redundancy payments by regional health authorities were £3,237,000, by district health authorities £31,871,000, by special health authorities £1,128,000 and by NHS trusts £14,546,000.

Reasons given by trusts with the largest expenditure on redundancy payments include particularly the implementation of reviews of skill mix and ancillary staff, together with increased concentration on patient services and contracting out of non-clinical services. Provisional figures for 1993–94 are £11,486,000 for regional health authorities, £31,971,000 for district health authorities, £1,185,000 for special health authorities and £49,122,000 for NHS trusts.

Management restructuring caused by the reduction in the size and number of regional health authorities, leading to their eventual abolition in 1996, has added to redundancy costs for 1993–94, as have the merger of some district health authorities and changes in working practices.

Information on the number of redundancies by grade and cause is not available routinely in the form suggested. However, some information is available about redundancies in particular staff groups and I will write about this to the hon. Member.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 6 December, (1) if the guidance set out in TEL(94)2 applies to senior health service managers whose employment with an NHS trust dates from after its publication;

(2) what advice or guidance she has given or has been called to give prior to the publication of TEL(94)2 concerning the dismissal of senior managers.

Mr. Malone: TEL(94)2 sets out for national health service trusts what is expected in providing for termination payments for senior managers. We have not issued any advice to NHS trusts concerning the dismissal of senior managers. NHS trusts are free to employ staff on whatever conditions they think fit.

Small Pharmacies

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received with regard to the future of the professional allowance for small pharmacies dispensing between 1,000 and 1,500 prescriptions per month; and what assessment she has made of the importance of such pharmacies in rural areas and the effect of changes following the representations being made to her on these matters.

Mr. Malone: Three recent representations have been received, one of which is a pay claim for 1995–96 from the pharmaceutical services negotiating committee. The claim refers to the threshold for payment of the professional allowance. The Department extended the essential small pharmacy scheme in 1993 specifically because it remains committed to maintaining good access for patients to dispensing services in both rural and urban areas.

Hospital Closures

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospitals have closed since April 1991.

Mr. Sackville: Decisions on closing or opening facilities are for local management. The Department collects information only on proposed closures which are referred for a ministerial decision following objections from a community health council.

Breast Cancer

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of women aged 50 to 64 years had been screened for breast cancer within the previous three years in each (a) regional health authority and (b) district health authority in 1989–90 and in each year since then.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave the hon. Member for Bristol, South (Ms Primarolo) on 27 October, Official Report, column 820–21.

(10) what was the average percentage of food energy derived by the population from saturated fatty acids in each regional health authority area in 1989–90 and each year since then.

Mr. Sackville: The data requested are "The Health of the Nation" indicators, which are available for the latest years 1989–91, baseline data and 1990–92, monitoring data. These data are contained in the public health common data set 1993 volume 5 "The Health of the Nation" baseline and monitoring data—definition booklet with data on computer disks—a copy of which is in the Library. NHS Trusts (Termination Payments)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the termination payments made to chief executives and general and senior managers in each trust since its inception, indicating the size and number of individual payments.

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally for payments made before April 1994. Departmental Telephone Calls

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much has been spent on telephone charges; and how many telephone calls have been made by her Department in each of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: Telephone charges incurred by the Department of Health over the past four years are:

1990–91: £4,739,561
1991–92: £3,017,000
1992–93: £3,490,000
1993–94: £3,419,000

Separate figures for the Department of Health are not available prior to 1990–91 since such costs were incurred by the combined Departments of Health and Social Security. Details of the number of calls made per year are not available centrally.

Gonorrhoea

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the incidence of gonorrhoea per 100,000 population in each (a) regional health authority and (b) district health authority in 1989–90 and in each year since then.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Additionally, rates of incidence per head of resident district or regional population would not be meaningful because data on new cases of gonorrhoea are collected by district of treatment not district of residence.

Empty Residential Properties

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many of the empty residential properties owned by her Department are (a) operational and (b) surplus; and in the latter case for how long have they been surplus.

Mr. Sackville: The Department directly owns very little residential accommodation, all of which is in operational use and fully occupied except for any short periods when staff change. For the national health service, the information is not available centrally. Residential property is owned and managed by national health service trusts, although regional health authorities manage some residual residential property. A survey conducted in 1992 estimated that there were some 1,800 houses and flats vacant comprising:

1,050 awaiting tenants

450 undergoing renovation

150 awaiting decision

150 for disposal.

Drugs Advisory Committee

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish a register of the interests of members of the advisory committee on national health service drugs.

Mr. Malone: The Department does not maintain such a register. However, members of the advisory committee on national health service drugs are governed by a code of practice which requires them to declare any interests which might affect the advice they give.

Residential Care

Mr. Pike (Burnley): To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to assist local authorities to maintain residents with preserved rights in their own home; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: People living in their homes are not eligible for preserved rights to higher rates of income support. These apply only to people who are resident in nursing homes and residential care homes on 1 April 1993.

Public Appointments

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health from what sources she seeks information on the political affiliation of candidates for appointment to paid or unpaid posts for which she is responsible.

Mr. Sackville: None. Appointments are made on the basis of aptitude, merit and suitability.

Mental Illness

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of mental illness hospital admissions nationally and in each NHS region for each year since 1990–91; and what percentage of total admissions such admissions represented in each year.

Mr. Bowis: The information needed to calculate the volume change in finished consultant episodes, by specialty, for each regional health authority, is available in "Ordinary admissions and day case admissions for England" for the financial years 1993–94, copies of which are available in the Library.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many train journeys of one hour's duration or more she has made in Britain in 1994 in the course of her official duties.

Mr. Sackville: Twenty-Three.

Social Services Budget

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of the total social services budget was spent on child care provision in England in the last five years.

Mr. Bowis: Information for the last five years for which information is available is shown in the table.

Gross expenditure on personal social services in England

Year	Total £ million	Children's services £ million	Percentage
1988–89	3,776.1	1,164.3	30.8
1989–90	4,204.4	1,277.3	30.4
1990–91	4,697.7	1,449.4	30.9
1991–92	5,127.4	1,551.4	30.3
1992–93	5,464.7	1,810.3	33.1

Social Work Diploma

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what numbers and proportions of residential child care staff currently hold (a) the diploma in social work or an equivalent qualification and (b) a national vocational qualification at level III.

Mr. Bowis: Information on the qualifications held by social work staff is not collected by the Department of Health. The Local Government Management Board and the Association of Directors of Social Services collect this information in an annual survey and publish it in the "Social Services Workforce Analysis", copies of which will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the Government's target for the number and proportion of residential child care staff to be qualified to the level of the diploma in social work; and what is the proposed date by which this target should be achieved.

Mr. Bowis: Under the residential child care initiative, the Government are assisting local authorities to achieve the recommendation in the 1991 Utting report that all officers in charge of residential children's homes should be qualified to diploma in social work level by 1995.

Hospital Freeholds

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those national health service hospitals where the freehold is held other than by the NHS.

Mr. Sackville: Property holding information of this kind is maintained by regional health authorities and national health service trusts, and is not available centrally.

Child Care Qualifications

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the Government's target for the number and proportion of residential child care staff to hold a national vocational qualification to level III; and what is the proposed date by which this target should be achieved.

Mr. Bowis: National vocational qualifications appropriate to staff in residential child care settings are still being developed. New occupational standards on which these qualifications will be based will be available from next spring.

Information Technology

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will issue advice to south west region on the sale of its information technology department.

Mr. Sackville: The regional health authority consulted departmental officials before reaching decisions on its review of future arrangements for its computer centre. General guidance to assist health authorities and national health service trusts in deciding and implementing future arrangements for NHS trading agencies such as this were issued on 15 December. Copies of the guidance HSG(95)54 are available in the Library.

Solvent Misuse

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what lessons can be learnt from the reduction in deaths from volatile substance misuse shown in the analysis of figures published on 9 December by the St. George's hospital medical school in its report, "Trends in Deaths Associated with Abuse of Volatile Substances: report No. 7."

Mr. Bowis: The report shows that the number of deaths fell in 1992 to 79, the lowest figure for 10 years. The statistical analysis shows a strong correlation between numbers of deaths and the timing of the first national publicity campaigns of the health departments on solvent abuse by young people aimed at parents. This is very encouraging but not a reason for complacency. We shall continue to monitor numbers of deaths and the impact of publicity campaigns and other initiatives to combat drug and solvent misuse so that more young people's lives can be saved. Copies of the report have been placed in the Library.

Health Education Authority

Mr. Deva: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if a decision has been reached about the future of the Health Education Authority.

Mr. Malone: The Government have decided that the Health Education Authority should continue, albeit on the basis of a radically changed funding mechanism. This reflects our view that, while much health promotion needs to be commissioned at local level, there remains a need for national campaigns and for a national health education body which can advise Ministers and act as a centre of expertise.

From 1 April 1996, the authority will be largely funded on a contract basis. The authority will seek contracts from the Department and other organisations to provide health education programmes and projects and for the supply of health education material, research and expertise. There will be no automatic right to such contracts. These new arrangements will help ensure that the authority has strong incentives to maintain and develop its reputation as the leading provider of health education advice, projects and material, to be responsive to the needs of its customers and to provide cost-effective services. We are grateful to the authority for having already set in train the implementation of these changes.

Staff Cars

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she is now able to list for 1993–94 expenditure on staff cars for (a) regions, (b) districts and (c) trusts.

Mr. Sackville: Provisional figures for expenditure on staff cars by regional and district health authorities and national health service trusts will be placed in the Library.

Mental Illness Hospitals

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list (a) the national health service mental handicap hospitals and (b) the NHS mental illness hospitals which have closed and the capital and revenue resources which have accrued as a result in each year since 1979.

Mr. Bowis: Information on the closure of mental illness hospitals can be obtained from the "Survey of English Mental Illness Hospitals March 1993" copies of which are available in the Library. A survey of learning disability hospitals is in progress.

Drugs (Deaths)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her calculation of the numbers of people who died as the result of the use of medicinal drugs in each of the last 10 years (a) accidentally, (b) in suicide or self-inflicted injury or (c) in injury undetermined whether accidentally or purposely inflicted; and which drug each death involved.

Mr. Sackville: The table shows the number of people who have died as a result of poisoning by drugs, medicaments, and biological substances (ICD 960–979) in the last 10 years in England and Wales, under the headings of accidental, suicide and self-inflicted injury, and injury undetermined whether accidentally or purposely inflicted. The drugs implicated in these deaths are published each year in tables nine and 10 of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys publication series DH4, which is available in the Library.

Paracetamol

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what new proposals she has to restrict the availability of medicinal drugs to children, following the recent survey carried out by the Pontefract and district community health council in respect of the purchase of paracetamol over the counter by children; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: No new proposals are planned. Community pharmacists are under a clear obligation not to supply a medicine to a child unless satisfied that the product would be used safely or, if it is for another person the pharmacist must take steps to ensure that it will be delivered safely to an adult and appropriate information will be conveyed to the patient or responsible adult. Pharmacists are further advised that where a young child is sent to collect a medicine a pharmacist should be prepared to make arrangements for delivery to the home of the patient and ensure that advice is given on how the medicine should be properly used.

In addition, the pharmacy profession is introducing protocols for the sale of medicines in pharmacies from January 1 1995, which will ensure that patients using a pharmacy are referred directly to the pharmacist when their needs dictate. The advice to pharmacists from the Royal Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britian is that in all cases requests for medicines made by children should in future be referred to the pharmacist.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has received concerning waiting lists for operations at hospitals contracted to the Camden and Islington health authority; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: Information on waiting times by national health service trust and district health authority is given in "Hospital Waiting List Statistics: England", published twice yearly. Copies are available in the Library.

Conduct and Practice Standards

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who was the successful tenderer for the contract to develop social services standards for conduct and practice; and what is the price of the successful bid.

Mr. Bowis: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Brigg and Cleethorpes (Mr. Brown) on 1 November, Official Report, column 1087. Details of the individual contracts are confidential.

Casualty Units, London

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects a statement to be made by the London implementation group on the future of casualty units in north and east London; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: It is for local health authorities and trusts to determine the appropriate pattern of accident and emergency services to ensure that the needs of local people are met.

Camden and Islington Health Authority

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the annual departmental allocation to the Camden and Islington health authority or its predecessor for each of the last five years and planned for 1995–96.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Sir William Staveley, chairman of North Thames regional health authority, which allocates funds to district health authorities.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has concerning the number of unused beds and non-used operating theatres in hospitals contracted to the Camden and Islington health authority.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Family Health Services Appeal Unit

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps the family health services appeal unit takes to identify practitioners who have persistently been found in breach of the terms of service.

Mr. Malone: The family health services appeal unit maintains records of practitioners who have been found in breach of their terms of service. The director of the unit may take these into account when exercising his functions under the National Health Service (Service Committees and Tribunal) Regulations.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what performance standards the family health services appeal unit has.

Mr. Malone: The family health services appeals unit has drawn up internal performance standards for appeals. These standards will be printed in the unit's annual report which is due to be published soon.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the average time taken by the family health services appeal unit since 1 April 1992 from time of receipt of request, to reach a decision concerning waiving of time limits;

(2) what is the average time taken by the family health services appeal unit since 1 April 1992 to arrange an appeal hearing, from the time of receipt of appeal, when a practitioner has appealed against a withholding;

(3) what is the average time taken by the family health services appeal unit since 1 April 1992 to arrange an appeal hearing from time of receipt of appeal, when the appeal is made by the complainant;

(4) what is the average time taken by the family health services appeal unit since 1 April 1992 to notify the result of an appeal hearing after the date of the hearing;

(5) what is the average time since 1 April 1992 taken by the family health services appeal unit, from the time of appeal, to reach a decision concerning a breach of the terms of service.

Mr. Malone: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the family health services appeal unit uses the information it receives to monitor and improve services.

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend the then Minister for Health gave him on 18 July, Official Report, column 170.

Dental Services

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is her Department's estimate of the proportion of dental work that is now happening outside national health service pay scales (a) in total and (b) by region;

(2) what is the total value of dentistry that is paid for by the individual patient directly or indirectly through private insurance;

(3) what proportion of dentists' remuneration was paid by the NHS Dental Practice board in each of the last five years at 1993–94 prices;

(4) what information she has on the level of subscriptions to private dental insurance plans over the past four years; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: Data are not available on the amount of dental treatment provided outside the national health service, the expenditure by patients on such private dental treatment, the proportion of dentists' income represented by earnings from private treatments, or the level of subscriptions to private dental insurance plans.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has had concerning the availability of national health service dentistry in areas of England.

Mr. Malone: We have received a number of letters, some from right hon. and hon. Members, about the availability of national health service dentists. Family health services authorities in England report that they can help patients to find national health service dentists.

Video Surveillance

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 7 December, Official Report, columns 210-11, if the use of covert video surveillance at North Staffordshire infirmary is linked with, or covered by, section 47 of the Children Act 1989.

Mr. Bowis: Yes, if it is conducted under the agreed protocol.

Doctors (Working Hours)

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence she has of the connection between the length of a doctor's working week and (a) the health of that doctor and (b) the quality of care she or he is able to provide.

Mr. Malone: There is no positive evidence to link the length of the working week as such with the health of doctors and the quality of care they provide.

Market Testing

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 12 December, Official Report, columns 474-75, on market testing, what is the total value of the contracts awarded.

Mr. Sackville: The aggregate value of contracts awarded to the private sector as a result of market testing were as follows:

1992–93 programme	10,517,000
1993–94 programme	3,026,503
Total	13,543,503

Cancer and Palliative Care

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what standards the new National Health Service Executive offices will be applying in monitoring the purchasing and provision of cancer and palliative care.

Mr. Sackville: Last year, the chief medical officers of England and Wales established an expert advisory group on cancer to consider the provision of cancer services. Its consultative report "A Policy Framework for Commissioning Cancer Services" is available in the Library. The National Health Service Executive's priorities and planning guidance requires health authorities to ensure the best quality of care for cancer patients when commissioning health services with reference to this report. Guidelines are to be developed in consultation with professional bodies to help with the contracting process.

Junior Doctors

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her Department's estimate of the date by which the target of 72 hour maximum contracts for junior doctors will be met.

Mr. Malone: Regional task forces are due to conduct a further monitoring exercise in early February 1995. They will validate the position at the end of 1994 and report progress since then. Their returns will form the basis of an assessment of any further action necessary to bring posts within the targets set for 31 December 1994.

Food Safety

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action has been taken following the recommendation by the Advisory Committee on Microbiological Safety of Food that the quality of investigations into outbreaks of foodborne illness should be improved.

Mr. Sackville: The guidance "Management of Outbreaks of Foodborne Illness" is published today.

The need for the guidance to improve the quality of outbreak data was recognised by the Richmond committee in 1990 and by the Advisory Committee on the Microbiological Safety of Food in its report "Salmonella in Eggs" in 1993.

The guidance, which has been produced by an informal working group of outside experts set up by the Department, offers informal "best practice" advice for all those involved in the management of local outbreaks of foodborne illness. In addition to helping outbreak investigation teams at the local level, we hope that the guidance will also assist in improving of data collected on a national basis. We have asked relevant professional staff in health and local authorities to promote its use as far as possible within existing resources.

Copies of the guidance will be placed in the Library.

Anthrax Vaccine

Mr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the country of origin of anthrax vaccine batch number 337/E used by British service personnel during the Gulf war; and by which company was it manufactured.

Mr. Sackville: Anthrax vaccine batch number 337/E was manufactured in the United Kingdom as a product licensed under the Medicines Act 1968 by the Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research. However the final stage of production—that of filling and packaging ampoules—was carried out for CAMR by Evans Medical. We cannot comment on use of this vaccine by British service personnel.

Bone Necrosis

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will allow full access to the decompression control register to former tunnellers pursuing compensation claims relating to the medical condition known as bone necrosis.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: I have been asked to reply.

The records in the former Decompression Sickness Central Registry—referred to in the Question as the Decompression Control Register—were collected over a period of 30 years until the registry ceased operation in 1984. They were recorded only for the purpose of health research.

The contractors who initiated the records and whose property they are, have always been able to request information from the stored records of decompression, manlock registers etc. Access by others to the records, for example an individual or his solicitor seeking to establish dates and decompression times relating to his own exposure to compressed air, will be granted only with the full knowledge and written permission of the contractor who initiated the records.

Written Answers to Questions

WALES

Special Advisers

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) of 1 December, Official Report, columns 814-15, if he will make a statement regarding his Department's expenditure on special advisers in each of the last three financial years and for the financial year 1979–80.

Mr. Redwood: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretaryon 19 December 1994, Official Report, column 937.

Clwyd Education Authority

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will make additional moneys available to enable Clwyd education authority to meet its special needs duties; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what measures he proposes to take to enable head teachers to reduce large class sizes; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will visit Clwyd education authority and discuss with it the difficulties they face in delivering its statutory responsibilities;

(4) what percentage increase in cash he has proposed for Clwyd education authority for recruitment of more teaching staff;

(5) by what percentage he plans to increase Clwyd education authority's budget to enable it to spend more cash on its books and its equipment budget; and if he will make a statement.

(6) if he will convene a conference of local education authorities in Wales to discuss funding difficulties; and if he will make a statement;

(7) if he will fund Clwyd education authority to enable its head teachers to provide additional cover for absent staff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Richards: Clwyd county council's provisional standard spending assessment for 1995–96 is £266.642 million, an increase of 1.7 per cent. including resources for community care. It is for the authority to decide on spending priorities between and within services in the light of its statutory responsibilities and its perception of local needs and priorities. Discussions with local authorities on funding issues are undertaken through the forum of the Welsh Consultative Council on Local Government Finance.

Executive Search Agencies

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what use his Department has made of executive search agencies in filling vacancies within his Department and executive agencies administered by his Department during the last year; and how much these services have cost his Department.

Mr. Redwood: None.

Local Education Authorities

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the local education authority chairmen in Wales he has met formally.

Mr. Richards: My right hon. Friend has not yet had any formal meetings with individual local education authority chairmen.

Ministerial Train Journeys

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many train journeys of one hour's duration or more he has made in Britain in 1994 in the course of his official duties.

Mr. Redwood: I regularly travel to Wales by train; each journey takes longer than one hour.

Primary Schools

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to improve the resourcing of primary schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Richards: My right hon. Friend recently announced his plans for Welsh local government revenue spending in 1995–96. He proposed that total standard spending should be set at £2.767 million. It represents an increase of £72 million, 2.7 per cent on the comparable level of funding for 1994–95.

It is for individual local authorities to determine how their available resources are allocated between services including education, taking account of their statutory responsibilities and their perception of local needs and priorities.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to visit Meirionnydd Nant Conwy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I visited the hon. Member's constituency recently in September this year, and have no other immediate plans to visit Meirionnydd Nant Conwy again in the near future.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many schools in Wales have opted to become grant maintained in 1992, 1993 and to date in 1994; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Richards: Parental ballots at seven schools in Wales in 1992 and six in 1993 were in favour of applying for grant-maintained status. No schools have balloted in favour of grant-maintained status in 1994.

NHS Managers

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total number of, and expenditure on, managers within the NHS in (a) 1979–80 and (b) 1993–94.

Mr. Richards: At 30 September 1993 there were 1,159 general and senior managers—whole-time equivalents—employed by the NHS in Wales. The salary and wage cost of employing these staff during the financial year 1993–94 was £30.7 million—provisional. The grades of general and senior managers were introduced gradually from 1985 onwards so comparable figures for 1979–80 are not available.

The figures include staff employed and expenditure by district health authorities, the Welsh Health Common Services Authority, family health services authorities, NHS trusts and the Health Promotion Authority for Wales.

Long-term Care

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the projected cost to the NHS of providing long-term care for the chronically sick and terminally ill in (a) 1995–96 and 1996–97.

Mr. Richards: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the cost to the NHS of providing long-term care for the chronically sick and terminally ill for each of the last five years.

Mr. Richards: This information is not held centrally. However, the Welsh Office has made a series of allocations to support the voluntary hospice as follows:

Year	£
1991–92	1,000,000
1992–93	1,900,000
1993–94	2,304,000
1994–95	[1]2,477,000

[1] including £100,000 agreed but not yet allocated.

NHS Pay

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how performance-related pay will be calculated for national health service employees.

Mr. Richards: Local pay provides the opportunity to reward the contributions which individual members or groups of staff make to the provision of high-quality, cost-effective patient services. The precise nature of pay schemes will be a local matter.

Home Helps and District Nurses

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many home helps and (b) district nurses per 1,000 people over the age of 65 there are; and what are the equivalent figures for other European countries.

Mr. Richards: At 30 September 1993 there were 8.6 whole-time equivalent home helps—including home care organisers and family aides—per 1,000 people aged 65 and over in Wales. Reliable estimates of the numbers of nursing staff employed in specific occupational groups, such as district nursing, and information on equivalent figures for other European countries for these two groups of staff are not available centrally.

Bryngías Tunnels Bypass

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what financial penalties have been paid by the contractor on the Brynglas tunnels bypass scheme; and what new date has been agreed for its completion.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The contract completion date for the M4 Brynglas tunnels and A4042 Malpas road relief scheme has been extended from 4 December 1994 to 5 February 1995. I am advised that the contractor will not achieve actual completion until summer 1995. Liquidated damages are not yet applicable.

Young People

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the opportunities available for young people aged 16 and 17 years old who are classified as (a) International Labour Organisation unemployed and (b) economically inactive.

Mr. Redwood: The Government guarantee a place on the youth training programme to all 16 and 17-year-olds who are not in education or employment. There is a wide range of opportunities available in employment, education, training and voluntary work.

National Curriculum Tests

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his latest estimate of the cost of his plans to oversee national curriculum tests in schools and provide for their external marking.

Mr. Richards: The precise requirements for 1995–96 have still to be determined by the Curriculum and Assessment Authority for Wales. The latest estimate to meet the assessment needs in Wales to cover test development and distribution, guidance to teachers and external marking is in the order of £4.5 million to £5 million.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimates he has made of the savings which will accrue in each of the next three years arising out of the creation of unitary authorities; and if he will itemise the specific areas where he expects these savings to accrue.

Mr. Redwood: Paragraph 6.8 of "Local Government in Wales: A Charter for the Future", Cm 2155, made it clear that financial savings were possible as a result of the reorganisation but that the exact level would depend on decisions taken by the new authorities after their election.

I do not expect any savings in 1995–96. I informed the House on 14 December, Official Report, columns 925–40, of the funding for transitional costs which I propose to make available, and offered to provide further money for compensation costs to facilitate changes where authorities decide that they want to make major administrative savings at the point of reorganisation.

I have not made any estimates in respect of 1996–97 or 1997–98 and is too early to do so. I would expect savings to result from such things as the reduction in the number of councillors and in the number of chief executives, treasurers and other posts in central administrative departments.

Local government and the public will also benefit from non-financial improvement which result from the reorganisation, such as improved co-ordination of services and greater accountability.

Schools

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money he plans to make available for his new initiative for popular schools; when he expects this initiative to get under way; and when the first pupils will take up places in schools taking part in the programme.

Mr. Richards: My right hon. Friend has made £20 million available over the next four financial years for the popular schools initiative. Bids will be invited for consideration under the initiative early in the new year and I would hope to be in a position to make the first announcement of schools to benefit by summer 1995.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to launch a major new initiative like that announced for popular schools to raise standards in schools which are identified by the office of Her Majesty's chief inspector or the local education authority as having particular problems to overcome in providing a high standard of education for their pupils.

Mr. Richards: The whole thrust of the Government's education policies and reforms is to raise standards. The Education Act 1993 contained specific provisions to deal with schools identified by inspectors as failing to provide acceptable standards of education. It is our policy to raise the standards of education in all Welsh schools.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what specific programmes and publications he has funded in each of the last three years to promote the dissemination of information about making schools successful.

Mr. Richards: The Welsh Office has over that period issued advice and guidance in a variety of forms about aspects of school performance and management which contribute to making schools successful, as has the office of Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools in Wales.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by local education authority the (a) secondary schools, (b) primary schools and (c) special schools that will be eligible for his new initiative for popular schools, and what estimate he has made of the capacity of these schools' sites to accommodate the extra facilities that he is proposing.

Mr. Richards: All maintained schools which are oversubscribed will be eligible under the popular schools initiative. It is for local education authorities and/or the school to decide whether to bid for funds and whether the school site is able to accommodate the additional facilities.

Home Ownership

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has (a) to publish material to promote low-cost home ownership schemes and (b) to include in this material information about the Government's proposals to change the rules regarding the payment of housing benefit to people who lose their jobs.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In the new year I intend to publish information about home ownership opportunities to support the work of local authorities and housing associations that are seeking to respond to the continuing demand for home ownership.

Disabled People

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his oral statement of 14 December, Official Report, column 926, whether the further £6.6 million for disabled people will be allocated exclusively to schemes brought forward by local authorities; and whether he will be issuing new guidelines governing the type of scheme which will be eligible for consideration.

Mr. Richards: Of the total of £6.6 million announced by my right hon. Friend, £1.85 million will be allocated to help with housing, including for disabled facilities grants. We are presently considering how the remaining £4.75 million will be allocated but intend that schemes from the local authorities and the voluntary sector will be eligible for support.

Teachers' Unions

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the teachers' unions he has met formally.

Mr. Richards: My right hon. Friend has met the National Association of Head Teachers. Since my appointment I have met the National Association of Schoolmasters and Union of Women Teachers. I hope to have the opportunity to meet other teachers' associations in the near future.

Young People

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish tables showing for spring 1994 and for the latest date which figures are available the total number of 16 and 17-year-olds in Wales together with the number and percentage who are (a) employed, (b) self-employed, (c) full-time students, (d) undertaking Government employment and training programmes, (e) classified as International Labour Organisation unemployed and (f) economically inactive.

Mr. Redwood: The available information is given in the table. All those included in the ILO unemployed category are eligible to take up a training place if they wish to do so. The summer figure represents a peak with school leavers appearing.

Economic activity of 16 and 17-year-olds in Wales

	Spring 1994	Summer 1994
Total	63,000 (100%)	68,000 (100%)
Employed [234]	22,000 (35%)	28,000 (42%)
Full-time student	48,000 (76%)	47,000 (70%)
ILO unemployed	[1]—	11,000 (17%)
Economically inactive	37,000 (59%)	28,000 (42%)

Notes:

[1] Indicates less than 10,000 in a cell. Estimates of less than 10,000 are subject to unacceptably high sampling error and are not published.

[2] The number of 16 and 17-year-olds in employment is based on the internationally recognised measure of employment and therefore includes self-employed and those on government employment or training programmes. Separate estimates of these are not given since the estimates are less than 10,000.

[3] The 1991 census of population recorded only 242 16 and 17-year-olds as self-employed.

[4] TEC management information for September 1994 recorded approximately 5,500 16 and 17-year-olds as being on youth training or youth credits.

Indicative Delegated Budgets

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date indicative delegated budgets were circulated to the heads of groups in his Department.

Mr. Redwood: The answer is 2 December 1994.

Departmental Running Costs

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the running costs of his Department in real and cash terms for each year since the 1977–78 financial year.

Mr. Redwood: The available information is as follows:

Welsh Office running costs

	Cash terms £ million	1993–94 prices £ million
1977–78	9.1	29.1
1978–80	14.4	41.3
1979–80	17.8	43.6
1980–81	22.6	46.9
1981–82	24.7	46.7
1982–83	25.4	44.8
1983–84	31.5	53.2
1984–85	32.9	52.8
1985–86	32.8	49.9
1986–87	37.9	56.0
1987–88	39.2	55.1
1988–89	40.5	53.3
1989–90	45.7	56.2
1990–91	51.4	58.5
1991–92	58.1	62.2
1992–93	70.4	72.5
1993–94	71.5	71.5
1994–95	73.0	71.5

Footnote:

The figures relate to gross Welsh Office administrative expenditure, not including capital expenditure. Figures are not available on a consistent basis over this period. The most significant change is the introduction of superannuation changes in 1993–94. Including superannuation, running costs in cash terms were £76.5 million in 1993–94 and £78 million in 1994–95. There are other discontinuities, for example reflecting the development of inter-departmental charging arrangements. The Welsh Office has also assumed certain additional responsibilities over this period. Following the transfer of responsibility for training in Wales, the TEC management fee has been included in the figures since 1992–93.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Ministerial Train Journeys

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many train journeys of one hour's duration or more he has made in Britain in 1994 in the course of his official duties.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Nineteen.

Small Claims

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what resources are available to provide plaintiffs with legal advice in small personal injury claims.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Plaintiffs who meet the financial criteria would be eligible for legal advice under the green form scheme. Payments under this scheme for advice on accidents and injuries totalled almost £8.4 million in the financial year 1993–94.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the statutes which govern (a) consumer cases worth less than £1,000 and (b) personal injury cases worth less than £1,000.

Mr. John M. Taylor: There are no statutes specific to small claims in either category. The County Courts Act 1984 provides the power to prescribe the cases to be referred to arbitration and the procedures to be followed on any such reference. Other general legislation applies both to small claims and to larger claims.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment his Department has made of the safeguards necessary to ensure that plaintiffs and defendants in personal injury cases worth less than £1,000 are equal contestants.

Mr. John M. Taylor: In its judgment in Afzal-v.-Ford Motor Co. Ltd. the Court of Appeal gave its view that the potential for inequality of representation is present in all cases where the means of the parties are unequal. However, county court rules governing the small claims procedure allow for a party to be represented by someone other than a lawyer, and provide for the arbitrator to adopt a method of procedure which will give both parties an equal opportunity for their case to be presented.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many personal injury cases worth less than £1,000 have been decided in the small claims procedure since the small claims limit was raised to £1,000.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information requested is not available for the stated period and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, available statistics indicate that approximately 300 personal injury cases are currently concluded by arbitration each month.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department in what proportion of small personal injury claims (a) defendants and (b) plaintiffs are represented by solicitors or barristers.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information requested is not collected and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Legal Aid

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how much has been recovered by the Legal Aid Board in each of the last three years in 1994 prices; and what percentage this represents of the civil legal aid budget.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Payments made to the legal aid fund in respect of civil cases for each of the last three years, at 1994–95 prices, were as follows:

	1991–92 £ thousands	1992–93 £ thousands	1993–94 £ thousands
Contributions	21,093	22,010	23,892
Costs	104,573	137,832	183,133
Damages	73,677	73,645	80,916
Miscellaneous receipts	686	1,483	1,839
Total receipts	200,030	234,970	289,780

Total civil legal aid receipts represented 35.7 per cent. of gross civil legal aid expenditure in 1991–92. The equivalent figures for 1992–93 and 1993–94 were 32.5 per cent and 34.3 per cent. respectively.

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proportion of the total legal aid budget was (a) awarded to claimants and (b) spent on administration and establishment in each of the last two years.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The legal aid fund is provided solely for the purpose of providing help and assistance. Net expenditure on legal aid in 1993–94 and 1992–93 was £1.21 billion and £1.093 billion respectively. The cost of administering legal aid is met by separate provision. For the Legal Aid Board, which administers 80 per cent. of the legal aid budget, the cost of administration in 1993–94 and 1992–93 amounted to £47 million and £43.9 million respectively. The Lord Chancellor's Department and the courts are responsible for administering criminal higher legal aid but equivalent figures are not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proportion of the legal aid budget was spent in each region of the United Kingdom in each of the last two years.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information is not available in the form requested. For England and Wales, the proportion of gross legal aid payments to solicitors—including counsels' fees—made by the Legal Aid Board in the last two years was as follows:

	1992–93		1993–94
	£ million	Per Cent.	£ million	Per Cent.
London	139.6	18.56	167.6	19.57
South & East	168.1	22.35	191.2	22.33
South West & Wales	129.1	17.16	142.6	16.65
Midlands	121.8	16.19	137.8	16.08
Merseyside & the North	193.6	25.74	217.3	25.37

An equivalent breakdown for payments made direct to counsel is not available. Total gross payments to counsel in 1992–93 and 1993–94 were £92.6 million and £104.6 million respectively.

The Lord Chancellor's Department meets the cost of criminal higher legal aid. Gross payments to both solicitors and counsel in respect of criminal higher legal aid, by administrative circuit, were as follows:

	1992–93		1993–94
	£ million	Per cent.	£ million	Per Cent.
South Eastern	113.0	50.91	118.3	49.74
Midland and Oxford	28.6	12.89	32.7	13.75
North Eastern	20.6	9.30	23.5	9.87
Northern	29.3	13.22	29.6	12.46
Wales and Chester	11.2	5.06	14.4	6.05
Western	19.1	8.62	19.3	8.12

Separate schemes exist for legal aid in Scotland and Northern Ireland. For each jurisdiction gross payments in 1992–93 and in 1993–94 were £129.3 million and £144.5 million, and £45.7 million and £53.6 million respectively.

Magistrates Courts Committees

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to amalgamate magistrates courts committee areas in England and Wales; if he will name those committees so affected; and if he will list the names of the individuals and organisations that have made representations to him on this matter since the Police and Magistrates' Courts Act 1994 received the Royal Assent.

Mr. John M. Taylor: No formal submission under section 69 of the Police and Magistrates' Courts Act 1994 has yet been received by the Lord Chancellor. The Lord Chancellor does not therefore have any settled plans to exercise his power, under section 69(3) of the Act, to amalgamate magistrate courts committees. Before that power may be exercised the affected magistrates' courts committees, magistrates, and interested authorities will be consulted under the Act. Informal discussions have taken place between representatives of several magistrates courts committees and me and my officials. Those discussions have explored both the question of amalgamation and alternatives to it which achieve the same objectives.

Civil Justice System

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what procedures are in place for the integration and co-ordination of his Department's review of public expenditure and Lord Woolf's review of the civil justice system.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Lord Woolf is conducting an independent review of access to justice, and those findings of the Department's fundamental review of expenditure which are relevant to his inquiry have been made available to him.

Parental Responsibility Agreements

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what percentage of parental responsibility agreements are currently recorded by the principal registrar of the family division within seven working days of receipt of the completed application and fee.

Mr. John M. Taylor: All parental responsibility agreements are recorded within seven working days of receipt of the completed application. There is no fee to have an agreement recorded.

Probate

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what percentage of people seeking a grant of probate currently receive it within eight weeks of an application being received by the authorities.

Mr. John M. Taylor: All grants of probate and other grants of representation are issued within eight weeks, unless the grant cannot be issued because of factors beyond the control of the probate service.

Courts Charter

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many complaints have been received and what amount of compensation for errors and delays has been paid out by county courts in (a) London and (b) the rest of England and Wales for each month since the implementation of the courts charter.

Mr. John M. Taylor: It is not possible to provide the information requested in the time available. I will give the hon. Member a written reply before the House reassembles.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department which court has (a) received the most complaints and (b) had to pay out the most compensation for errors and delays since the implementation of the courts charter; and what plans he has for regular publication of the figures for compensation payments.

Mr. John M. Taylor: It is not possible to obtain the information requested in the time available. I will provide the hon. Member with a written reply before the House reassembles. There are no plans for regular publication of these figures.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what percentage of jurors outside London currently sit on trials for at least 70 per cent. of the days that they attend court; and what percentage of jurors within London sit on trials for at least 85 per cent. of the days that they attend court, as stipulated by the courts charter.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Performance against the courts charter target is measured by the percentage of juror attendance days spent on trials. During the period April to October 1994, the figures for outside London and within London were 72.4 per cent. and 87.4 per cent. respectively.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what percentage of defendants (a) in custody and (b) on bail are not dealt with in the target times set out in the courts charter; what number of defendants (i) in custody and (ii) on bail this affects on average each month; how many defendants in custody have had to wait more than (1) three months, (2) six months and (3) 12 months before trial; and what percentages of defendants in custody these numbers represent.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The available information covering the period April to October 1994 is shown in the table. Statistics on the number of defendants in custody waiting more than 12 months before trial at the Crown court and the distribution of waiting times at magistrates courts are not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Waiting times at the Crown Court: Defendants committed for trial dealt with during April to October 1994

Mr. John M. Taylor: Since April 1994, all courts in England and Wales have achieved the standard of sending a cheque to jurors to cover their expenses claim with five working days of the end of their jury service.

Information on the percentage of jurors who receive some payment for days already served before the end of their service is not available, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

PRIME MINISTER

Pakistan

Mr. Alton: To ask the Prime Minister what specific cases of persecution against Christians in Pakistan he raised with Benazir Bhutto during her recent visit to the United Kingdom.

The Prime Minister: When my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary met Prime Minister Bhutto, he welcomed the acquittal and release of Gul Masih. He also discussed with Ms Bhutto her Government's plans to improve religious safeguards.

Prime Ministerial Visits

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to pay an official visit to Fort William; and by what means of transport he plans to travel there.

The Prime Minister: I have no immediate plans to do so.

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 20 December.

Trans-European Road Network

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what discussions took place at the Essen summit on the Trans-European road network, with particular reference to the M2, M25 and M4;

(2) what submissions were made by the British Government to the Christophersen commission prior to the Essen summit on the trans-European road network in the British Isles; and if he will list those routes that were proposed;

(3) pursuant to his oral statement of 12 November, Official Report, columns 613-15, if the TERN proposals discussed at the Essen summit included a trans-European network from the south-east of Ireland to the eastern English channel ports;

(4) pursuant to his oral statement of 12 December, Official Report, columns 613-15, what other TERN routes the British Isles discussed at the European Council meeting at Essen.

The Prime Minister: The Essen European Council welcomed the report of the Christopherson group of personal representatives and endorsed its main recommendations. It confirmed that the 11 priority projects agreed at the Corfu Council and the three further projects now added to the list had either already been started or could be started shortly. Four United Kingdom projects are included among the 14 endorsed by the Essen Council: the channel tunnel rail link; the Cork-Dublin-Belfast-Larne rail link; the Ireland-United Kingdom-Benelux road link; and the upgrading of the west coast main line. In addition to the 14 projects on the Christophersen group list, discussions are continuing in Brussels on the Commission's wider proposals for a trans-European transport network. These proposals include a strategic route linking the south-east of Ireland with the eastern channel ports via south Wales.

Heads of Government (Guide Dogs)

Mr. Lamont: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral statement of 12 December, Official Report, column 625, whether France was one of the countries whose Head of Government might not be able to find his way to the Parliament without the aid of a guide dog.

The Prime Minister: I have a close and productive working relationship with Mr. Balladur. I have no doubt that he and all sensible observers will take my remarks in the light-hearted manner in which they were made.

Gibraltar

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister what representations, and at what level, he has made to the Spanish Government about the conduct of their officials at the customs and border post with Gibraltar; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: We have made repeated and high-level representations to the Spanish Government about the disruptive and intrusive control at the border. These have now ended. It is important that they are not reimposed.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister when he last discussed the future of Gibraltar with the Prime Minister of Spain; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I last discussed the subject of Gibraltar in any detail with the Prime Minister of Spain in May 1991.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions he has held with the Government of Gibraltar regarding the resumption of some powers and duties of the local government and legislature by the Governor or Her Majesty's Government; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: None.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Human Rights

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what investigations of human rights records are undertaken before aid is given to a particular country; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: We keep the human rights record of individual countries under regular review. We rely on information from a wide range of sources including our overseas posts and international and non-government organisations. We also co-ordinate our views with other Governments, notably in the European Union. Decisions on provision of aid take explicit account of recipients' human rights record alongside consideration of other criteria for aid.

European Union Aid

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance the European Union has offered, including balance of payments assistance, to countries without a structural adjustment programme agreed with the International Monetary Fund and what position the United Kingdom Government have taken in the Council on Ministers of these issues.

Mr. Goodlad: European Union assistance for structural adjustment is normally in support of adjustment programmes agreed with the International Monetary Fund. Since January 1992 the only exceptions have been:

(i) A sectoral import programme for Ethiopia for 27 mecu agreed in April 1992 while discussions with the International Monetary Fund were still under way. The United Kingdom voted in favour.

(ii) A structural adjustment support programme for 5.5 mecu to the Ivory Coast in February 1992. The United Kingdom opposed the project on the grounds that the international financial institutions had suspended their assistance. The decision was adopted by qualified majority.

(iii) A proposal for 70 mecu "Community support for structural adjustment" was agreed for Algeria in April 1993 in the absence of an agreed International Monetary Fund programme. The United Kingdom voted in favour of the proposal on the ground that it was considered that Algeria had embarked on a serious programme of economic reforms.

(iv) A further 30 mecu "Agriculture sector import programme" for Algeria was approved in October 1993 on condition that the Algerian Government would, before the end of 1993, take the necessary steps to agree a programme with the International Monetary Fund. The United Kingdom supported, but requested that Algeria's progress with the International Monetary Fund be kept under review and agreement reached before funds were disbursed.

Nigeria

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all the projects in Nigeria for which Britain has given aid in the last five years.

Mr. Goodlad: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my hon. Friend the Member for Morecambe and Lunesdale (Mr. Lennox-Boyd) gave to the hon. Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke) on 7 February 1994 at column 66.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) how aid to Nigeria has been distributed in each of the last 10 years;

(2) how much aid has been given to Nigeria, and to which organisations, in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Goodlad: United Kingdom aid to Nigeria in each of the last 10 years has been as follows:

1984–85, £3.8 million; 1985–86, £3.5 million; 1986–87, £3.6 million; 1987–88, £3.15 million; 1988–89, £3.4 million; 1989—90, £66.6 million; 1990–91, £33.5 million; 1991–92, £13.4 million; 1992–93, £12.7 million; 1993–94, £7.95 million.

The sharp increase in our aid in 1989–90 was due to balance of payments assistance provided as part of an international effort to help Nigeria with its IMF and World bank supported structural adjustment programmes.

A list of projects funded in the last five years was placed in the Library of the House in response to a question by the hon. Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke) on 7 February 1994 at column 66.

Prior to 1989, our aid programme to Nigeria was confined to technical co-operation assistance centred on small education and training initiatives.

Nagorno-Kharabakh

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on United Kingdom assistance to the refugees displaced by the Nagorno-Kharabakh conflict.

Mr. Goodlad: We have provided over £13.2 million of relief assistance to the refugees and the internally displaced since December 1992. This includes over £6.8 million of bilateral assistance mainly through the UN relief agencies and non-governmental organisations, and our share of assistance—£6.4 million—provided by the European Union. This assistance has been provided in broadly equal proportions to both the Azeri and Armenian populations.

We will continue to respond to the needs of the most affected populations.

Refugees (Africa)

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the refugee camps organised by the United Nations in Africa and the latest number of refugees in each camp; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: Currently the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees estimates that there are some 9 million refugees in Africa. Precise information on the population of individual camps is not available.

President Mubarak

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what promises of increased aid were given to President Mubarak of Egypt during his recent visit to London.

Mr. Goodlad: No promise of increased aid was given to President Mubarak during his visit.

EU Development Council

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 7 December to the hon. Member for Croydon, South (Mr.

Ottaway), Official Report, column 223, what was the voting record of each member state on items agreed at the meeting of the European Union's Development Council held on 25 November.

Mr. Goodlad: Decisions in the Development Council are taken by consensus.

Natural Resources Institute

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, if he will make a statement on the future of the Natural Resources Institute.

Mr. Goodlad: Following the receipt of advice by consultants, my noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development has decided that formal tenders should be invited to take over the future ownership of the Natural Resources Institute.

The consultants' report shows that there is widespread recognition of the high quality of work being undertaken at NRI. A number of universities have expressed interest in taking over, singly or jointly, the ownership of NRI. The Government welcome this interest. We intend that it should continue to provide a centre of multi-disciplinary expertise on the sustainable management of renewable natural resources. The Overseas Development Administration expects to remain a substantial customer for NRI's services.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Cabinet Committee on Women's Issues

Ms Short: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many times the Cabinet Committee on Women's Issues has met in the past year.

Mr. David Hunt: Although the membership and terms of reference of ministerial committees and sub-committees of the Cabinet are published, it is not the practice to give details of meetings.

Open Government

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Chancellor of Duchy of Lancaster how much has been spent, by each Government Department, on publicising the code of practice on access to Government information.

Mr. David Hunt: The Office of Public Service and Science, which is the lead Department on the code of practice on access to government information, has spent some £18,252 publicising the code of practice. Many Departments have issued press releases and make explanatory material available on request. Those listed have produced additional explanatory material tailored to their own circumstances. Entries marked with an asterisk are approximate figures.

Magistrates

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will set out the procedures he currently adopts for the appointment of magistrates.

Mr. David Hunt: The recruitment and appointment of magistrates in the Duchy area follow the same pattern as in the remainder of the country. Advisory committees recommend suitable candidates to me after interviewing applicants and considering the balance of the bench, which takes into account age, profession, residence and political views. In this way we try to ensure that a bench broadly reflects the community that it serves.

Benevolent Fund

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many schools have applied for financial assistance from the Duchy benevolent fund for each year since 1979.

Mr. David Hunt: The number of schools which have applied for financial assistance from the Duchy of Lancaster benevolent fund for each year since 1979 are as follows:

1979 to 1987—none
1988–two schools
1989–one school
1990–two schools
1991–two schools
1992–one schools
1993–four schools
1994–six schools

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster to what specific purpose the £5,000 donated by the Duchy benevolent fund to the Royal grammar school in Lancaster for new buildings was put in 1993, 1991 and 1990.

Mr. David Hunt: In 1989 the Chancellor of the day approved a major project donation of £5,000 per annum for four years towards the Royal grammar school in Lancaster's development appeal.

Donations were made in 1990, 1991, 1992 and 1994. Over £640,000 was raised by the school. The donation from the Duchy benevolent fund was put towards the building of a new mathematics and information technology classroom block.

Ministerial Train Journeys

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) how many train journeys of one hour's duration or more he has made in Britain in 1994 in the course of his official duties.

(2) how many train journeys of one hour's duration or more the Minister without Portfolio has made in Britain in 1994 in the course of his official duties.

Mr. David Hunt: My predecessor and I have travelled by train to official engagements this year on 55 journeys. The Minister without Portfolio travels frequently by train, but has not travelled by train in the course of his official duties as Cabinet Minister without Portfolio.

Press Releases

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the annual cost to the Central Office of Information of the conversion of Government Department press releases to electronic format and making them available electronically; and what is the annual income gained from the charges made for Government press releases in electronic format.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: It is not possible to identify the cost to the Central Office of Information of the conversion of Government Department press releases to electronic format.

Government Department press releases are supplied electronically to the news media and the Central Office of Information makes no charge to recipients for this service.

Public access to press releases in electronic format is provided via commercial on-line services some of which provide universal access via the Internet.

Income from these services was £35,186 in 1993–94, and this income was used to offset the cost to Government of distributing press releases to the media.

"Competing for Quality"

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which functions and services previously provided in-house have been contracted out under the 1992 "Competing for Quality" programme in the period from 1 April 1992 to 31 December 1993.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: The following services previously performed in-house have been contracted out under the "Competing for Quality" programme between 1 April 1992 and 31 December 1993, according to information provided by Departments to the efficiency unit in the Office of Public Service and Science.

Market Testing

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the total cost of all work undertaken by Departments and outside groups in the market-testing process in each of the past three years.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: My Department holds information centrally on the cost to Government Departments of employing external consultants to support the "Competing for Quality" programme; other set-up costs; and the cost of departmental market-testing units and related support. Costs were reported in the citizens charter second report in March 1994. The information is currently being updated and will be announced in the new year. I will write to the hon. Member at that stage.

Civil Service

Mr. Faber: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the future of the civil service occupational health service.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: The first review of the OHS has shown that it has performed well since becoming an agency of the Cabinet Office—Office of Public Science and Service—in 1990. Agency status within central Government has allowed it to develop a comprehensive, high-quality, professionally based occupational health service for civil service departments and agencies, which has kept pace with the changing structure and needs of the civil service and with developments in the fields of occupational health and safety. The review has also been helpful in identifying where there is room for improvement.

In the light of this and the state of the wider market for occupational health services, I have agreed that the OHS will remain as an executive agency.

We shall continue to seek improvements in the operation of the OHS and will review it again under normal procedures for executive agencies. I have also agreed that in future is should be known as the Civil Service Occupational Health and Safety Agency, better to reflect the full range of its services.

I am today placing in the Library of the House a summary of the findings of the review.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Building Refurbishment

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will itemise the refurbishment works undertaken on buildings housing departmental staff in the last three years, indicating the costs involved and the nature of the refurbishments.

Sir John Wheeler: The information has been placed in the Library.

Power Station, Ballymoney

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consideration is being given to granting early approval for the construction of a lignite-fired power station at Ballymoney, County Antrim; and when an announcement will be made of a start date for the project.

Mr. Ancram: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Special Advisers

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) of 1 December, Official Report, column 823, if he will make a statement regarding his Department's expenditure on special advisers in each of the last three financial years and for the financial year 1979–80.

Brendan Smyth

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) on what basis the decision was reached to take no further action in respect of the complaint investigated by the RUC that there had been an attempt to pervert the course of justice by a member of the public who approached the family of a victim of Brendan Smyth;

(2) who took the decision to take no further action in respect of the complaint investigated by the RUC that there had been an attempt to pervert the course of justice by a member of the public who approached the family of a victim of Brendan Smyth.

Sir John Wheeler: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

(ii) 30 September—from London to Bath

(iii) 17 November—from London to Poole

Children's Hospitals

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will list by health and social services board all children's hospitals giving (a) the total number of beds, (b) the total number and percentage of beds available for overnight parental accommodation and (c) the average annual number of overnight stays by parents.

(2) if he will list by each health and social services board all hospitals with children's wards giving (a) the total number of beds, (b) the total number and percentage of beds available for overnight parental accommodation and (c) the average annual number of overnight stays by parents.

Mr. Moss: The Royal Belfast hospital for sick children, one of the hospitals making up the Royal group of hospitals trust, is the only children's hospital in Northern Ireland. In 1993–94, the latest period for which figures are available, there were 130 beds in wards open overnight. Information on the number of beds for parents and overnight stays by parents is not available centrally.

Information about the number of beds in children's wards in hospitals in Northern Ireland for 1993–94 is set out in the tables. Information on the number of beds for parents and overnight stays by parents is not available centrally.

Sir John Wheeler: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Agencies

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the number of employees of each agency in Northern Ireland when it was first created and at present; what is the projection for next year; and if he will break down the figure by local offices or council area.

Sir John Wheeler: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman.

Electricity

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the installed capacity of electricity by (a) wind power, (b) water power and (c) other non-fossil fuel renewable energy sources, and the amount of electricity purchased by Northern Ireland Electric and its predecessors over each of the last five years; what is his projection for the present year and the next five years; what percentage of generated power this represents in each such year; what is the unit price paid and the total sums paid for such energy; and what effect the purchase of such energy has on the price of a unit of electricity to a (1) domestic and (2) commercial consumer.

Mr. Ancram: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman.

Civil Service

Mr. Dover: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how he intends to implement the principles in the White Paper "The Civil Service: Continuity and Change" in the particular circumstances of the Northern Ireland civil service.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I have today placed in the Library of the House a document which sets out my initial proposals for how the principles underlying the White Paper might be implemented in the particular circumstances of the Northern Ireland Civil Service.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (i) hold open meetings, (ii) conduct public consultation exercises, (iii) conduct consultation exercises with outside commercial interests, (iv) publish a register of members' interests, (v) publish agendas for meetings and (vi) publish the minutes of meetings; and whether this is in each case (a) under a statutory requirement or (b) voluntary.

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 16 December 1994]: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Single Programme

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list all the projects in the Northern Ireland single programme on which European assistance is forecast to be spent in 1994, indicating the amount forecast to be spent in each case.

Sir John Wheeler: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many parents with care at each Child Support Agency reporting centre have (a) claimed exemption because of fears of undue harm or distress, (b) been unable to give information about the whereabouts of a non-custodial parent and (c) been unable to name the non-custodial parent;

(2) how many parents with care at each Child Support Agency reporting centre have (a) had a claim for exemption accepted, (b) had a claim for exemption refused and (c) withdrawn a claim for exemption.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member shortly.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr. Adam Ingram, dated 20 December 1994:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the number of cases the Child Support Agency has considered under the requirement to co-operate, and the number of cases in which the whereabouts of the absent parent (AP) was unknown.

Figures for 1993/94 are available only for the whole Agency, and cannot be broken down by Agency Centre (CSAC).

During 1993/94, 64,812 claims by parents with care (PaWC) were subject to investigation into the requirement to co-operate. Of those, the requirement was waived in 31,749 cases and not waived in 18,857. In a further 14,206 cases the PaWC named the AP.

Information is collected on the reasons why the requirement to co-operate is waived, rather than on the reasons why PaWCs claim that they have good cause not to co-operate in naming the AP. In 1993/94, the requirement was accepted in 15,823 cases due to the possible threat of violence, in 8,424 cases where the AP was unknown, and in 7,502 other cases.

*Requirement to co-operate waived—April to September 1994

CSAC	Fear of violence	Other†	Total good cause accepted	Good cause not accepted	Claim for good cause withdrawn
Belfast‡	2,235	1,276	3,529	2,654	1,225

Dudley	2,313	1,212	3,525	3,023	800
Falkirk	2,537	1,267	3,804	2,310	856
Hastings	2,386	1,091	3,459	2,832	942
Plymouth	2,291	1,270	3,561	3,311	902

* Since April 1994, the Agency has not collected data on cases where the identity of the AP is unknown. This is because such cases are no longer considered under the retirement to co-operate.

† Includes cases where it is considered that not to accept good cause would be detrimental to the welfare of the child.

‡ GB cases only.

You also asked about the number of PaWCs unable to give information about the whereabouts of the AP. During 1993/94, 33,000 cases were subject to specialist tracing action because the whereabouts of the AP was unknown. The AP was traced in over 28,000 of cases.

Specialist traces completed April to September 1994

I hope this reply is helpful.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many parents with care at each reporting centre (a) have asked for maintenance payments to be paid via the Child Support Agency, (b) are having their maintenance payments paid via the Child Support Agency and (c) have been refused the option of having their maintenance payments paid via the Child Support Agency.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member shortly.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr. Adam Ingram, dated 20 December 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the number of parents with care who have asked for child maintenance to be paid via the Child Support Agency; are having maintenance paid via the Agency; and have been refused the option of having maintenance paid via the Agency.

As the Agency makes no distinction between parents with care and absent parents information is not available in the precise form requested, but I can confirm that at 30 September accounts for maintenance to be paid via the Agency had been set up in around 150,000 cases.

Clients would not be refused the option of having child maintenance paid via the Agency.

Information broken down by Agency Centre is currently under evaluation, and will not be available until the new year.

I am sorry I cannot be more helpful.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 7 December, Official Report column 244, if he will investigate the circumstances in which Peter Stevenson, Ref.

7000102373, was sent two CSA assessments of £53.45 and £42.09 per week by the same office on 2 December; and by what amount his income had changed since his assessment of March 1994.

Mr. Burt: I shall write to my hon. Friend.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the absenteeism rate for the Child Support Agency in 1993.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr. David Chidgey, dated 20 December 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about staff absences in the Child Support Agency.

The number of working days lost through sick absence in the Child Support Agency in 1993 was 9.8 days per staff year. This compares with a Civil Service average of 10.1 days per staff year.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what plans he has to propose changes in the system of recovery of overpayments of child support maintenance arising from error by the Child Support Agency or the receipt of incorrect information; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what representations he has received regarding cases involving the Child Support Agency where overpayments have been made in payment of child support maintenance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: The Child Support Agency has received a number of representations in cases where the amount at which an overpayment of child support maintenance is being recovered does not reflect the size of that overpayment or have regard to the remaining period of liability.

We are currently looking at the application of regulation 10 of the Child Support (Arrears, Interest and Adjustment of Maintenace Assessments) Regulations 1992 and if changes are required an announcement will be made.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether children's national savings accounts are taken into account in calculating a father's liability under the Child Support Act 1991.

Mr. Burt: Interest on children's national savings accounts is taken into account as an income available to the parent with whom they live, subject to limits in certain prescribed circumstances.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to make a further statement on improvements to the present system of child support.

Mr. Burt: The Government have been keeping the operation of the Child Support Act under close review for some time. We are now considering carefully the recent report of the Social Security Select Committee and expect to respond to the Committee by the end of January 1995.nb

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to relocate the headquarters of the Child Support Agency away from London.

Mr. Burt: It has always been the intention that the Child Support Agency's headquarters would move out of London when it became fully established. The agency's headquarters is now ready to relocate and it will move to Dudley by April 1996.

Following a relocation study, Dudley has been chosen because it offers value for money. The headquarters will be located in premises already held by the agency. Location alongside operations will also enhance staff development opportunities for both headquarters and operations staff and ease the exchange of business skills.

I am satisfied that the new headquarters will attract good quality staff. Appointments will be made from existing headquarters staff who wish to transfer and from existing managers and staff and new recruits from the Dudley and surrounding areas.

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action the Child Support Agency will take in order to manage the backlog of cases and to improve the quality of service from the agency.

Mr. Burt: The Child Support Agency will delay the take-on of the remaining cases where the parent with care was already receiving income support before April 1993 until it is in a position to tackle them promptly and to a high standard. The agency will, however, continue to provide sympathetic consideration to requests by individual parents who wish their application to be dealt with early. In addition, the agency will not pursue, for the time being, cases where it issued a maintenance application form over six months ago which either has not been returned or has been returned with insufficient information to progress it. By prioritising cases in this way, the agency will get the existing backlog cleared and allow proper attention to be paid to accuracy and customer service.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many parliamentary questions tabled in the last Session of Parliament were not answered on the ground that the information sought was not held centrally by the Department.

Mr. Hague: Of the 2,705 parliamentary questions answered during the 1993–94 Session, only six were not answered on such grounds.

Special Advisers

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) of 1 December, Official Report, column 891, if he will make a statement regarding his Department's expenditure on special advisers in each of the last three financial years and for the financial year 1979–80.

Mr. Hague: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary, on Monday 19 December, Official Report, column 937.

Weather Stations

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his letter of 25 October to the hon. Member for Ross, Cromarty and Skye, if he will list the criteria by which he concluded that the linking of the community of Garve, Ross-shire to Tiree weather station was both sensible and meteorologically sound; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Roger Evans: Weather stations are chosen in consultation with the Meteorological Office using its judgment and expert climatological knowledge. The key criteria taken into account are: how close a weather station is to the main centre of population, how representative it is of local climatic conditions for those main centres of population, and the speed and reliability with which temperature information can be obtained.

For automatic payments to be made in 1991, weather stations were linked to postcode areas which vary in size throughout the United Kingdom. The Meteorological Office considers that the temperatures recorded at Tiree are far more representative of the whole of the postcode area—IV23—in which Garve lies, than those recorded at any other site in Scotland at which the temperatures are measured. The links are reviewed with the Meteorological Office each year, principally to take account of weather station and postcode changes. No changes were required for postcode IV23 for 1994–95.

Mortgage Interest Support

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out how the standard rate of interest on which mortgage interest support will be based after 1 October 1995 will be calculated; and what that rate would currently be if that formula were now in force.

Mr. Roger Evans: The method of calculating the standard interest rate will be included for consideration as part of the consultation process.

VAT (Fuel)

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how much compensation married pensioners will receive for the introduction of VAT on fuel in (a) 1994–95 and (b) 1995–96;

(2) how much compensation the single pensioner will receive for the introduction of VAT on fuel in (a) 1994–95 and (b) 1995–96;

(3) how much compensation disabled people will receive for the introduction of VAT on fuel in (a) 1994–95 and (b) 1995–96.

Mr. Arbuthnot: Using the 1990–91–92 family expenditure surveys, uprated to 1994–95 and 1995–96 prices and benefit levels, the estimated average amounts of compensation for the introduction of VAT on fuel are contained in the following table.

Client group	Average weekly amount of help in 1994–95	Average weekly amount of help in 1995–96
Single pensioner	50 pence	75 pence
Couple pensioner[1]	75 pence	£1.15
All disabled[2]	65 pence	£1.00

[1] Couple where the head of the couple is over pension age.

[2] Average compensation for all single disabled people, and all couples where at least one person in the couple is disabled.

Note:

1. Average amounts of help are higher than the amounts contained in standard rate retirement pension, because some pensioners receive other benefits, and some receive RP at a higher rate.

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the compensation for VAT on fuel at 8 per cent. is worth to pensioners following the decision not to proceed to VAT on fuel at 17.5 per cent. from April 1995 at 1 April (a) 1994 in weekly and annual terms, (b) 1995 in weekly and annual terms and (c) 1996 in weekly and annual terms.

Mr. Arbuthnot: Using the 1990–91–92 family expenditure surveys, uprated to 1994–95 and 1995–96 prices and benefit levels, estimated help for VAT on fuel for all pensioners is given in the table. The amounts of help in 1996–97 are likely to be similar to the amounts estimated for 1995–96.

	Average weekly help 1994–95	Average annual help 1994–95	Average weekly help 1995–96	Average annual help 1995–96
All pensioners[1]	60 pence	£31	90 pence	£47

[1] Includes all single people over pension age, and all couples where the head of the couple is over pension age.

Notes:

1. Average weekly help rounded to nearest 5p, annual help rounded to nearest £1.
2. These figures are calculated at benefit unit level.

Benefits

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give details of the total annual expenditure on social security benefits for people in employment, for the latest available year, broken down by (a) family credits, (b) income support, (c) housing benefit and (d) council tax benefit.

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is set out in the table.

Social Security benefits for people in employment

Benefit	Number of cases[1] (£000s)	Average weekly amount (£)	Total weekly expenditure (£ million)	Implied annual expenditure (£ millions)[5]
Family Credit[2]	489	43.34	21	1,101
Income Support[3]	192	61.51	12	615
Housing Benefit[4]	390	29.60	12	600
Council Tax Benefit[4]	453	5.35	2	126

[5] Implied Annual Expenditure is derived by multiplying the weekly expenditure by 52. Multiplication of the figures shown in the table will not correspond due to rounding.

National Insurance

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the change in legislation to equalise the eight and 16-hour rules for national insurance class 1 contributions was originally proposed to be introduced; when it is now expected to be introduced; and what are the reasons for the delay.

Mr. Arbuthnot: There were no previous proposals for the introduction of this legislation. As part of the measures associated with the introduction of jobseeker's allowance, legislation to raise from eight to 16 the number of hours that an unemployed person can work and still qualify for the award of a national insurance contribution credit is expected to be introduced from April 1996.

Income Support

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) males and (b) females in receipt of income support are having fines paid by means of deduction of benefits.

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is set out in the table.

Income support recipients with deductions from IS for fines recovery

	Number of cases
Male recipients	4,000
Female recipients	2,000
All recipients	6,000

Fuel Bills

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is the average fuel bill for a single pensioner for the financial year 1994–95; and what it is projected to be in 1995–96;

(2) what is the average fuel bill for disabled people for the financial year 1994–95; and what is it projected to be in 1995–96;

(3) what is the average fuel bill for a pensioner couple for the financial year 1994–95; and what it is projected to be for 1995–96;

Mr. Arbuthnot: Using the 1990–91–92 family expenditure surveys, uprated to 1994–95 and 1995–96 prices and benefit levels, estimated average weekly fuel bills are set out in the table.

Client group	Average weekly fuel bills in 1994–95 £	Average weekly fuel bill in 1995–96 £
Single pensioner	9.25	9.20
Couple pensioner[1]	13.15	13.00
All disabled[2]	11.45	11.35

[1] Couple where the head of the couple is over pension age.

[2] Average fuel bills for single disabled people, and all couples where at least one person in the couple is disabled.

Notes:

1. Average weekly fuel bills rounded to the nearest 10 pence.
2. It is difficult to forecast future fuel expenditure; fuel prices have fallen by over 1 per cent. in real terms over the past two years inclusive of VAT. Further reductions have been assumed in 1994–95 and 1995–96.
3. The figures are calculated at benefit unit level.

Invalidity Benefit

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will introduce a scheme to provide for the deduction of benefit for those in receipt of invalidity benefit who are at risk of imprisonment for non-payment of fines.

Mr. Hague: Arrangements currently exist for making payments of invalidity benefit to a suitable third party where the beneficiary becomes incapable of managing his or her own affairs through mental impairment. It is also possible to divert payments to protect the interests of the beneficiary or his family where there are exceptional circumstances. We have no plans to extend these arrangements.

Pensioner Incomes

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what income pensioners with £3,000 savings are deemed to be receiving therefrom per week; and what assumptions as to interest rate lie behind this calculation.

Mr. Roger Evans: Pensioners with £3,000 savings are not deemed to be receiving any income therefrom.

Benefits Agency

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the Benefits Agency market tests for which (a) BET Facilities Management, (b) Group 4, (c) Hoden, (d) Manpower, (e) Mowlam, (f) Procord, (g) Reliance, (h) SERCO and (i) Turner Townsend were invited to tender; whether they did so; and in which they were successful.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The information has been placed in the Library.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Prosecution Witnesses

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Attorney-General what percentage of prosecution witnesses currently have to wait more then two hours at court before being called to give evidence.

The Attorney-General: No statistics are kept for witness waiting times in the magistrates courts. In April 1994 the Crown Prosecution Service commenced a national survey of witness waiting times in the Crown court. The survey does not capture information about waiting times for professional witnesses, expert witnesses and police officers. The results for the first six months of the survey show that, for a random sample of cases 55.2 per cent. of witnesses had to wait for more than two hours at court before giving evidence.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Attorney-General what percentage of prosecution witnesses do not currently receive their expenses within 10 working days of the Crown Prosecution Service receiving their completed claim form.

The Attorney-General: The results of a sample survey carried out during the quarter ending September 1994 show that 20 per cent. of prosecution witnesses do not currently received their expenses within 10 working days of the Crown Prosecution Service receiving their completed claim.

Brian Patchett

Mr. Allason: To ask the Attorney-General what international arrest warrant or any extradition proceedings are outstanding on Brian Patchett, formally of the Intelligence Corps.

Mr. Maclean: I have been asked to reply.

There is no record of an international arrest warrant or extradition proceedings against Mr. Patchett.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Ministerial Train Journeys

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many train journeys of one hour's duration or more he has made in Britain in 1994 in the course of his official duties.

Mr. Waldegrave: I and my predecessor have made a total of 33 such train journeys.

Beef

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in which countries the tins of beef from the intervention stores and distributed free of charge by registered charities were manufactured.

Mr. Jack: The processing and canning of beef from United Kingdom intervention stocks for distribution under the EC surplus food scheme are carried out in England, Scotland and Northern Ireland.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Trend: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether all 1994 autumn environmentally sensitive area and farm woodland premium scheme payments were made in accordance with targets published in "Commitment to Service"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Short delays occurred in making payments made under both these schemes this year. These arose because of the need to accommodate changes in the way part of the national expenditure under the schemes is reimbursed by the European Community.

Reimbursement from the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund now comes under the guarantee section, rather than the guidance section as was previously the case. It has to be reclaimed by member states from the European Community in the month in which it makes the payments to farmers. When reimbursement was claimed from the guidance section, payments were made annually to member states, in arrears.

Payments under both the environmentally sensitive area and farm woodland premium schemes are normally made to farmers during October. The EC budget year starts on 16 October. This means that payments made in October would fall, unpredictably, within two financial years, leading to budgetary and accounting problems. To avoid this, all payments in 1994 under both schemes were delayed slightly, so that they all took place after 16 October. This has meant that the targets published in "Commitment to Service" could not be met.

Payments have been made as soon as practicable under the new arrangements. Revised "Commitment to Service" targets, taking account of these changes, will be published shortly.

Diagnostic Social and Market Research Ltd.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the cost of the research work being undertaken by Diagnostic Social and Market Research Ltd.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 19 December 1994]: The cost of the work undertaken by Diagnostic Social and Market Research Ltd. to evaluate the results of the MAFF exhibition at the national history museum was £9,106, including charges made by the Central Office of Information.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what involvement he had in the drawing up of questions by Diagnostics Social and Market Research Ltd. at his Department's exhibitions at the natural history museum.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 19 December 1994]: None. The market research was commissioned by MAFF, via the Central Office of Information, to evaluate the effectiveness of its natural history museum exhibition and to assist with future planning. The questions were draw up by Diagnostics Social and Market Research Ltd. based on a brief provided by MAFF's information division and COI's market research department.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what use is to be made of the data collected on behalf of his Department by Diagnostics Social and Market Research Ltd. at his Department's exhibition at the natural history museum.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 19 December 1994]: The data collected by Diagnostics Social and Market Research Ltd. in connection with the MAFF exhibition at the natural history museum will be used to evaluate the effectiveness of the exhibition and to assist with planning of future publicity on the environment.

Pig Farming

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the state and prospects of the British pig farming industry.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 19 December 1994]: British pig producers, like those in most other European countries, have suffered a long period of low prices and poor profitability. The pig cycle, whereby good profitability leads to herd expansion, increased supplies and ultimately falling producer prices, is characteristic of the industry which relies on the marketplace for its returns. The most recent trough in the cycle has been longer lasting than anyone in the industry expected. However, the signs are that supply is slowly reducing across Europe and we expect to see improvements in producer profitability in 1995. As my hon. Friend explained in the debate on the pig industry on 15 December, Official Report, columns 1189–93, it is important that our industry works to distinguish British pigmeat from that of our competitors on the grounds of high quality and welfare standards in order to help boost its prospects for the future.

Agricultural Wages Board

Mr. Trend: To ask the Minster of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has reached a decision on the future of the Agricultural Wages Board for England and Wales: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have now completed our consideration of the views expressed during the consultation period on the operation of the Agricultural Wages Board for England and Wales. We have also had an opportunity to consider the changes to the wages order that the AWB has proposed in response to the judicial review action initiated by the Transport and General Workers Union. It is clear from the responses to consultation that there is wide acceptance, from both sides of the agricultural industry, of the present arrangements. We do not therefore currently intend to change the existing statutory framework. However, since the Government believe that statutory wage fixing arrangements can introduce inflexibilities which prevent rather than encourage job creation, we shall continue to keep the future existence of the AWB under close review.

National Rivers Authority

Mr. Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has had, and what meetings or contacts his officials have had, with the National Rivers Authority regarding measures to avoid flooding of farmland on the Somerset levels this winter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: I wrote to my hon. Friend on 9 December in response to his representations on behalf of a constituent. MAFF officials are in regular contact with National Rivers Authority officers on flood defence and water level management issues in the Somerset levels. Operational responsibility rests with the National Rivers Authority and the internal drainage boards in the areas concerned.

North Sea

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list the proposed agenda for the 1995 North Sea ministerial conference, indicating in respect of each agenda item whether or not a draft declaration has been prepared; and whether an annexe of detailed follow-up actions will be included or is being prepared;

(2) whether the North Sea ministerial declaration on fisheries is to include an annexe outlining detailed actions on fisheries, including the control of industrial fishing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I have been asked to reply.

The agenda for the fourth international conference for the protection of the north sea, to be held in Esbjerg, Denmark next June, will be determined by those participating in the light of the work being done by officials at the various preparatory meetings. It is too early yet to say what the agenda will be, but it seems likely that the effect of fisheries on the marine environment will be included, in view of the recommendations on this subject in the quality status report on the North sea published last March. The declaration that can be expected to result from the conference will be determined by the Ministers participating in it: it is therefore too early to forecast what form it will take, as much preparatory work remains to be done.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Manufacturing

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will show, for each year since 1970, the net average capital employed in manufacturing in terms of 1993 prices, together with a breakdown showing the corresponding figures for textiles, basic metals and metal products, machinery and equipment, and road motor vehicles.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Figures on net average capital employed in manufacturing are not available in 1993 prices and a breakdown of the manufacturing sector is also not available.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the information in the Central Statistical Office "First Release" (94)205 on the profitability of United Kingdom manufacturing companies, in 1993 and between 1988 and 1990; and to what extent the change was accounted for by a change in profitability of the principal import-competing and export industries.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Profitability is now rising again, having fallen during the recession from the peak levels of the late 1980s. Estimates of profitability contained in the Central Statistical Office "First Release" (94)205 are not available for principal import-competing and export industries.

Special Advisers

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement regarding his Department's expenditure on special advisers for each of the last three financial years, and for the financial year 1979–80.

Mr. Heseltine: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary on 19 December, Official Report, column 937.

Imports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment Her Majesty's Government have made of the effects of increases in the price of imported goods.

Mr. Needham: Import prices impact on the economy in a number of ways. The Government's assessment of economic developments and prospects, published in chapter 3 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report", took into account all relevant factors, including the prices of imported goods.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his estimate for each line of the import figure corresponding to exports, as set out in table 2.1 for the 1994 edition of the United Kingdom national accounts.

Mr. Needham: The answer is in the table.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the Government's policy to increase the share of imports in the United Kingdom market for non-food manufactures; and what was the figure for import penetration in (a) 1973, (b) 1979 and (c) at the latest available date.

Mr. Needham: It is not the Government's policy to increase the share of imports in the United Kingdom market for non-food manufactures. The information requested can be compiled only at disproportionate cost.

Aid Programmes

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list he direct and indirect aid programme offered by the Governments of the United Kingdom, United States of America, France, Germany and Japan to their space and aerospace industries; and if he will make a statement on how such programmes will be affected by the recent general agreement on tariffs and trade.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The estimated outturn in 1994–95 for the United Kingdom on indirect support for the civil aerospace industry is £21.6 million and direct support is £2 million. The published information on the French budget indicates that in 1994–95 there is funding for indirect supports of around FF400 million and direct support of about FF1500 million. Similarly for Germany, the published information shows indirect supports of about DM100 million and direct support of around DM200 million in 1994–95.

The approved civil aeronautics budget for NASA for 1994 is $1.02 billion; a further $1 billion has been allocated for the provision of aeronautics facilities. This does not include expenditure by other departments with direct or indirect benefits for civil aerospace manufacturers, for which no easily obtainable figure is available. Comparable figures for Japanese aeronautics expenditure are nor readily available.

Civil space expenditure in the current financial year—1994–95—is as follows:

Country	Amount (£ million)
United Kingdom	181
France	926
Germany	633

Comparable figures for the United States and Japan are not available.

Commercially published information indicates that the comparison between space expenditure in 1993 is as follows:

Country	Amount ($ million)
United Kingdom	257
France	2,009
Germany	1,052
United States of America	28,712
Japan	1,896

Light Commercial Vehicles

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the change in (a) output and employment in the light commercial vehicle industry since 1973, 1979 and 1989, (b) the volume of imports and exports since 1973, 1979 and 1989 and (c) import penetration since 1973, 1979 and 1989; and what is his estimate of the current margin of spare capacity in the United Kingdom industry.

Mr. Needham: Employment in the manufacture of light commercial vehicles is not recorded separately in official statistics. Details of United Kingdom production, trade and registrations of light commercial vehicles are available in the annual publication "Motor Industry of Great Britain, World Automotive Statistics", copies of which are available in the Library of the House. No estimate of the current margin of spare capacity, if any, is readily available.

Trade Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the change in (a) output and employment, (b) volume of imports and exports and (c) import penetration in (i) road passenger vehicles, (ii) commercial shipbuilding, (iii) commercial aircraft, (iv) railway vehicle, (v) motor car, (vi) heavy commercial vehicle, (vii) other non-metallic products, (viii) basic metal and metal products, (ix) transport and equipment, (x) clothing, (xi) machine and equipment and (xii) other manufacturing industries since (1) 1973, (2) 1979 and (3) 1989; and what is his estimate of the current margin of spare capacity in those industries in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Needham: Official information for the variables requested is not readily available by the categories listed. Some information, by broad industry sectors, is available in Central Statistical Office publications available in the Library of the House. Series for import penetration are not available. My Department has made no estimates of spare capacity in United Kingdom industry.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board Trade what was (a) the balance of visible trade with the EEC in the first nine months of this year and (b) the balance in the first nine months of 1992.

Mr. Needham: The information is available from the central shared database, access to which is available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the change in (a) output and employment in the intermediate materials goods industries, (b) the volume of imports and exports and (c) the increase of import penetration since 1973, 1979 and 1989; and what is his estimate of the current margin of spare capacity in the United Kingdom industry.

Mr. Needham: It is not possible to split employment in the manufacturing industries into that which is specifically for the production of intermediate goods. The change in output for intermediate goods is available from data in the index of production. This and the trade data are on the CSO central shared database, which is available in the Library of the House. A series for import penetration is not available. My Department has made no estimate of spare capacity in United Kingdom Industry.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the change in (a) output and employment in the investment goods industries, (b) changes in the volume of imports, (c) the change in the level of import penetration since (i) 1973, (ii) 1979 and (iii) the second quarter of 1990; and what is his estimate of the current margin of spare capacity in United Kingdom industry.

Mr. Needham: It is not possible to split employment in the manufacturing industries into that which is specifically for the production of investment goods. The change in output for investment goods is available from data in the index of production. This and the trade data are on the CSO central shared database which is available in the Library of the House. A series for import penetration is not available. My Department has made no estimate of spare capacity in United Kingdom industry.

Mineworkers Pension Scheme

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will investigate the withdrawal by Apedale Hall Ltd., Ashbourne, Derbyshire, of miners from the mineworkers pension scheme before vesting day.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The participation of a private sector small-mine licensee in the mineworkers pension scheme is a matter for the company and the scheme.

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the transfer of miners' pensions from the mineworkers pension scheme to the new industry-wide scheme.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There will be no general transfer of miners' past service pension entitlements from the mineworkers pension scheme to the new industry-wide mineworkers pension scheme. Entitlements of pensioners and deferred pensioners from service before privatisation will remain in the mineworkers pension scheme, in which pension increases linked to the retail prices index are now guaranteed by Government. Contributing members of the mineworkers pension scheme will have the right at privatisation to transfer to the industry-wide scheme for pension accruals from future employment in the coal industry and can choose either to leave their accrued rights from past service in the mineworkers pension scheme or to transfer them to the new scheme.

Mr. Etherington: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will investigate the sending of letters dated 11, 17 and 24 November to the National Union of Mineworkers requesting nominations for trustees for the new industry-wide mineworkers pension scheme in the same parcel of documents; and what was the deadline for nominations.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The National Union of Mineworkers was invited to nominate trustee directors for the industry-wide mineworkers pension scheme in a letter dated 10 November and delivered by hand the next day. Nominations were requested by 30 November. Further letters relating to the scheme arrangements were sent separately as dated. I understand that the NUM nominated three trustee directors at the earliest possible moment after the meeting of its executive on 8 December.

Pit Closures

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the British Coal pits which have closed since October 1992, with the date of closure and number of staff involved.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Since October 1992, British Coal has decided that it does not itself wish to keep in operation 34 pits. Silverwood colliery is currently operating but its closure has been agreed. Of the 34 pits, eight—Clipstone, Rossington, Calverton, Trentham, Markham Main, Silverdale, Betws and Hatfield—have reopened under lease and licence to the private sector and Annesley, Ellington and Tower collieries are subject to privatisation bids.

The 34 pits, the dates they ceased coal production and their industrial work force in October 1992 are given in the table:

Nuclear Liabilities

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 9 December, Official Report, column 389, what payments have so far been made by his Department to the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority or British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. in respect of the agreements on nuclear liabilities outlined, and the payment estimated to be made within the public expenditure plans for the next three years.

Mr. Charles Wardle: UKAEA's decommissioning and radioactive waste management operations programme—DRAWMOPS—was established in April 1986. Between that date and the end of the financial year 1993–94 a total of £600 million was paid to UKAEA, by the Department of Energy and DTI, in respect of the nuclear liabilities on UKAEA and BNFL sites for which the Department has accepted responsibility.

Estimates which include DRAWMOPS costs for 1994–95 were published in Cm 2504. The actual amount paid in the financial year 1994–95 will not be settled until the year end. The amounts to be included in the Department's public expenditure plans for the years 1995–96 to 1997–98 will be included in the Department's estimates, which are due to be published in March 1995.

Exports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the extent of profiteering by United Kingdom exporters since December 1992.

Mr. Needham: None. It is greatly to the credit of United Kingdom exporters that they have been achieving record levels of exports in highly competitive world markets.

Mercury

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had with Mercury concerning its decision no longer to operate public phone boxes.

Mr. Ian Taylor: My Department has had discussions with Mercury about the future direction of its business. The licensing implications of Mercury's decision no longer to operate public phone boxes are a matter for the Office of Telecommunications.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade who will bear the cost of (a) removing Mercury public phone boxes and (b) reinstating the pavement or other place to its previous condition.

Mr. Ian Taylor: Under the New Works and Street Works Act 1991, and the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1988 as amended, these costs will be a matter for Mercury Communications Ltd.

Data Protection Directive

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the outcome of last week's Council of Ministers' meeting that discussed the proposed EC directive on data protection; and if he will undertake that Her Majesty's Government will oppose the directive unless it respects the principle of subsidiarity.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The Internal Market Council on 8 December made some improvements to the proposed directive, including, in particular, the extension from 10 to 12 years of the period within which existing manual records must be brought into compliance with the requirements of the directive. Improvements were made to the provisions which deal with research and statistics, and with the media. The Council identified a number of key issues requiring further discussion and no attempt was made to seek a common position. My right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary is in the lead on this subject. In the continuing consideration of the draft directive we shall seek the best outcome for the United Kingdom within the constraints of qualified majority voting procedures.

Jordan (Exports)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether exports to Jordan carried out under the terms of the memoranda of understanding between the Governments of Jordan and of Britain signed in 1985 and 1989 were required to have end user certificates.

Mr. Needham: It is not Her Majesty's Government practice to comment on detailed matters concerning individual defence exports. However, certain information about exports made under the Jordan defence package has been made public during Sir Richard Scott's enquiry. Exceptionally, therefore, I am able to say that the memoranda of understanding required that no equipment exported to Jordan would be sold or disposed of without the prior written agreement of Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether the export licences issued for exports under the 1979, 1985 and 1989 memoranda of understanding between the Governments of the United Kingdom and of Jordan were referred of the interdepartmental committee.

Mr. Needham: The interdepartmental committee to which I believe the hon. Gentleman refers examines export licence applications to Iran—and previously to both Iran and Iraq. No licence applications for Jordan are copied to the IDC. Where appropriate, applications for export licences are copied to both MOD and FCO for their advice.

British Gas

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what discussions he has had with the regulator of the gas industry about British Gas's policy on direct debit discounts to customers;

(2) what discussions he has had with the regulator of British Gas over the proposed differential pricing as it affects claimants and pensioners.

Mr. Eggar: None. Gas price changes are a matter for the independent regulator, the Office of Gas Supply. The Director General of Gas Supply has confirmed that the discount tariff, for those customers paying by direct debit, meets the terms of the "tariff formula" which limits the prices which British Gas can charge to tariff customers and is within the provisions of section 14(3) of the Gas Act 1986 which relate to undue discrimination against any group of consumers.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received on the declared policy of British Gas to reward those customers who pay by direct debit and penalise those who pay by other means.

Mr. Eggar: A substantial number of written representations have been received by my Department from gas consumers and their Members of Parliament about British Gas's discount tariff which is available to those customers paying by direct debit.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the proposed price per therm for (a) those British Gas customers who pay by direct debit and (b) those who pay by other means; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: British Gas's tariffs will be:

(a) 1.433p per kilowatt hour for those customers paying by direct debit.

(b) 1.520p per kilowatt hour for customers who pay by other means.

Note: British Gas's prices are now quoted in the metric unit kWh rather than therms.

The standing charge will be 10.10p per day for customers on the discount tariff and 10.39p per day for standard tariff customers. The new prices will be introduced on 1 January 1995.

United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to put the privatisation of all aspects of UKAEA on a statutory basis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: A Bill to privatise the commercial activities of UKAEA was announced in the Queen's Speech. Other initiatives recently announced by UKAEA—for example, the sale of the facilities services division—are being carried out within the authority's powers under existing legislation.

Fireworks

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will take steps to require all advertisements for fireworks to indicate (a) the minimum age of persons to whom fireworks can be sold and (b) a warning on the dangers of fireworks, both to be printed in letters equal to the largest on the advertisement.

Mr. Ian Taylor: My Department will raise this during discussions early next year with the fireworks industry in preparation for our annual firework safety campaign.

Public Telephones (Unauthorised Display)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 15 December, Official Report, column 752, what assessment he has made of an appropriate remedy for unauthorised advertisements in public telephone boxes; if he will visit a telephone box; and what obstacles inhibit him from proposing an effective remedy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Taylor: As I explained in the answer I gave to my hon. Friend on 8 December, Official Report, column 296, I do not regard it as appropriate to seek to regulate the placing of advertisements in unauthorised places through telecommunications legislation. If my hon. Friend wishes to propose a simple and effective remedy to the concerns he has raised, my hon. Friends and I in other relevant Departments would be happy to consider this, and examine any obstacles which might inhibit action. I have visited telephone boxes, to make respectable phone calls.

Regional Assistance

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the amounts of regional and similar financial assistance going to (a) Scotland, (b) Wales and (c) the area covered by the counties of Cornwall, Devon and Somerset in each year since 1979.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information on regional financial assistance to Scotland and Wales was given in the Official Report, columns 675-78, of 5 June 1992. More recent information has been published in the latest edition of "Regional Trends", which is available in the Library of the House.

Information by county is available only at disproportionate cost.

German Packaging Ordinance

Mr. Thomason: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the reasons for the European Commission's delay in starting infringement proceedings against Germany over its packaging ordinance; and if he will urge the Commission to act swiftly.

Mr. Charles Wardle: We have urged the Commission to follow up swiftly its investigation of the German packaging ordinance.

In the longer term, the difficulties caused by unilateral regulations of this kind should be alleviated by the recently adopted packaging and packaging waste directive.

Nuclear Materials Trafficking

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will place in the Library a report of the expert proposals to the International Atomic Energy Agency conference on control of trafficking in nuclear materials held on 2 and 3 November;

(2) if he will make a statement on the proposals of the secretariat of the International Atomic Energy Agency on nuclear materials trafficking; and if he will list each proposal, together with the response of Her Majesty's Government to those proposals.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The IAEA meeting on illicit trafficking held in Vienna on 2 and 3 November was called by the director general of the IAEA in response to a resolution of the IAEA general conference in September 1994.

There was no official report produced by the expert's meeting in November but the director general drew on the views expressed by the experts in preparing a report for the board in December. This proposed that the agency should:

(i) intensify its activities in those areas in which it is already supporting member states in preventing and responding to illicit trafficking i.e.:

—assistance with physical protection measures;

—assistance in improvement of state systems of accounting control; and —assistance with analysing confiscated nuclear materials

ii) develop a database of incidents of illicit trafficking

iii) intensify assistance to member states to strengthen their radiation safety infrastructure, and

iv) continue to examine activities relating to incidents of illicit trafficking.

The board received these proposals favourably and will resume its discussions of the report at its meeting in March. The Government will continue to support proposals for action which will effectively reduce the risks of illicit trafficking. In their view the agency's role in the area of physical protection should be as a focal point and a co-ordinator of bilateral activities and throughout the agency's activities clear priority should be given to work relating to safeguardable nuclear material.

Smoke Detectors

Mr. Garrett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to ensure that smoke detectors exceeding the legal limit for the unapproved disposal of radioactive material are returned to the manufacturer.

Mr. Ian Taylor: My Department has no present plans to control the disposal of smoke detectors. Disposal of radioactive material is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution, who have the necessary regulatory powers under the Radioactive Substances Act 1993.

Mr. Garrett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many smoke detectors of the ionising type have been imported in each of the last five years; and from which countries.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The information requested is not available since the product in question is not an identifiable commodity within the standard international trade classification.

British Coal

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the value of British Coal's land and property holdings; how far this value will be reduced by liabilities and contamination; what nature of disposal into the private sector is proposed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The various options for the future of British Coal's non-operational property portfolio are currently being considered by British Coal, in consultation with the Government. No decisions have been taken.

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on progress in discussions with the preferred bidders for the regional coal companies in the privatisation of the mining business of British Coal.

Mr. Eggar [pursuant to his reply, 2 December 1994, c. 939-40]: The Government have agreed with Celtic Energy, subject to contract, that Celtic will acquire the South Wales Coal company for £94.5 million; £88.4 million would be payable at completion. Of the balance, £4.9 million would be payable with interest in instalments over the three following years. Final payment of £1.2 million is expected in two instalments, with interest, in 1999 and 2000.

The bid price has been adjusted as envisaged in the information memorandum. The adjustments reflect developments since tenders were submitted in September 1994 or information which was not available at the time. The main adjustments relate to changes in the expected level of stocks, and certain liabilities and price information disclosed after bids were submitted. Celtic's bid price following these adjustments still clearly represents best value for money.

The Department will shortly lay a minute before the House describing certain limited warranties and indemnities which it proposed to give to Celtic Energy.

The acquisition price would also be subject to certain technical adjustments following completion to take account of differences between the value of certain assets and liabilities as estimated at signature of the acquisition arrangement and the corresponding value to be established at completion.

Changing Tack Programme

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to restart the regional changing tack seminars on defence diversification; and if he will make a statement on the changing tack programme.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Government have no plans to restart the changing tack seminar programme. The changing tack manual "New Perspectives for Defence Suppliers" remains available from the Department of Trade and Industry.

Ian Greer Associates

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on how many occasions he or his Ministers met representatives of Ian Greer Associates in the last week to discuss matters relating to its clients' interests.

Mr. Heseltine: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave on 16 December, Official Report, column 851.

Biological and Chemical Warfare

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list all the quantities of biological and chemical warfare weapons material and precursors that have been imported from the mainland of Europe to the United Kingdom for storage or destruction.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is not available.

Telecommunications Licences

Mr. Congdon: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many telecommunications licences have been granted since the duopoly review in 1991.

Mr. Ian Taylor: I have today granted licences to Concert—the joint venture between BT and Microwave Communications International, MCI—and AT and T. This brings the number of licences granted since the end of the telecommunications duopoly to 60.

The privatisation and liberalisation of telecommunications in this country have made the UK one of the most advanced countries in the world in terms of the availability of modern, competitive telecommunication services. The services that Concert and AT and T plan to provide under these new licences will further boost competition in the international simple resale market, which is already one of the most exciting sectors in telecommunications. Prices are falling for international calls, benefiting both business and individuals.

Companies House

Mr. Congdon: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the future of the Companies House agency.

Mr. Heseltine: The Department of Trade and Industry is looking at the scope for maximising private sector involvement in its work across the range of its activities.

On 19 July 1994, Official Report, column 179, I reported to the House that my Department had appointed consultants to explore further with the market how best to contract out most of the services of Companies House; and to consider whether and, if so, how far Companies House should withdraw from those activities where it might compete with other parts of the business information industry. I have now considered SRU Ltd's report, copies of which have been placed in the House Library—edited to omit commercially sensitive information.

The object of the review of the future of Companies House has been to consider how best to build on its excellent record of improvements in efficiency, value for money and standards of service. I believe that this can best be achieved by closer involvement of the private sector in the running of Companies House activities.

The business information industry is in the early stages of major technological change. In any plan for the future of Companies House, it will be important for it to be able to meet the changing needs of the market. I therefore propose to proceed with contractorisation on a progressive basis. This will involve Companies House—which will remain an executive agency—working in partnership with the private sector, both customers and suppliers, to develop and deliver new technology. At the same time, it will work through a programme of contracting out a range of activities, including functions carried out by the London and Edinburgh offices. It will be an essential part of any contracts that the existing high standards of service provided by Companies House should continue to be improved. Once the new technology is in place, I would expect to look again at the scope for further contracting out.

It is my intention to lay an order under the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994 early next year to enable the contracting out of the relevant CH functions.

The SRU report also concludes that the best way to maximise the exploitation of the information held in Companies House is for it to continue to provide as wide a range of access as possible to the raw data, leaving it to the rest of the business information industry to exploit that information through analysis, assessment, etcetera. I agree with this conclusion.

Electricity

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether, pursuant to his answer of 1 December, Official Report, column 807, he has now made a decision on any further amendments to the Electricity (Class Exemptions from the Requirement for a Licence) Order 1990.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Following consultation with the electricity industry and others, I have decided that the Electricity (Class Exemptions from the Requirement for a Licence) Order 1990 should be amended to make it clear that on-site generators who belong to the electricity pool may be exempt from the requirement for a supply licence where they supply qualifying consumers on the same site through a distribution or transmission system belonging to a third party.

I must make it clear that these on-site generators will have to meet all of the criteria for exemption that are presently described in this order, and that this amendment will not alter the present arrangements for trading electricity through the electricity pool.

I will lay an order bringing this amendment—and the extension of transitional exemptions, which I announced on 1 December—into effect early next year.

Non-fossil Fuels

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to announce the details of the third renewables non-fossil fuel obligation order; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I have today laid before Parliament an order requiring the regional electricity companies in England and Wales to make arrangements to secure 626.92 MW of new electricity generating capacity from a range of renewable energy sources. This is the third renewables order under the non-fossil fuel arrangements—widely known as NFFO3—and covers the period 1 April 1995 to 31 March 2014.

The prime purpose of this third renewable order is to create an initial market for those renewables-based electricity generation technologies which have the prospect, in the not-too-distant future, of competing against conventional generation technologies in the open market for electricity. In addition to market enablement, it will contribute towards the Government's broad aim of working towards 1,500 MW of new renewables-based generation capacity in the United Kingdom by the year 2000, thereby assisting the Government in meeting their Rio commitment of returning United Kingdom emissions of carbon dioxide to 1990 levels by same year. NFFO3 will also contribute to the policy objectives of establishing diverse, secure and sustainable energy supplies and encouraging the development of internationally competitive renewable energy industries.

I am pleased with the response to the tender invitation, which resulted in 520 firm bids coming forward, for a total of some 2,500 MW of capacity. The Government are therefore able to set an order covering technology bands previously supported under the first and second orders and showing clear convergence towards the market price for electricity, while also enabling a number of projects using energy crops and agricultural and forestry wastes to come forward. I understand the regional electricity companies have met their obligations arising from this NFFO3 order by signing collective contracts for 141 projects. I understand also that letters of notification will be issued shortly to all tenderers bidding into NFFO3.

Successful bidders will now need to obtain planning permission for their projects—if they have not already done so. The award of a NFFO contract is totally without prejudice to the planning approval process, which must be carried out in the normal way. Developers will also need to secure firm fuel supply contracts where this is relevant. For these reasons therefore, among others, the Government expect that around 300 to 400 MW of the 627 MW contracted capacity are likely to go forward to commissioning. The order provides for the obligation placed on the RECs to be reduced to reflect non-commissioning of projects. To the extent that it appears in later years that the outturn will be outside this range, the Government would expect to take that into account in setting the policy for the further orders foreshadowed last year in my Department's "Renewable Energy Bulletin No. 5".

The following table shows the breakdown of contracted capacity under the obligation, according to technology band, together with the number of contracts signed, the lowest price to be paid for the electricity produced, the average price paid—weighted according to the expected output from each project—and the marginal highest price paid.

Summary of third renewables order (NFFO—3)

Detailed consultations have taken place throughout the NFFO3 process, from the formulation of initial plans for the third order, to the decision on the shape and size of the order—the latter taking account of the cost and quality of bids received. The Government acknowledge the contribution of all those bodies which have been involved in many ways in the making of this order. In particular, it welcomes the advice from the Director General of Electricity Supply, as a contribution to the debate and the perspective it brings.

The Government's overall consideration has been to strike a balance between the degree of market stimulation brought forward through the obligation and the cost to the customer. The difference between the "pool price" for electricity and the price paid to the generator for electricity supplied under NFFO contracts is funded through the fossil fuel levy, which is applied to sales of electricity to the final customer. If contracted projects do not go forward to commissioning and generation, then the cost to the fossil fuel levy will reduce accordingly. The Government have also considered the balance between support for renewables technologies covered by previous orders and support for newer renewables technologies. The Government are determined to work towards convergence between the price for electricity from renewables and the open market price, and believe that the inclusion of promising newer technologies in NFFO3 is the most likely way to achieve this for these technologies.

The Government believe that, in addition to the general prospects for the utilisation of agricultural and forestry wastes, there is considerable long-term potential for short-rotation coppice as an energy crop. However, the commercial exploitation of coppicing will require substantial reductions in costs through experience and optimisation of both the fuel supply chain and the conversion technology. I believe, therefore, that the time is now ripe to include within NFFO a tranche of capacity based on biomass gasification, which is both technically efficient and offers the prospect of significant economies of scale and replication. In addition, I am pleased to announce that, as a contribution to the process of optimising the production of coppice wood, the Government have awarded a £500,000 contract to the Forestry Commission research division for coppice field trials over the whole of the United Kingdom, bringing the total DTI R and D support in this area to £2 million per year.

The Government have also reflected on how best to continue the stimulus given to wind power. The Government consider that they should distinguish between wind farms and smaller projects involving single individual turbines or small clusters of them—perhaps community based and serving a different market. They expect that only 20 or so of the wind farms will commission, having regard to factors such as the need for planning permission referred to. In addition, the Government have noted that one developer was responsible for a large number of the bids for wind farms put forward under NFFO3. By holding this developer to no more than 10 projects, the Government have been able to secure increased diversity of supply within the wind band. At this early stage in the development of the market for wind, the Government believe that this diversity is desirable, in order not to lose the potential benefits that may arise from a spread of players in this field.

I welcome the publication in late November of the "Best Practice Guidelines for Wind Energy Development" by the British Wind Energy Association. This is a constructive step, representing a responsible approach, which should ensure that wind projects are appropriately sited. I welcome also the announcement this morning by "The Wind Fund plc" of its intention to open an investment fund to the public in January 1995, which will offer an opportunity to individuals to invest in wind projects—particularly smaller projects—and possibly other renewable energy schemes. This is a further positive step forward in bringing renewable energy projects from conception to commissioning and generation, and in part results from research funded by the DTI.

With the conclusion of this third round of bidding, it is important to enter a period of analysis, reflection and full consultation, so that lessons can be fully learned from NFFO3, before contemplating options for the size and shape of any future order—or the bidding process which might be employed. Nevertheless, the Government hope that a fourth order can be announced in 1995, to come into effect in 1996. Views on the future of NFFO would be welcome, preferably expressed collectively by the relevant association or trade body.

NFFO is a success, with over 340 MW of capacity already operational under NFFO1 and NFFO2 contracts, and this third order is expected to double that capacity. NFFO has an international reputation, as a process that works, stimulating the market and manufacturing industry. By continuing our policy, we have high expectations of enabling a significant contribution to electricity generation—at market prices—from renewable sources of energy in the medium and longer term.

Statutory Bodies

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list all those statutory bodies which must, within their statutory remit, protect the interests of consumers.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 16 December 1994]: The following statutory bodies have a general responsibility for the interests of consumers, or classes of consumers, of the industries which they shadow:

Domestic Coal Consumers Council—section 4 of the Coal Industry Nationalisation Act 1946;

Post Office Users National Council and the Country Councils for Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland—section 14 of the Post Office Act 1969;

Advisory committees on telecommunications for England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland and the advisory bodies on telecommunications matters affecting small businesses, and persons who are disabled or of pensionable age—section 54 of the Telecommunications Act 1984;

Gas Consumers Council—section 2 of the Gas Act 1986;

Central Rail Users Consultative Committee and eight rail users consultative committees—section 77 of the Railways Act 1993;

London regional passengers committee—section 40 of the London Regional Transport Act 1984.

In addition, the Director General of Fair Trading; the Director General of Telecommunications; the Director General of Gas Supply; the Director General of Electricity Supply; the Director General of Water Services; and the Rail Regulator have specific responsibility for promoting and/or protecting the interests of consumers/customers. The Director General for Electricity Supply is required to appoint consumers' committees and the Director General of Water Services to appoint customer services committees.

Coal

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will set out the total subsidy paid for additional deep-mined coal as outlined in "Prospects for Coal"; how many tonnes of coal this involves; and how many individual payments have been made.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 16 December 1994]: To date, the Department has paid £6,109,510 of subsidy covering the sale of almost 600,000 tonnes of additional coal.

The Department has made seven offers of subsidy so far. Under the terms of each offer, claims for payment are made on the basis of actual deliveries made. To date, the Department has made 15 such individual payments.

Russian Military Design Bureaux

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consultation he has had with his United States counterparts in the Department of Commerce and Department of Energy over the reasons for the United States Government's refusal to allow the direct commercial trading by United States private companies with the Russian military design bureaux and production associations; and if he will review the present permissive arrangements in the United Kingdom on the direct commercial agreements by British companies with military design bureaux and production associations in Russia and other states of the former Soviet Union.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 16 December 1994]: I am not aware of any such contacts by members of my Department and I do not intend to instigate a review. Overseas trading arrangements of British companies are a matter for their own commercial judgment subject only to export control procedures where applicable.

Cuba

Mr. Parry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's trading relations with Cuba.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 16 December 1994]: Cuba is on the United Kingdom list of destinations for which export licence applications are subject to special licensing procedures. There are no United Kingdom restrictions on imports from Cuba which are not applied more generally against imports from all sources.

Subject to the above, the United Kingdom enjoys normal trading relations with Cuba, and the Government's policy is to encourage United Kingdom firms to exploit the growing civil market opportunities there.

I visited Cuba in September with a group of senior British business men to promote the development of trading relations, and initialled a bilateral investment promotion and protection agreement.

Arms Exports

Mr. MacShane: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) which Arab or middle east countries have been the subject of arms export licence refusals in 1993 on the grounds of internal oppression or regional security;

(2) which countries in Europe or the former Soviet Union have been the subject of arms export licence refusals in 1993 on the grounds of internal oppression or regional security;

(3) which countries in Asia have been the subject of arms export licence refusals in 1993 on the grounds of internal oppression or regional security.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answers 19 December 1994]: Export licence applications for arms may be refused for a number of reasons and these questions could only be answered at disproportionate cost. The annual report of the Export Control Organisation will, however, be available shortly and will give some details of licences refused by destination and classification of goods. A copy of that report will be placed in the Library of the House and I will also arrange for the hon. Member to receive a personal copy.

Research

Mr. Battle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what sum was spent by his Department on research in each of the last 10 years; what percentage this was of the total annual budget; what is the budget for the forthcoming year; what percentage this is of his total budget; and what additional new research is to be undertaken.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 13 December 1994]: The sums spent on research and development by the Department for the last 10 years were reported in the statistical supplement to the 1994 "Forward Look of Government-funded Science, Engineering and Technology". The expenditure on research and development and the percentage that this expenditure was of total departmental expenditure are given:

	R and D expenditure £ million	Percentage of total expenditure
1985–86	406.7	21.1
1986–87	555.3	20.3
1987–88	500.8	33.6
1988–89	504.6	23.3
1989–90	476.1	30.2
1990–91	462.6	29.5
1991–92	364.8	26.0
1992–93	350.8	26.6
1993–94	310.3	23.2
1994–95	245.0	17.8

Notes:

1. Figures include the Department of Energy.
2. The percentages are based on total central Government spend on trade and industry excluding nationalised industries financing requirements.
3. Figures for 1993–94 are estimated outturns.
4. Figures for 1994–95 are at provision.

The expenditure on research and development in the coming year has still to be determined, and will be reported in the statistical supplement to the 1995 "Forward Look".

The decline in the Department's spend on R and D over the period partly reflects the inclusion of net aerospace launch aid figures. In the first half of the period, launch aid payments far outstripped receipts. More recently, this situation has been reversed. There has also been a substantial reduction in expenditure on energy R and D, the principal factor in which has been the decision to withdraw from research on the prototype fast nuclear reactor at Dounreay.

Economic Development

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy that local authority economic development plans are held in regional Government offices.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: I have been asked to reply.

We see no need to introduce such a policy; local authorities that have prepared an economic development plan are required by statute to make the document available to representatives of the local business community and to such other persons as they consider it desirable to consult about their plan.

Water Authorities

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many executive and non-executive directors there were in each water authority in the year before privatisation; what was their aggregate remuneration; and what is their current number and aggregate remuneration, including share options and other incentive payments.

Mr. Atkins: I have been asked to reply.

Information about the numbers and remuneration of water authority chairmen and members in the year prior to privatisation can be found in "Public Bodies 1989", issued by the Cabinet Office, Office of Public Service and Science. A copy of this publication is available in the Library.

Information relating to the numbers and remuneration, share options and other incentive payments of current water company directors is published in the annual reports of individual companies. This information is not held centrally.

SCOTLAND

Empty Property

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to make use of his Department's empty residential property.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Office target for 1994–95 is to dispose of, or bring back into use, 60 out of an estimated total of 158 empty residential properties. The report of the task force on Government Departments' empty houses did not identify any problem affecting the Department which needed attention but we are committed to doing all we can to bring empty property back into constructive use. Sale or lease to a housing association for rent to those in housing need is one option to be considered for empty property, but the approach in each case will depend on local circumstances.

Roads

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many miles of motorway are currently (a) open, (b) under construction and (c) planned in Scotland either (i) as new motorway or (ii) as existing motorway being widened.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As at 30 November 1994 in Scotland there were 188 miles of trunk road motorway and a further 19 miles of non trunk motorway, the responsibility for which lies with the local authorities.

Twelve miles of new trunk road motorway are currently under construction with a further 30 miles planned. Four miles of non-trunk motorway are also planned.

Much of the motorway network constructed in the 1960s and 1970s is approaching the end of its structural life and will require major maintenance or reconstruction. Some of this work may involve widening.

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the parliamentary constituencies in which lies each scheme in his Department's national road programme.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is set out in the table for all those schemes costing over £3 million which either are under construction or were announced by my right hon. Friend on 19 May 1994 as expected to start before March 1997. Our future plans are, of course, subject to schemes satisfying the usual value for money criteria together with satisfactory completion of statutory procedures and the necessary preparatory work.

Scheme	Parliamentary constituency

Local Enterprise Companies

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to monitor the on-going composition of the boards of local enterprise companies, particularly in respect of such boards continuing to reflect a diverse business, community and geographic representation of the entire area covered; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: Local enterprise companies are required to ensure that at least two thirds of their boards of directors are chairmen, directors, chief executives or other top level managers within the private sector who either live or work within the local enterprise company's area of operation. Other board members must live within the local area. These requirements are placed on the local enterprise companies through their operating contracts with Scottish Enterprise and with Highlands and Islands Enterprise. Responsibility for contract compliance and monitoring rests with the enterprise bodies and I have therefore asked their chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Executive Search Agencies

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what use his Department has made of executive search agencies in filling vacancies within his Department and executive agencies administered by his Department during the last year; and how much these services have cost his Department.

Mr. Lang: My Department has made use of executive search agencies on two recruitment campaigns between 1 December 1993 and 30 November 1994. The total cost of these services was £69,912 including VAT. None of the executive agencies within my Department has made use of such services during the last year.

Geese

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what non-lethal methods of goose control are approved by his Ministry; and what measure he is taking to promote them.

Sir Hector Monro: Copies of the advisory leaflet "Wild Geese and Scottish Agriculture" are available at offices of the Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department and are issued to farmers who report problems associated with the presence of geese on their land. The leaflet provides information about various scaring devices including flags, scarecrows, gas guns and mechanically operated scarers.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are his reasons for the granting of a licence to a farmer on the Solway firth to kill barnacle geese; how many geese have so far been killed under licence on the Solway firth; and how many are permitted to be killed overall.

Sir Hector Monro: Licences were granted in January 1994 and October 1994 for the purpose of preventing serious damage to crops. In issuing licences the Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department takes into account the history of goose usage of an area, reports of goose numbers at particular times and carries out on-the-ground inspections. Account has also been taken of the outcome of a case in Dumfries sheriff court in which the farmer was acquitted on charges of killing geese without a licence.

Ten geese were reported killed under the licence issued in January and which expired in April. As at 15 December no geese had been killed under the current licence.

The licence is not subject to a bag limit but can be revoked at any time for example for non-compliance with the conditions attached to it.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to monitor the damage done to crops by geese in the Solway firth; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: The Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department makes inspections at approximately fortnightly intervals of the farm on the Solway firth where a licence is in operation. The department also inspects other farms where numerous geese have been reported and which might be the subject of future applications for a licence.

Health Care International

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which Scottish health boards have contracted with the Health Care International hospital at Clydebank to treat patients from their area; how many patients were treated from each health board area; and what was the cost of the contracts to each of the health boards.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There have been six such contracts, the details of which are as follows:

	Patients
Lothian Health Board	17 (Cardiac)
Grampian Health Board	7 (Oral Surgery)
Grampian GP Fundholders	5 (Orthapaedics)
Shetland Islands Health Board	13 (Ophthalmic) 3 (Cardiac)
Ayrshire and Arran Health Board	1 (Vascular)
National Specialism Contract	10 (Cardiac)

Cost is a matter between the receivers and the health boards. However, in each case the contracts represented a saving to the national health service.

Homelessness

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what assessment he has made of the London rough sleepers initiative in forming Scottish Office policy for the homeless;

(2) what action he is proposing to meet the needs of homeless 16 and 17-year-olds;

(3) how much money the Scottish Office has spent in each of the last three years on its rooflessness initiative.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Scottish office policy on homelessness draws on a wide range of sources, including not only experience of initiatives elsewhere in the United Kingdom but reports directly prepared or commissioned in Scotland, for example, the 1993 Donnison report, "Young Homeless People in Scotland", and the 1994 report on the operation of the code of guidance on homelessness.

During the years 1991–92 to 1993–94, £50,000 per annum was made available to voluntary bodies under the rooflessness initiative. This programme has been followed by initiatives undertaken through voluntary bodies and by Scottish Office support for continuing projects.

Our main response to homelessness, including rooflessness, is made through support for local housing authorities, which have the primary statutory responsibility for tackling homelessness. A total of £29 million extra capital allocations were made available to housing authorities throughout Scotland during the period 1991 to 1994 for homelessness projects, many of which were for young homeless people, including those who were at risk of becoming roofless. We are also providing grants amounting to over £300,000 in 1994–95 for voluntary bodies that support homeless and roofless people, for example, the Bridges one door initiative in Edinburgh. The 1991 code of guidance on homelessness already advises that 16 to 17-year-olds may be vulnerable and hence in priority need.

Care in the Community

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will direct Scottish health boards (a) to ensure that every patient discharged from psychiatric units in their area has a care plan capable of being implemented and (b) to retain an adequate number of rehabilitation and long-stay psychiatric beds in their areas.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is for the clinicians to assess the individual needs of patients and for those assessed as likely to benefit from care in the community, to decide with the local authorities how that care and accommodation are to be organised. Where social care and health care needs have been identified, discharge from a psychiatric unit only occurs following a full multi-disciplinary assessment and the pre-placement of a comprehensive package of support services to meet the person's assessed needs.

As regards national health service long stay provision, it is for individual health boards to determine the care needs for this population and to purchase accordingly.

School Annexes

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what incentives or support his Department has offered to local authorities since 1977 to reduce and eventually eliminate the use of school annexes.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There has been no specific programme of support to local authorities for the elimination of the use of school annexes. However, the capital allocations for educational building have enabled authorities to undertake the extension or adaptation of main buildings to allow the withdrawal of annexes where they have considered that a priority.

Sex Abuse Crimes

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many crimes involving sex abuse involving young people under 21 years of age were recorded by each of the police forces in Scotland in each of the past five years; and how many people were found guilty of such offences.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is not available in the form requested. The tables give the number of sexual offences which by definition involve persons aged under 16 and, separately, those offences involving sexual abuse where the age of the victim is unknown.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not available.

Lothian Health Board

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the revenue and capital allocation to Lothian health board during each of the last three years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Details of Lothian health board's revenue and capital allocations for 1992–93, 1993–94 and 1994–95 are set out in the table.

£ million

Year	Revenue allocation	Capital allocation
1992–93	357.081	24.186
1993–94	363.716	11.879
1994–95	372.493	3.877

The basic revenue allocation shown is supplemented by funds to meet other services and costs, such as provision for AIDS, artificial limbs and appliance centres, breast cancer screening and, the additional cost of teaching.

NHS Expenditure

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the level of spending per head of population on family health service services in Scotland; and if his answer of 7 December, Official Report, columns 278-79, included such expenditure.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Family health services expenditure was included in my answer of 7 December to the hon. Gentleman. The information requested on family health services expenditure is set out in the table.

Truancy

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what initiatives his Department has taken since 1990 to tackle school truancy.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A number of initiatives have been taken aimed at focusing the attention of education authorities, schools and parents on the problem of truancy. These are:

A consultation paper "Action on Truancy in Scotland" issued in April 1991.

Two surveys of truancy in schools in June and November 1991, commissioned from the Scottish Council for Research in Education and published in 1992.

A study on "Links Between Truancy and Delinquency" commissioned from the MVA Consultancy and published in 1992.

Regulations made in July 1993 requiring the collection and publication of information on attendance, authorised absence and unauthorised absence by stage for Scottish schools.

A report by the Audit Unit of HM Inspectorate "Attendance, Truancy & Performance" issued in October 1993.

In the new year an audit unit report containing school-based information on attendance, and authorised and unauthorised absence will be issued. The Scottish Council for Research in Education has also been commissioned to investigate and report on the links between truancy and performance in primary and secondary schools and it will report in 1995. To assist schools in dealing with truancy a support pack called "The Truancy File" will be sent free to all Scottish schools.

School Sizes

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what research the Scottish Office Education Department has funded arising out of the Pack report's recommendation that the topic of best sizes of schools should be further studied.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: None.

Housing List Applications

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many applicants were waiting on the housing lists of each district council in each financial year since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Reliable information is not held centrally.

Trans-European Road Network

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to enable access to European funding for the Skye bridge approach roads following his decision to include the route from Glasgow to Uig, Isle of Skye, in the trans-European road network; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A decision by the European Commission and the Council of Ministers on proposed additions to the trans-European road network—TERN—including the route from Glasgow to Uig, Isle of Skye is expected early in 1995. Although a draft financial regulation, detailing the funding of TERN schemes, has yet to be approved, it is not intended to cover the retrospective funding of schemes.

Rents

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the average rent charged for (a) private sector tenancies, (b) district council tenancies, (c) development corporation tenancies and (d) Scottish Homes tenancies in each financial year since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The following table shows the average weekly unrebated rents for local authorities, new town development corporations and Scottish Homes and its predecessor, the Scottish Special Housing Association, since 1979–80. Comparable information on private sector rents is not held centrally.

Housing Waiting Lists

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many applicants were waiting on the housing lists of Scottish Homes in each financial year since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is a matter for Scottish Homes. I have asked its chairman, Sir James Mellon, to write to the hon. Member.

Disabled People

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he is now in a position to respond to the recommendations of the committee of inquiry into housing in Scotland for people with physical disabilities.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have written to Lord Ewing of Kirkford, welcoming the Ewing committee's report as a valuable contribution to the debate on housing in Scotland for disabled people, and setting out the Scottish Office's formal response to the committee's recommendations. The response is being placed in the Commons and Lords Libraries, and will be sent to all MPs sitting for Scottish constituencies, the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities, housing authorities, Scottish Homes and interested voluntary bodies, and the media. The main points of the response are as follows:

The Scottish Office will consult over 300 organisations early in the new year on amendments to building regulations governing access to new dwellings, including costs. This consultation paper will build on the comments received earlier this year on the topics to be covered in the amendments. New regulations have already been made on access to non-domestic buildings.

Scottish Homes has been asked to review the Scottish housing handbooks on housing for disabled people, and for elderly people. These will take account of barrier-free housing, which Scottish Homes is already encouraging.

Over £2.8 billion will be made available for housing investment over the next three years and there have been substantial increases in provision of specialist housing for physically disabled people since 1979.

Community care, including provision for physically disabled people, is now one of only four national priorities which housing authorities have been asked to address in their housing plans and output targets. It is also a priority for Scottish Homes, including grants to the voluntary and private sectors, and the care and repair scheme which helps disabled and elderly people to carry out repairs and adaptations to enable them to remain in their own home.

More generally, the circular entitled "Community Care—The Housing Dimension", which was issued by the Scottish Office on 9 August, emphasised the importance of co-operation between housing, social work and health bodies in planning, assessment of need, and housing management for physically disabled people and other community care client groups. This guidance and the introduction of housing plans and housing management plans, encompass and go beyond the committee's recommendations on co-ordination of provision for disabled people by housing authorities. The circular also sets out the respective responsibilities of health, social work and housing for adaptations, aids and equipment.

It is not possible to give absolute housing rights to disabled people, since their needs have to be considered in the light of costs, available resources and the priorities given to other groups. However, we will take account of their needs and aspirations in our plans, and will continue to support important particular rights, such as the right to be consulted on individual community care assessments. Scottish Homes is preparing a policy statement on housing action for disabled people which we hope will serve as an example for other providers.

Finally, we recognise the importance of information and advice for disabled people on housing issues. Scottish Homes' Homepoint has made grants of about £17,000 for the disabled persons housing service and for a handbook on disabled persons' housing rights being produced by the Margaret Blackwood housing association.

Agricultural Wages Board

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he is in a position to announce the Government's decision on the future of the Scottish agricultural wages board.

Sir Hector Monro: Following the Government's review of the Scottish agricultural wages board initiated last year, and taking account of the views expressed during the consultation period, we have concluded that the board should continue to operate within the existing statutory framework. A further review of the board will take place in 1998.

Recycled Liquid Fuel

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the use of recycled liquid fuel at the Blue Circle cement works at Dunbar; and what assessment he has made of (a) the safety of the transport and storage of this fuel and (b) the level and nature of any pollution arising from the use of this fuel.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 14 December 1994]: During the determination of the application for an authorisation under integrated pollution control in respect of the Blue Circle cement works at Dunbar, Her Majesty's industrial pollution inspectorate gave careful consideration to the environmental implications of burning recycled liquid fuels in part replacement of the normal kiln fuels. In terms of emissions of sulphur dioxide the use was beneficial, but in order to ensure that the impact of burning chlorinated material was negligible, the authorisation included conditions that placed stringent limits on the content of chlorine, polychlorinated biphenyls and pentachlorophenol in all recovered fuels. A series of tests were undertaken by the company to a protocol agreed with HMIPI and emissions of dioxins and furans, the principal concern, were shown to be below the 1 ngm^{-3} limit set in the draft European Union directive on the incineration of hazardous waste.

Monitoring of incoming fuel has shown that all batches comply with the conditions of authorisation and relevant data have been placed on the public register. Current usage corresponds to no more than 3 per cent. of the total thermal input to the kiln.

HMIPI has work in hand to ensure that test protocols for the estimation of dioxins and furans in environmental media are optimised and Blue Circle is included in the inspectorate's audit programme for 1995–96.

As regards the safety of these materials during transport and storage, the responsibility for these issues lies with the Department of Transport and the Health and Safety Executive. I have asked both the Department and the Executive to write to the hon. Member in due course.

Respiratory Illnesses

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many hospital admissions there were for each month in 1991, 1992 and 1993 for (a) acute respiratory complaints and (b) bronchitis by local health authority and trust.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information on hospital discharges is set out in the tables.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) males and (b) females were in full-time employment in the latest month for which figures are available and in the same month in each of the last 10 years; and if he will indicate in each case and for each year the proportion of this figure as a percentage of the total population.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 14 December 1994]: The information can be obtained from the NOMIS database which is accessible from the House of Commons Library. However, full-time and part-time breakdown for males should not be used prior to June 1991.

Black Isle

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the secretary of State for Scotland if he will list (a) the reasons for the announcement that he required more time to consider the revised Black Isle local plan, (b) the likely length of additional time involved and (c) the extent to which he will give full consideration both to Highland regional council's handling of the matter and the volume of objections from the Black Isle itself; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 15 December 1994]: Legislation requires my right hon. Friend to consider a proposal by a planning authority for the adoption of a local plan within 28 days of it being received by him. He may extend this period if he considers it necessary. In the case of the revised Black Isle local plan, the period has been extended to allow more time to consider whether the plan's policies and proposals raise issues of more than local importance.

I cannot say, at this stage, when a final decision will be announced, but every effort will be made to do so at the earliest opportunity. I can also assure the hon. Member that full and careful consideration will be given to the manner in which this matter has been handled by Highland regional council, and the objections received, before a decision is reached.

Eye Tests

Mr Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many eye tests were carried out in (a) Lothian and (b) Scotland as a whole in each of the last seven years for which figures are available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 19 December 1994]: The number of national health service sight tests paid for by health boards in each of the financial years since 1987 is shown in the table. No information is collected on private sight tests.

Number of NHS sight tests[1] in Scotland and Lothian Health Board

	1987–88	1988–89	[2]1989–90	1990–91	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94
Lothian	162,353	176,902	74,531	56,682	66,297	71,554	77,065
Scotland	1,098,145	1,168,610	475,479	432,885	496,598	538,683	579,671

[1] One person may have more than one sight test in the period.

[2] Since 1 April 1989 free NHS sight tests have been available only to children, full-time students under 19, those in receipt of income support or family credit, the registered blind or partially sighted, complex lens users, those who hold an AG2 exemption certificate from the health benefits division, diagnosed diabetic or glaucoma sufferers, and close relatives aged 40 or over of glaucoma sufferers.

Teacher Qualifications

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will ensure that teachers of higher national certificates courses in schools and further education colleges will be similarly qualified.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 19 December 1994]: Higher national certificate courses are not currently available in schools in Scotland.

Skillstart

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had on the proposal that Skillstart will be assessed only internally.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 17 December 1994]: My right hon. Friend has had no such discussions.

Public Servants

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library copies of the compensation and redundancy terms for (a) Scottish Office civil servants and (b) staff for the Scottish councils.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 19 December 1994]: The compensation and redundancy terms applying to civil servants, including those of the Scottish Office, are set out in section 10 of the "Rules of the Principal Civil Service Pension Scheme," a copy of which is in the Library.

A copy of the Local Government (Compensation for Premature Retirement) (Scotland) Regulations 1979 and subsequent amending instruments are already in the Library. A copy of the Local Government (Compensation for Redundancy) (Scotland) Regulations 1994 and a draft of the Government's proposals for compensation for loss of employment arising from local government reorganisation were lodged with the Library on 5 December. The proposals, in the form of a draft of the Local Government (Compensation for Redundancy) (Scotland) Regulations 1995, have been issued for comment.

TREASURY

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many parliamentary questions tabled in the last Session of Parliament were answered on the grounds that the information sought was not held centrally by the Department.

Mr. Nelson: From the information available on POLIS, eight written questions were not answered because the information sought was not held centrally.

Money Laundering

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, if he will list each of the 40 recommendations of the financial action task force to control money laundering together with the action taken by the United Kingdom on each one.

Mr. Nelson: The Government fully endorsed the 40 recommendations of the financial action task force on money laundering when they were published in 1990. I have arranged for a paper setting out the United Kingdom's response to each of the FATF recommendations to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Tobacco Duties

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has on the proportion of revenue raised through tobacco duties which is paid by different income groups.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I refer the hon. Lady to table 3, appendix 1, of the Central Statistical Office article "The Effects of Taxes and Benefits on Household Income, 1992" in "Economic Trends," January 1994.

VAT (Fuel)

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the effect of VAT on fuel at 8 per cent. on the annual rate of inflation in the year to September 1995.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: VAT on fuel at 8 per cent. was introduced in April 1994, so any price increases as a result will have fed through to the retail prices index prior to the year to September 1995, meaning that VAT on fuel and power will have no effect on the annual rate of inflation over that period.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the amount of revenue forgone by exemption from value added tax of sums paid in advance to power-generating companies.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: It is estimated that the VAT cost of prepayment of electricity by domestic consumers is £55 million.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on VAT being charged on fuel standing charges.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Treasury Ministers have received a number of representations on this issue. Both the fixed standing charges and the variable consumption charges for domestic electricity and gas are payment for the one service—the supply of gas and electricity—and so liable to VAT at the 8 per cent. reduced rate, even though they are shown separately on the bill. VAT is normally chargeable on the whole price of any taxable goods or services, regardless of the way in which the supplier chooses to structure the price.

Income Tax

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what was the (a) upper and (b) decile income for tax purposes in 1963–64, 1973–74, 1978–79 and 1993–94 and forecast 1995–96; what was the percentage of the income in each case of the amount payable in (i) direct and (ii) indirect tax, including national insurance, health, public sector rents and all other charges less child benefit, by a (iii) two-person household with no dependants and (iv) a two-person household with two dependent children; and what are his estimates for 1994–95;

(2) what was the median income for tax purposes in 1963–64, 1973–74, 1978–79, 1993–94 and forecast 1995–96; what was the percentage of the income in each case of the amount payable in (a) direct and (b) indirect tax, including national insurance, health, public sector rents and all other charges less child benefit, by a (i) two-person household with no dependants and (ii) a two-person household with two dependent children; and what are his estimates for 1994–95.

Sir George Young: Information is not available in the form requested. A certain amount of information on taxes paid and benefits received by broad groups of households is published in an annual article in "Economic Trends" entitled "Effects of taxes and benefits upon household income". The latest article appeared in the January 1994 edition of "Economic Trends", a copy of which is available in the Library. The results of this analysis are not designed for comparison between years because of changes in definition over time, particularly pre and post-1987 when a major revision to the methodology was adopted.

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what tax rate for income over £50,000 would have to be imposed in order to raise an additional £800 million of revenue.

Sir George Young [holding answer 13 December 1994]: An income tax rate of 47p on taxable incomes over £50,000 would raise about £800 million in 1995–96 and £1.3 billion in a full year. These estimates do not allow for any behavioural changes that might result from the introduction of the new tax rate and do not include capital gains tax.

Exchange Rates

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effects on Britain of withdrawal from the exchange rate mechanism and what plans he has to restore the rate of exchange against the deutschmark to its August 1992 value.

Mr. Nelson: It is not possible to assess the precise effects of sterling's departure from the ERM. However, during sterling's membership of the ERM, inflation fell sharply and the economy began to recover from recession. The Government recognise the value of stable exchange rates but do not set target rates. Movements in exchange rates are considered as part of the Government's general assessments of monetary conditions in setting monetary policy.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will make a statement on the current rate of exchange of the sterling against the ecu;

(2) if he will make a statement on the role of the exchange rate in the economy.

Mr. Nelson: Movements in the exchange rate are considered as part of the general assessment of monetary conditions in setting monetary policy. The Government recognise the value of a stable exchange rate but do not set target rates. Sterling's exchange rate against the ECU reflects day-to-day market trading in all the EU currencies.

The exchange rate is only one factor among many affecting the economy, and it is difficult to isolate the effect of changes in the exchange rate from that of other factors.

Manufacturing

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the forecast growth in the market for United Kingdom exports of manufactures divided between the EC and the rest of the world together with his forecast of the growth of United Kingdom exports of manufactures in each case.

Mr. Nelson: The Treasury does not publish forecasts dividing the growth of the United Kingdom's export markets for manufactures or its growth of exports of manufactures between the EC and the rest of the world.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the effect on the volume of imports and exports of manufactures of an increase of 10 per cent. in relative export unit values for manufactures; what was the change in the nominal exchange rate against the ecu and the change in the price of manufactures exported to the EEC between February 1993 and January 1994; and what contribution that made to the change in the profitability of manufacturing compared to the average for 1989–90.

Mr. Nelson: Estimates of the effect of relative prices changes on manufacturing volumes can be made using the Treasury model. This is available in the House of Commons Library. It is standard practice not to provide the results of simulations in reply to parliamentary questions due to excessive cost involved and the difficulty in making the appropriate assumptions without knowing the context in which the figures will be used.

Figures for the ecu exchange rate and manufacturing export prices are available on the CSO database, which can be accessed through the House of Commons Library. Manufacturing profitability depends on both manufacturing prices and manufacturers' costs. Company profitability has been strong recently. This reflects tight control over unit costs, rising output and the expansion of margins, particularly for exports.

Earnings

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the average earnings of a full-time adult male worker in 1963–64, 1973–74, 1978–9, 1993–94 and forecast 1995–96; what was the percentage in each case of the amount payable in (a) direct and (b) indirect tax, including national insurance, health, public sector rents and all other charges; and if he will provide corresponding figures for those whose incomes were 10 times and 20 times greater than those earnings.

Sir George Young: Information on the earnings of full-time employees at April is published in the new earnings survey for 1973 and each year up to and including 1994. Prior to 1970, information on the earnings of manual employees was published in the "Ministry of Labour Gazette". Copies of these publications can be found in the Library. Information for 1995–96 is not available. For a given level of earnings, an individual's tax payments and other charges will depend on a variety of circumstances such as income, marital status, age and spending patterns.

European Parliament

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update his written answer dated 5 December 1980, Official Report, column 205, comparing the cost of maintaining a member of the European Assembly with the cost of maintaining a Member of the House of Commons, if he will update his answer expressing the figures in per capita terms.

Mr. Aitken: As we made clear in the reply dated 5 December 1980, no precise comparison is possible between the budgetary costs of the European Parliament and the House of Commons. However, the updated information is as follows:

£ millions

	[1]European Parliament	[2]House of Commons
Members of the Institution
Salaries and pensions	[3]7.2	22.2
Travel and subsistence	43.8	9.9
Secretarial expenses	44.2	26.9

The per capita cost per member is therefore:
European Parliament: £886,772
House of Commons: £165,131

[1] The figures for the European budget have been taken from the 1994 Community budget and converted to sterling at the budget rate of £1 = 1.3243 ecu.

[2] The figures for the House of Commons have been taken from 1994–95 estimates.

[3] Salaries for the Members of the European Parliament are paid for by national Governments and are not included in the budget.

[4] The budget of the European Parliament covers the cost of 3,790 posts of which 679—17.9 per cent.—are employed in the language service. The House of Commons administration vote covers the costs of 1,317 staff.

[5] A nominal rent has been payable in respect of the Palace of Westminster since 1993–94.

[6] Includes £8.4 million in the reserve.

EU Membership

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will bring up to date for each year since 1974 the figures in paragraph 43 of Cmnd 6003 "Membership of the European Community—Report on Renegotiation".

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The United Kingdom's gross and net contribution to the European Community for each year from 1973 to 1993 are set out in the table. The figures in the final column of this table represent the Government's last published estimate for each of these years.

Exports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the Bank of England's contention that United Kingdom exporters have been increasing their profit margins at the expense of volume exports.

Mr. Nelson: Over the past year, exports have increased strongly—in the third quarter export volumes, excluding oil and erratics, were up 14 per cent. on a year earlier—and export profit margins have also risen, reflecting tight control over unit costs.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the increase in the price of finished manufactures exported (a) to the EEC and (b) to non-EEC countries between 30 December 1992 and 31 August 1994.

Mr. Nelson: Price indices for United Kingdom exports of finished manufactures to other EC countries and to non-EC countries are published on a monthly basis. The figures are available on the Central Statistical Office database, which can be accessed through the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will publish his estimate of the current net rate of return as defined in CSO "First Release" (94)205 on exports of manufactures; and what were the figures for (a) 1972, (b) 1979, (c) 1988 and (d) 1990;

(2) what assessment he has made of the correlation between the net rate of return on exports of manufacturers in 1990 and 1993 and the rate of 7.4 per cent. and 5.8 per cent. for manufacturing as shown in CSO "First Release" (94)205; and if the rate being earned on exports in the third quarter of this year was higher than 7.4 per cent.

Mr. Nelson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to him on 13 December, Official Report, column 587.

Energy-saving Products (VAT)

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to reduce the level of VAT levied on energy-saving products to 8 per cent.; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have no plans to apply the 8 per cent. reduced rate of VAT to anything other than domestic fuel and power.

EU Budget Rebate

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will state the initial sum calculated by the Commission of the European Communities for the United Kingdom budget rebate for the years 1991 and 1992 together with the sums named in the final corrections for those years and the dates on which they were determined.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The initial United Kingdom abatement figures for 1991 and 1992 were 2,921.2 mecu and 3,181 mecu respectively. The final corrections in respect of these years have yet to be determined by the European Commission. Details of the final correction for 1992 are unlikely to become available until 1996.

Prices

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the weighted average increase since August 1992 in the retail prices of (a) goods other than food and revenue duty items and (b) services other than foreign holidays, mortgage interest and community charge or rates.

Mr. Nelson: The information requested is not available as there are no unique definitions of goods or services in the retail prices index and such aggregates can be produced only at disproportionate cost.

National Debt

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the change in the national debt since 1973; and how much of this is accounted for by the United Kingdom's contribution to the EEC.

Mr. Nelson: The change in the national debt since 1973 can be calculated from table 17.2 of part 1 of the "Bank of England Statistical Abstract 1994".

Figures for EC contributions since 1973 were provided in the answer which the Paymaster General gave to the hon. Member for Dover (Mr. Shaw) on 29 November, Official Report, columns 608-10.

Taxation

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update his answer to the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms Harman) of 19 January 1994, Official Report, columns 632-40, and provide the latest estimates of the burden of direct and indirect taxes for (a) 1993–94, (b) 1994–95 and (c) 1995–96, including figures for the council tax and its predecessors, both in cash terms and as a percentage of earnings for (i) a single person, (ii) a married couple with no children, (iii) a married couple with two children, (iv) a married couple, both working, with no children, earning 50, 75, 150, 200, 300, 400, 500, 700, 1,000 and 2,000 per cent. of average earnings.

Sir George Young: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Oxford, East (Mr. Smith) on 19 December 1994. Official Report, columns 944–50.

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of gross domestic product was taken by (a) income tax, (b) corporation tax, (c) capital gains tax, (d) inheritance tax, (e) value added tax, (f) national insurance contributions, (g) excise duties, (h) the council tax and its predecessors, (i) business rates and (j) other taxes, in each year between 1978–79 and 1994–95.

Mr. Nelson: The information requested is given in the table. Forecasts for 1994–95 are taken from the revised table 4A.1 of the 1995–96 "Financial Statement and Budget Report", issued with an HM Treasury press release on 8 December 1994.

Treasury Model

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the cost of maintaining the Treasury model in terms of (a) direct staff costs and (b) other costs.

Mr. Nelson: The equivalent of around five full-time posts are currently devoted to economic model building and development. This staff requirement translates to a cost—including basic pay, national insurance and superannuation costs—of around £200,000 per year. It is very difficult to estimate the indirect costs involved, but these could add a further £100,000 per year if the costs of accommodation, senior management time, training and other items are taken into account.

Imports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what forecast he has made of (a) the increase or decrease in the volume and value of imports of manufacturers in 1995 and the first half of 1996 and (b) the increase or decrease in United Kingdom output.

Mr. Nelson: The Treasury does not publish full forecasts of manufacturing trade flows. Forecasts of non-oil trade volumes and prices are shown in table 3.3 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report", and forecasts of the balance of trade in manufactures in table 3.4. Forecasts of United Kingdom output are shown in tables 3.8 and 3.9.

VAT (Steam Railways)

Mr. Allason: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to extend value added tax to steam railways.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have no plans to disturb the current VAT zero rating for public passenger transport, including steam railways, where the service is confined to that of public transport in its widely accepted sense. I can confirm that the proposed restrictions to the zero rating under the VAT (Transport) Order 1994 will not normally affect steam railways, and therefore most operators will be able to continue to apply the zero rate. The exception is when payment for admission to places such as theme or safari parks or working museums includes a steam engine ride. In these cases, where admission charges are apportioned or zero rated at present, they will become wholly liable to VAT at the standard rate.

Gilt-edged Securities

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much investment by overseas residents in gilt-edged securities has increased each year since 1990 and in the current year to date; and what assessment he has made of the effect of this investment on the rate of exchange.

Mr. Nelson: A sectoral breakdown of purchases of Government securities is given at table 10.2F of the Central Statistical Office's "Financial Statistics".

Other things being equal, foreign purchases of United Kingdom gilts increase the exchange rate if sterling is acquired to effect the transaction. However, any impact is extremely difficult to quantify since a large number of factors affect the exchange rate.

European Enlargement

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact of the enlargement of the EEC to include countries in eastern Europe on the budget contributions of (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the Mediterranean countries.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The impact of accession to the EU by the countries of eastern Europe would depend on the circumstances under which that enlargement took place and on the extent to which Community policies were modified in advance of enlargement. The Government remain committed to further enlargement and to ensuring that it takes place on terms which are affordable to the Exchequer.

Current Account Deficits

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his assessment of the percentage overvaluation suggested by the current account deficits in 1989 and 1994.

Mr. Nelson: The size of the current account deficit is affected by a large number of factors, including world trade, growth in United Kingdom export markets, export profit margins, domestic demand and competitiveness. The United Kingdom is currently very competitive, as seen by our strong export performance; in the third quarter of 1994 export volumes, excluding oil and erratics, were up 14 per cent. on a year earlier.

EEC Imports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the under-recording of imports from the EEC in (a) 1992 and (b) 1994.

Mr. Nelson: Prior to the introduction of the Intrastat system in January 1993, statistics on goods imported into the United Kingdom were based on customs documents. Various investigations had been carried out by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise and the Central Statistical Office into the quality of the statistics. These found that, although some errors were present in the information, they were small and the factors involved tended to offset each other, so that no correction to the data was thought necessary.

It was expected that such errors would also be present in the Intrastat system. As such, the system was designed to include a method of measuring the effect of these errors in recording. The data are gathered during audit visits to traders and the results are included in the article published in the August 1994 edition of "Economic Trends", containing the outcome of a review of the Intrastat system carried out by the Central Statistical Office and Her Majesty's Customs and Excise. These indicate that the value of imports from other European Union countries as reported in the overseas trade statistics publications is now under-estimated by 1.5 per cent.—around £85 million per month. The balance of payments statistics published by the Central Statistical Office include a correction to take this under-recording into account. This adjustment has been applied to data for 1993 and 1994 to date and will continue in the future, and as additional information becomes available it will be revised accordingly.

It should also be borne in mind that the review established that there were miss-allocations between countries in the old system of recording—known as the "Rotterdam" effect—which caused total imports from other European Union countries to be overstated by an estimated £2,175 million in 1992, and imports from non-member countries to be understated by the same amount. This error in attribution is corrected by Intrastat.

Pre-tax Incomes

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 6 December, Official Report, column 122, if he will give the numbers of persons in the United Kingdom in 1973 and 1983 with pre-tax incomes of (a) more than £400,000 and (b) between £200,000 and £400,000 at 1992–93 values, using the deflator for average earnings.

Sir George Young: The table provides estimates of numbers of individuals for 1992–93, 1983–84 and 1973–74

Pre-tax income range (adjusted for changes in average male earnings)

Thousands

	£200,000–£400,000	£400,000+
1992–93	16	4
1983–84	6	1
1973–74	11	2

The income ranges used for 1983–84 and 1973–74 have been adjusted to take account of changes in average adult male earnings up to 1992–93.

Public Sector Borrowing Requirement

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a revised version of table 4.1 in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" 1995–96 following his announcement of 8 December.

Mr. Aitken: The information requested is shown.

Radcliffe Committee

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the conclusions of the Radcliffe committee on the working of the monetary system.

Mr. Nelson: The Radcliffe committee on the working of the monetary system reported in 1959. Its recommendations led to publication of the Bank of England "Quarterly Bulletin", December 1960, the collection of monetary statistics, and the publication of CSO "Financial Statistics". Articles covering the Radcliffe committee report can be found in Bank of England "Quarterly Bulletin" December 1969, page 448, and "Quarterly Bulletin" September 1985, page 392.

Public Sector Debt

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what projections he has made of public sector debt.

Mr. Nelson: The information is set out in the table. This corrects an error in table 4.3 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report". The new figures do not alter the broad picture for the public debt forecast. The debt-to-GDP ratio is still expected to peak at end March 1996, and to decline thereafter, on both the net public sector and gross general government measures. The projections for the rest of the public finances, including the fiscal deficit, PSBR and central Government debt interest are unaffected. The new figures therefore have no bearing on the Budget statement.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (i) hold open meetings, (ii) conduct public consultation exercises, (iii) conduct consultation exercises with outside commercial interests, (iv) publish a register of members' interests (v) publish agendas for meetings and (vi) publish the minutes of meetings; and whether this is in each case (a) under a statutory requirement or (b) voluntary.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 16 December 1994]: Of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Treasury, the School Teachers Review Body, occasionally undertakes public consultation exercises on a voluntary basis.

Banking Ombudsman

Mr. Tracey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of whether the terms of reference of the banking ombudsman adequately deal with complaints by non-customer third parties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 19 December 1994]: The banking ombudsman is appointed by an independent council. His terms of reference are a matter for them, but I understand that the ombudsman does, from time to time, look at cases brought by non-customers.

Developing Countries (Debt)

Miss Lestor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list by country the total stock of existing and estimated debt outstanding to the United Kingdom by developing countries for each year from 1990 to 2000.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 6 December 1994]: The figures for ECGD are not readily available. To assemble them manually would incur disproportionate costs. Figures for outstanding debt stock as at 31 October 1994 are given. For the ODA figures, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to her by the hon. Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry) on 8 December 1994, Official Report, columns 344–46.

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which of the special advisers serving in his Departments during the last five years were subject to positive security vetting.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 13 December 1994]: All the special advisers in the Treasury during the past five years have been subject to positive vetting.

Clubs and Public Houses

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the legislation which differentiates between private licensed clubs and public houses in respect of licences issued for the use of pool tables, juke boxes and one-armed bandits; and if he will list the licence fee applicable in each case, and the legal pay-out applicable for one-armed bandits in (a) registered private clubs and (b) public premises.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 19 December 1994]: The legislation which covers the licensing of gaming machines on any premises is the Betting and Gaming Duties Act 1981. Gaming machine licence duty is to be replaced on 1 November 1995 with amusement machine licence duty, which will include machines which did not previously require a licence. These will include certain prize machines, video games and quiz machines.

The licence fee for non-prize machines will be £250 for a full year.

Pool tables and juke boxes do not require a licence under the current duty, and will not require one when amusement machine licence duty comes into force. The current licence fee payable on one-armed bandits gaming machines depends upon the cost to play the machine once and the amount of the prize that can be won.

Gaming machines—small prize machines—where the payout cannot exceed £6 in money or money's worth and which cost 5p or less to play once do not require a licence.

Gaming machines—small prize machines—where the payout cannot exceed £6 in money or money's work and which cost more than 5p to play once require a licence costing £535 for a full year.

Gaming machines—jackpot machines—which pay out more than £6 in money or money's worth and which cost 5p to play once require a licence costing £535 for a full year.

Gaming machines—jackpot machines—which pay out more than £6 in money or money's worth and which cost more than 5p to play once require a licence costing £1,375 for a full year.

Customs and Excise is not responsible for the legislation on the siting of gaming machines. This is governed by the social law and is a matter for the Home Secretary.

TRANSPORT

MV Derbyshire

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport with whom he has had meetings in relation to the MV Derbyshire since the International Transport Workers Federation expedition which located the wreckage of the MV Derbyshire.

Mr. Norris: My right hon. Friend is currently considering the chief inspector of marine accident's assessment of the sonar and video material provided by the ITF and whether further action needs to be taken. He has discussed the issue with officials in the Department.

A69

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what current (a) building and (b) planning activities are being carried out by him in respect of (i) improvements to the A1 between the Low Fell interchange and the Scottish border and (ii) improvements to the A69 between the A1 west road interchange and the M6; how many of his staff and in which locations are working on such improvements; and when each project is scheduled for conclusion.

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Jim Cousins, dated 20 December 1994:

The Minister for Railways and Roads, John Watts has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question on what current (a) building and (b) planning activities are being carried out by him in respect of (i) improvements to the A1 between the Low Fell Interchange and the Scottish Border and (ii) improvements to the A69 between the A1 West Road Interchange and the M6; how many of his staff and in which locations are working on such improvements; and when each project is scheduled for conclusion.

(a) The schemes under construction are:

A1 North Shotton slip road for completion in April 1995.

A69 Route action road safety strategy for completion by March 1995.

(b) The schemes where planning activities are being carried out in respect of the following:-

(i) Improvements to the A1 between Low Fell Interchange and the Scottish Border.

A1—
Hitchcroft to Cawledge
Stannington Grade Separation
Low Lyn Marginal Strips
Gateshead Western Bypass (Sign Gantries)
Gateshead Western Bypass Improvement
Morpeth to Lanehead Improvement
Willowburn to Denwick Improvement
(ii) Improvements to the A69 between the A1 West Road Interchange and the M6.
A69—
Cleugh Head to Scarrow Hill Improvement
Haltwhistle Bypass DBFO
Warwick Bridge Bypass

A number of other route enhancement schemes are programmed and implemented annually.

It is not possible to give completion dates for schemes in preparation as this depends upon the availability of resources, national priorities and satisfactory completion of statutory procedures.

There are 7 members of staff dedicated full time to national programme construction schemes.

A further 8 staff work on the management of the network which in part includes work on other route enhancement and improvement schemes implemented annually. There are also a number of staff providing administrative support. All staff are in Newcastle.

Maritime Safety Procedures

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will review the current operations of emergency radio procedures following the circumstances of the Heather Bloan fishing boat being lost at sea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: A review of emergency radio procedures has been under way for some time and my noble Friend the Minister for Aviation and Shipping is considering a proposal that the Coastguard agency should assume responsibility for the medium frequency radio telephony distress, safety and urgency watch on 2182 kHz. This service is currently provided under contract by British Telecommunications International.

Marchioness

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many fatalities occurred on the Marchioness; and of these how many were non-United Kingdom citizens.

Mr. Norris: Fifty-one people died, 16 of whom were non-UK citizens.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all those who submitted evidence to the marine accident investigation branch report into the Marchioness disaster.

Mr. Norris: The MAIB inquiry obtained evidence, either orally or in the form of written statements, from well over 100 people. In the case of most of the survivors, the statements were those made to the police. It is not normal practice to provide a list of witnesses.

Remembrance Day

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what funding his Department provided in respect of Merchant Navy veterans attending (a) the remembrance day ceremony in London and (b) other remembrance day activities throughout the country in 1993–94 and 1994–95.

Mr. Norris: The Department's expenditure under this heading was £1,576.75 in 1993–94 and £1,159.06 in 1994–95. It was incurred in respect of ceremonies in London. No expenditure was incurred in respect of Merchant Navy representation at such ceremonies outside London.

Passenger Service Ships

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what changes he has suggested or promoted to amend or repeal hours of work regulations concerning maximum permitted hours of (a) officers and (b) others on ships registered in the United Kingdom or ships in regular passenger services to or from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Norris: In 1993, the Department sent out for consultation draft regulations and a draft merchant shipping notice on hours of work and rest on United Kingdom-registered ships. The drafts are being reviewed in the light of the responses to the consultation documents and of discussions with both sides of industry. We hope to lay the regulations before Parliament early in 1995.

Driving Standards Agency

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many personal files of Driving Standards Agency employees contain trade union literature or circulars; and what is the purpose of maintaining such records.

Mr. Norris: This is an operational matter for the Driving Standards Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from S. J. Ford to Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody, dated 19 December 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the number of personal files on DSA employees containing trade union literature or circulars and the purpose of maintaining such records.

No personal files of staff in this Agency contain trade union literature or circulars.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many occasions since the establishment of the agency a Driving Standards Agency employee has had trade union literature or circulars removed from his or her file, following complaints by that employee.

Mr. Norris: This is an operational matter for the Driving Standards Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from S. J. Ford to Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody, dated 19 December 1994:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your question about the number of occasions since the Driving Standards Agency was established when Agency employees have had trade union literature or circulars removed from their personal file, following complaints by that employee.

There has been only one such occasion, in 1992. After that incident all personal files were checked to ensure that no other such mistakes happened. No other cases were found.

Rail Privatisation

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many staff employed by his Department are currently engaged on work associated with the reorganisation and privatisation of the British Railways Board and Railtrack.

Mr. Watts: Eighty-four full-time equivalents.

Rail Projects (EC Funding)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 5 December, Official Report, columns 35-36, if he will provide details of European regional development fund funding given over the last 10 years to finance public sector rail projects.

Mr. Watts [holding answer 13 December 1994]: I have placed the information in the Library.

Rolling Stock

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the average age of rolling stock used on the Hayes, Kent to London rail line at peak times.

Mr. Watts: Approximately eight years and falling. It is expected that all services on this line will be operated by Networkers by April 1995.

Aviation Facilities

Mr. Booth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, what is his policy on general aviation facilities.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Government recognise that general aviation, and in particular business aviation, can bring economic and wider benefits to national competitiveness as well as to local and regional economies. The existence of aviation facilities can be a factor in business location, especially for international companies. The Government wish these benefits to be fully recognised in the planning system, alongside the environmental impacts.

As demand for commercial air transport grows, general aviation is likely to find access to larger airports increasingly restricted. The Government consider that strategic and local planning guidance will need to recognise the role that smaller airfields and landing strips play, and the difficulty of reopening or providing substitute facilities for airfields that have closed. The Government believe that, where there are proposals to develop an existing airfield, a flying option should be retained where demand clearly exists, or is expected in the longer term. But the Government are not willing to subsidise use of general aviation facilities.

There are particular pressures on business aviation in the south-east, especially in the sector to the west and south of London. Business aviation can expect to find it increasingly difficult to operate from Heathrow and Gatwick. Farnborough has the runway length to accommodate larger business aircraft, but its future as an airfield has been uncertain for some time, because it is surplus to MOD requirements. Disposal options are being studied and the Government wish these to take full account of the benefits of continued aviation activity. In the longer term, there is likely to be considerable demand for business aviation of the right type and in the right location in the London area.

The Government therefore believe it important to retain capacity for business aviation at Farnborough. The Government expect this view to be fully reflected in the local planning system.

I expect shortly to be making a statement about civil use at RAF Northolt.

Red Route, London

Mr. Forman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the London red route network to be operational.

Mr. Norris: I have revised the objectives of the Traffic Director for London to require him to implement the priority—red—route network so that it will become operational in the year 2000.

Traffic Area Network

Mr. Booth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will provide details of the proposed review of the traffic area network.

Mr. Norris: The review of the traffic area network will include an efficiency scrutiny. It will be undertaken by Mr. Stephen Curtis, currently chief executive of the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency, and will begin early in the new year. The review is expected to last some four to five months. It will look at the organisation and work of the traffic area offices and will examine the scope for improving effectiveness and efficiency. A copy of the full terms of reference have been placed in the Library of the House.

Trust Ports

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport in the first sale of the trust ports, for which port authority the benchmark figure was leaked; and to whom.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 14 December 1994]: Although the Department understands there was a leak, it has no documentary evidence. In these circumstances, it is not appropriate to identify the parties involved.

Channel Tunnel

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the numbers and grades of civil servants in his Department concerned with channel tunnel rail safety (a) in 1994 and (b) 1995.

Mr. Watts: The numbers and grades of officials in the Department's channel tunnel safety unit are:

At 1 April 1994:
  G5: 1
  G7: 4
  HEO: 4
  EO: 2
  AO: 1
  AA: 3
  PS: 1
TOTAL: 16

At 1 April 1995:
  G5: 1
  G7: 2
  HEO: 4
  EO: 2
  AO: 1
  AA: 3
TOTAL: 14

From time to time other officials in the Department contribute in varying measure to consideration of tunnel rail safety.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to give authorisation for special vehicle and coach shuttle services through the channel tunnel.

Mr. Watts: The Anglo-French Channel Tunnel Intergovernmental Commission authorises Eurotunnel to operate services in the channel tunnel. No application to carry special vehicles and coaches on the shuttles has yet been received, but an application from Eurotunnel is expected early next year.

EMPLOYMENT

Working Hours

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his estimate of the total number of hours worked per week by the working population in October this year and in October 1989, October 1979 and October 1973.

Mr. Oppenheim: Latest estimates from the labour force survey show that in Great Britain in summer 1994 employees and self-employed worked an average of 813 million hours per week, seasonally adjusted. The available figures for earlier years refer to the spring each year: 885 million hours per week in 1989 and 867 million hours per week in 1979, not seasonally adjusted. No comparable information is available for 1973.

New Earnings Survey

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many workers were excluded for the 1994 new earnings survey; what were the main reasons for such exclusion; and how many were excluded for each reason.

Mr. Oppenheim: The new earnings survey sampling fraction is nominally 1 per cent. of employees in employment. The following table presents the actual sampling fractions of the 1994 NES, based on employees in employment at March 1994.

	Number of employees
	Employees in employment (a)	NES (b)	Sampling fraction (per cent.) (b)/(a)
Full-time	14,961,000	120,219	.80
Part-time	5,876,000	35,159	.60
All employees	20,837,000	155,378	.75

The main reasons for the exclusion of full-time workers are: they were no longer working for the employer recorded on the Inland Revenue file of names and addresses used to distribute the questionnaires, in some cases, because the employer had gone out of business; because the worker was in a category—for example, occupational pensioner, non-salaried director, working for spouse, working outside the United Kingdom—not covered by the survey; and because there were unresolved inconsistencies in the data provided by employers.

In addition to these reasons, part-time workers are excluded if they are not on the Inland Revenue file. This will happen if their gross weekly earnings are below the threshold for PAYE.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the percentage change between April 1979 to April 1994 in real earnings of blue collar workers in manufacturing relative to white collar workers in the private sector together with his estimate of the corresponding increase in output per head.

Mr. Oppenheim: Information from the new earnings survey at April, shows that the earnings of full-time manual employees in manufacturing increased by 17.6 per cent. between 1979 and 1994 when adjusted for the increase in the retail prices index at April.

The corresponding increase for private sector full-time non-manual employees was 56.3 per cent.

The information requested for output per head is not available.

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the proportions of (a) part-time female manual workers, (b) part-time female non-manual workers and (c) all female part-time workers with earnings excluding overtime less than £5.53 per hour in (i) Great Britain, (ii) west midlands region, (iii) West Midlands metropolitan county, (iv) Hereford and Worcester, (v) Shropshire, (vi) Staffordshire and (vii) Warwickshire for 1994.

Mr. Oppenheim: Information available from the new earnings survey, showing the proportions of employees with earnings below the amount requested at April 1994, is given in the following tables:

Hourly earnings excluding overtime of part-time women on adult rates—pay unaffected by absence
Proportion earning below £5.53: April 1994

Demolitions

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when guidelines for demolitions and explosions in the course of demolition were last revised; and what further revisions are under consideration.

Mr. Oppenheim: The Health and Safety Executive published its guidance on demolition and on the use of explosives in demolition in 1984–85. An information sheet is being prepared to clarify factors to be taken into consideration when determining exclusion zones during demolition by explosives. HSE is also involved with the development of two British standard codes of practice, BS 6187 and BS 5607, which give guidance on best practice.

Journalists

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what has been the change in the real average earnings of journalists working on newspapers in the Greater London area, together with the median, quartile and decile since 1979;

(2) what has been the change in the real average earnings since 1979 of journalists working on broadcasting; and what were the median, quartile and decile.

Mr. Oppenheim: The information requested on the earnings of journalists in the Greater London area is not available.

The new earnings survey shows that average gross weekly earnings of "authors, writers and journalists" as a group increased by 60.6 per cent. between April 1979 and April 1994 when adjusted for the increase in the retail prices index at April.

Anglo-Great Lakes Corporation

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the costs of investigations carried out by the Health and Safety Executive at the site of the Anglo-Great Lakes Corporation in Newcastle.

Mr. Oppenheim: Health and Safety Executive staff have paid a number of visits to the site formerly occupied by the Anglo-Great Lakes Corporation.

At present, HSE records the time spent at individual sites only in a format needed to produce aggregated totals of different activities. The total time spent, and hence the costs, at any particular site over a period of time could be extracted only at disproportionate cost.

Training

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total expenditure on (a) employment training and (b) youth training in 1993–94 by districts within the Yorkshire and Humberside region; and how many (i) males and (ii) females were on such schemes.

Mr. Paice: The information is not available in the format requested.

Employment training, which was one of the Government's measures for helping the long-term unemployed, was incorporated into training for work from April 1993. Figures are only available by the areas covered by the training and enterprise councils in Yorkshire and Humberside.

The table shows provisional expenditure, by TEC, for 1993–94 for youth training, including youth credits and training for work.

Training and enterprise councils	Youth training (£ million)	Training for work (£ million)
Barnsley/Doncaster	11.911	8.506
Bradford	10.548	3.904
Calderdale/Kirklees	10.149	5.601
Humberside	15.871	8.529
Leeds	6.856	5.452
North Yorkshire	7.081	2.921
Rotherham	5.236	2.923
Sheffield	8.332	6.393
Wakefield	4.126	3.247
Total	80.111	47.476

The training for work figures do not include allowance payments paid to unemployed participants by the Employment Service at a rate equivalent to the participants former benefit entitlement plus £10 per week.

During 1993–94 the number of males who entered training on these programmes was 18,216—YT and YC—and 30,583—TfW—and the number of females who entered training was 13,440—YT and YC—and 11,695—TfW.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the programmes for which his Department is responsible for directly or via agents for training employed people or provide on–the–job training; and what funding is available for each scheme.

Mr. Paice [holding answer 19 December 1994]: The primary responsibility for training employed people rests with their employers. However, the Government are encouraging them to invest in the training and development of their work forces through:

Employer investment in people provision—in 1994–95 up to £63 million is available through training and enterprise councils;

Small firms training loans—in 1994–95 up to £2.03 million is expected to be made available through the participating banks;

Career development loans—in 1994–95 up to £61 million is expected to be made available through the participating banks.

In addition, from 1 April 1995 the Government will be making available some £63 million over three years for skills for small businesses.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress has been made on the appointment of independent inspectors for NVQ and other qualifications obtained in the course of youth training scheme and training for work funded training programmes.

Mr. Paice [holding answer 19 December 1994]: The plans of the National Council for Vocational Qualifications are well advanced. We look to recruitment of field staff to be under way by April 1995. Inspectors will monitor the performance of national vocational qualification centres only, across all centres including those active in youth training and training for work.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was (a) the cost of the Barnsley and Doncaster training and enterprise council and (b) the average cost of other training and enterprise councils for 1993–94.

Mr. Paice: Information on the amount of money the Department paid to training and enterprise councils in 1993–94 is still provisional. The total payment to the 75 English training and enterprise councils to cover programmes and running cost was £1,451 million; the average cost was £19.3 million. Barnsley and Doncaster training and enterprise council was paid £26.4 million.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total budget of the Berkshire training and enterprise council for the financial year 1994–95.

Mr. Paice: The training and enterprise council covering Berkshire, south Buckinghamshire and the Oxfordshire travel-to-work areas of Henley and Aylesbury is Thames Valley Enterprise Ltd. The budget made available by the Employment Department, Department for the Environment and the Department of Trade and Industry to Thames Valley Enterprise Ltd. during 1994–95 is £36,466,659. The budget includes funding, via the training and enterprise councils, for business links. Budget information below training and enterprise councils level is not available.

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total budget of the Dorset training and enterprise council for the year 1994–95.

Mr. Paice: The total budget made available by the Department to Dorset training and enterprise council for the year 1994–95 is £19.7 million.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress Calderdale and Kirklees training and enterprise council is making in meeting the criteria for the award of a three-year licence.

Mr. Paice: I am pleased to announce that Calderdale and Kirklees training and enterprise council has now completed the process of meeting the rigorous standard we set for the award of the new three–year licences. Its licence will be effective from April 1995.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the funding of the salary and office expenses and overheads of the office of the national training and enterprise council director.

Mr. Paice [holding answer 19 December 1994]: We understand that the Training and Enterprise Council National Council is funded by contributions from individual TECs. The TEC national council is responsible for decisions about salaries of its staff and office costs.

Construction Industry (Safety)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will place in the Library a list of construction companies that have been successfully prosecuted by the Health and Safety Executive in the last five years together with the judgments obtained.

Mr. Oppenheim: Information is not held centrally in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The numbers of information laid by the Health and Safety Executive and the resulting convictions in the construction sector in each of the last five years for which figures are available are shown in the table:

Year of hearing[1]	Information laid	Convictions	Average fine per conviction (£)
1989–90	781	658	762
1990–91	746	600	857
1991–92	746	604	1,035
1992–93	701	572	1,279
1993–94[2]	523	410	3,412

[1] Years commencing 1 April

[2] Provisional

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to introduce legislation on construction design and safety regulations.

Mr. Oppenheim: I hope to make an announcement shortly.

Employment Subsidies

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many jobs he expects to create with the aid of a subsidy for the employment of those out of work for at least two years; if he expects the level of unemployment to be reduced as a result; and what assessment he has made of the policies of the French Government to reduce the number of long-term unemployed.

Miss Widdecombe: The workstart employer subsidy aims to encourage employers to take on long-term unemployed people. In addition, it may have some beneficial effect on the number of new jobs and the level of unemployment. However, job subsidies are not cost free, and the control of public spending is essential to reduce non-wage labour costs and create more jobs.

France has several measures in common with the United Kingdom, including measures similar to restart and jobclubs. As in the UK, it has also implemented cuts in national insurance contributions for the lower paid. However, France also has other policies—a national minimum wage, high non-wage labour costs and support for the social chapter—which would in our view damage job creation if introduced in the UK. The UK has a lower rate of unemployment than France.

Career Development Loans

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action his Department has taken to ensure that public awareness of career development loans has increased throughout the year 1993–94.

Mr. Paice: The career development loan advertising campaign in 1993–94 comprised loose and classified insertions in the national press running throughout the year, and two short periods of predominantly local radio advertising.

Direct mailing undertaken during the year to university, college and careers office principals was also carried out. In addition, the Department continued to issue its quarterly career development loan newsletter. In 1993–94, more than 65,000 newsletters were distributed to training and education providers, training enterprise councils in England and Wales and local enterprise companies in Scotland, Employment Service offices, careers offices, citizens advice bureaux, libraries and participating banks.

An updated version of the CDL promotional video was distributed to all TECs, LECs and Employment Service offices.

Careers Service

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received alleging occasions of neglect of duty by the careers service inspectorate; and if he will make a statement on the course of action to be followed when such allegations are received.

Mr. Paice: There has been only one such occurrence. The allegations were pursued extensively and we are satisfied there was no neglect of duty. We have every confidence in the integrity of the chief inspector and his staff.

The Department will investigate swiftly and rigorously any allegations against officials in the careers service inspectorate or elsewhere. Those making the allegations will be informed as quickly as possible of the outcome of these investigations. The precise course of action would vary according to the nature of allegations received.

Vocational Counselling

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received advocating the regulation of the activities of those charging for private vocational counselling sessions, who are not currently members of any professional association; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Paice: No representations have been received.

Unemployment

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the percentage of (a) men and (b) women that are currently unemployed for each year between the ages of 50 and 60 years.

Mr. Oppenheim: The information is provided in the following tables:

ILO unemployment rates: by age and sex Great Britain summer 1994 percentages

50	6.1	8.4	[1]—

Labour force survey.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the obstacles which reduce the likelihood of young people aged 16 and 17 years who are currently classified as (a) International Labour Organisation unemployed or (b) economically inactive and not currently in full-time education taking up one of the opportunities available to them under Government programmes (i) in general and (ii) in respect of each category of opportunity and each category for young people in the United Kingdom and in each part of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Paice: The Government guarantee that all 16 and 17-year-olds not in education, training or employment and who are seeking training are offered suitable training places. It is necessary for young people to register with the careers service and I am not aware of any obstacles which prevent them from doing so. Furthermore, the Government have committed additional resources in 1995–96 to strengthen careers guidance from age 13. We are also looking on a cross-Governmental basis at the position of 16 and 17-year-olds who are not in education, training or employment.

Part-time Workers

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about the Government's policy on the employment rights of part-time workers and indicate his response to the House of Lords judgment in the judicial review case R v. Secretary of State for Employment ex parte Equal Opportunities Commission and another.

Mr. Portillo: The Government welcome the growth of part-time work, which is one of the range of flexible working practices which can be of benefit both to employers and to employees in reconciling work and other commitments.

A comprehensive framework of employment protection rights exists to safeguard employees against unreasonable treatment by their employers, and many of those rights—including those relating to sex and race discrimination, to unlawful deductions from wages and to time off for antenatal care—have long applied to part-timers on exactly the same basis as full-timers. The statutory entitlement of part-timer and full-timers alike were further extended and enhanced by the Government in the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Acts 1993.

The Government are, however, committed to the principle that the legislation should strike an appropriate balance between the rights of employees and the burdens on business. They have sought to achieve that through the deregulation of the labour market, where appropriate, and believe that this has helped to stimulate the growth for new job opportunities. They therefore oppose the imposition of new restrictions which would inhibit employers and employees from exercising the freedom to reach agreements on the basis of their own priorities, needs and circumstances. The Government rejected on 6 December 1994 the draft EC directive on part-time work as this would have imposed unacceptable constraints on Government action to promote part-time work, and would in any case have extended EC regulation into an area in which the principle of subsidiarity should apply. Such matters are best determined by individual member states, according to their own law and practice.

In the judicial review case R v. Secretary of State for Employment ex parte Equal Opportunities Commission and another, the Equal Opportunities Commission alleged that the application of different qualifying conditions for part-timers compared with full-timers in the unfair dismissal and redundancy payments legislation discriminated against women contrary to European equal pay and equal treatment law. The Government conceded that, because there are more women than men working part time, the hours threshold had a disproportionate adverse impact on women, but argued that the thresholds were justified on objective grounds, to reduce burdens on business and promote part-time work opportunities. The High Court and the Court of Appeal rejected the EOC's case, but the House of Lords found in its favour.

The Government have studied the House of Lord's judgment and given very careful consideration to all the legal implications and policy options arising from it. It clearly gives the relevant European legislation a much wider interpretation than was envisaged when it was originally adopted, and reinforces the Government's view that the priority for Europe should not be tackling unemployment rather than adopting further costly social legislation which increases burdens on business and destroy jobs.

The Government always honour their legal obligations, however, and accept that the judgment must be acted upon. The House of Lords is the supreme court of the United Kingdom and there is no possibility of further appeal or of reopening the case. Only the courts themselves can refer questions to be determined by the European Court of Justice, and the House of Lords considered it unnecessary to do so in this case.

Having taken very careful account of the policy options and their legal implications, the Government have been advised that the judgment requires the removal from employment protection legislation of all existing distinctions based on the number of hours worked per week. We will shortly be laying before the House appropriate regulations under section 2(2) of the European Communities Act 1972.

Although the Government were unable to satisfy the House of Lords that the hours thresholds were objectively justified, they continue to believe that their removal will make employers more reluctant to create new part-time jobs, and may indeed threaten some existing jobs. The effects of the change will therefore be carefully monitored, to assess their impact on business and on employment opportunities. The Government will reconsider the position in due course if objective evidence of adverse effects emerges.

ENVIRONMENT

Toxic Materials

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment pursuant to his answer of 6 December, Official Report, column 134, if he will publish the results of the monitoring of particulate matter, sulphur dioxide, nitrogen oxides, carbon monoxide and oxygen, and of the samples and analysis of heavy metals and dioxins, being produced in the trials of substitute fuels at Redland Aggregates plant at Thrislington, County Durham.

Mr. Atkins: The results of the monitoring of particulate matter, sulphur dioxide, nitrogen oxides, oxygen and dioxins produced in the trials up to 9 November 1994, with substitute fuels at the Redland Aggregates plant at Thrislington, County Durham, are already available on the public registers held by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution at Leeds, and at the offices of Sedgefield district council in Spennymoor and the National Rivers Authority in Gosforth.

Samples for heavy metal analysis have been taken, and when the results are available, they will also be placed on the public registers.

Carbon monoxide monitors are already installed on the plant as part of the standard operational control. Results obtained prior to IPC authorisation from these monitors can be made available to the public under the Environmental Information Regulations, SI 1992 No. 3240.

Burlington House

Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the effect on the work of the learned societies of requiring a charge equivalent to a full commercial rental value to be paid on their tenancy of Burlington house.

Sir Paul Beresford: I will write to the hon. Member.

Advisory Committees

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of the meetings held, the secretarial and advisory arrangements, the budgeted and actual expenditure and the subjects of any reports and submissions produced by (a) the Advisory Committee on Business and the Environment, (b) the Inland Waterways Amenity Advisory Council, (c) the Property Advisory Group, (d) the Assessment Panel for Construction Research and (e) the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment; and if he will list the functions and objectives of each body.

Sir Paul Beresford: The information requested is set out for each body in turn:

Advisory Committee on Business and the Environment

The Committee was established to provide a forum for strategic level dialogue between Government and business on environmental issues; to mobilise the business community in demonstrating good environmental practice; and to provide a link with, and focus attention on, international business initiatives on the environment.

The committee was reconstituted in November 1993 and five new working groups established. Since then the main committee has met five times and 26 working group meetings have taken place.

The secretarial work of the main committee is shared between the DOE and DTI while the DOE provides secretarial support for four working groups and the DTI the other.

The DOE's expenditure on secretarial support, reports and publicity in 1993–94 was approximately £150,000. There was no separately allocated budget for this work. DTI related costs are not available.

Reports published include:

Inland Waterways Amenity Advisory Council

The council's function is to provide longer-term strategic advice to British Waterways and the Minister on amenity and recreational aspects.

The council meets about six times each year.

The secretarial services are provided by British Waterways and costs are shown in British Waterways annual report and accounts. The Department's expenditure in 1993–94 for the chairman's remuneration was £13,900 against a budget of £18,500.

The group held 10 main meetings and six sub-group meetings during 1993–94.

The secretariat is provided by the DOE. The Department's expenditure in 1993–94 was approximately £23,000. There was no separately allocated budget.

No reports or submissions were published during 1993–94.

Assessment Panel for Construction Research

The panel provides independent expert advice on the evaluation of the Department's construction research programme and on development of its future strategy.

The panel, in its present form came into being in May 1994 and has met three times.

Secretarial services are provided by the Department at an estimated cost for 1994–95 of £8,700.

No reports have been issued yet.

Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment

The committee provides advice to Ministers and others on the exercise of specified powers under the Environmental Protection Act 1990; on releases to the environment of animals, plants and genetically modified organisms; on human health aspects of releases to the environment; and on research needs.

The committee met six times in 1993–94.

The secretarial services are provided by the Department. The budgeted expenditure for 1993–94 was £21,700 and actual expenditure £15,600.

Mr. Atkins: I will write to the hon. Member.

Special Advisers

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) of 1 December, Official Report, column 877, if he will make a statement regarding his Department's expenditure on special advisers in each of the last three financial years and for the financial year 1979–80.

Sir Paul Beresford: I refer to the answer given to the hon. Member by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary on 19 December, Official Report, column 937.

Mr. Atkins: As I indicated in answer to the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms Ruddock) on 22 November—Official Report, columns 66-67— Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution currently in discussion with the generators both about the operation of their FGD-equipped plant in the context of each company's overall generating operations and more generally about improvement programmes for all of the companies' stations. Decision on these questions will be taken in the light of an assessment of what constitutes BATNEEC—best available techniques not entailing excessive costs.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what guidelines have been set by the International Atomic Energy Agency for site selection of a deep repository for radioactive waste;

(2) if he will list the guidelines set by the Institute of Geologists, now the British Geological Survey, for site selection of a deep repository for radioactive waste.

Mr. Atkins: This information should be obtained from the organisation concerned.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce the outcome of the radioactive waste review.

Mr. Atkins: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Attercliffe (Mr. Betts) on 6 December, Official Report, column 132.

Cleveland

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how the timetable for proposed reorganisation of Cleveland is affected by the county council's application for a judicial review.

Mr. Curry: We have laid before Parliament, for its approval, a draft order to give effect to reorganisation in Cleveland on 1 April 1996. If that approval is given, we shall consider the position in relation to the county council's outstanding application for leave to appeal to the Court of Appeal before the order is made.

National Environmental Technology Centre

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many of the sites for monitoring air pollution operated by the National Environmental Technology Centre are sited at a road; and if he will list the sites.

Mr. Atkins: The National Environmental Technology Centre currently operates the automatic monitoring station at the Cromwell road kerbside site on behalf of the Department of the Environment. The National Environmental Technology Centre is also contracted by the Department to co-ordinate the on-going national survey of nitrogen dioxide using passive diffusion tube samplers. Measurements are being made at nearly 1,300 locations across the United Kingdom. One in four of the diffusion tubes sites have been specifically chosen to be at roadside locations. The locations of these sites can be obtained from the National Environmental Technology Centre.

Palm House, Liverpool

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in restoring Palm house, Liverpool; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Paul Beresford: As the hon. Member is aware, essential repair work to the fabric of the building was completed with urban programme funding of £0.254 million in 1993. Liverpool city council has now submitted to the Government office for Merseyside an objective 1 funding application for future phases of the work in 1995 and beyond. I expect the outcome of the objective 1 bidding round to be announced in May 1995.

Nirex

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) when he expects to make a decision on the planning application by Nirex to build a rock characterisation facility;

(2) how many representations he has received in opposition to the proposed Nirex rock characterisation facility; and how many of these favoured on-site, above-ground storage of nuclear waste;

(3) what plans he has for a public inquiry into the application by Nirex to build a rock characterisation facility.

Sir Paul Beresford: I will write to the hon. Member.

Air Pollution

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the names of the sites for recording air pollution in the Yorkshire and Humberside region.

Mr. Atkins: The following automatic monitoring stations funded by the Department of the Environment are located in the Yorkshire and Humberside region:

Barnsley, Leeds, Kingston-upon-Hull, Sheffield and High Muffles in North Yorkshire.

The Department in collaboration with local authorities is supporting on-going national surveys of nitrogen dioxide and sulphur dioxide using passive diffusion tube samplers. Measurements of smoke are also made at the same sites as those used for the sulphur dioxide measurements. The local authorities listed are involved in these surveys.

(a) Nitrogen Dioxide:
Humberside
—Boothferry, Glanford, Grimsby and Kingston-upon-Hull.
Yorkshire
—Bradford, Calderdale, Doncaster, Hambleton, Harrogate, Kirklees, Leeds, Richmondshire, Rotherham, Ryedale, Scarborough, Selby and Wakefield.

[There are four diffusion tube sites in each area.]

(b) Smoke/Sulphur Dioxide:
Humberside
—Cleethorpes (2), Glanford (1), Grimsby (1), Kingston-upon-Hull (1) and Scunthorpe (1).
Yorkshire
—Barnsley (11), Bradford (2), Calderdale (2), Doncaster (4), Kirklees (3), Leeds (3), Rotherham (4), Scarborough (1), Selby (1), Sheffield (1), Wakefield (9 including Normanton) and York (2).

[The number in brackets gives the number of sites in each area.]

There are also acid deposition monitoring stations situated at High Muffles and Thorganby. The levels of lead and nine other inorganic elements are measured in Leeds.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what pollutants are included in the collection of air samples at his Department's fund monitoring stations.

Mr. Atkins: The Department of the Environment monitors the levels of ozone, nitrogen oxides, carbon monoxide, sulphur dioxide, fine particulates as PM10 and 26 volatile organic compounds, including benzene and 1,3-butadiene across the United Kingdom using a number of different automatic analysers.

The Department in collaboration with local authorities is supporting on-going national surveys of nitrogen dioxide and sulphur dioxide using passive diffusion tube samplers. Measurements of smoke are also made at the same sites as those used for the sulphur dioxide measurements.

Further networks monitor the levels of (a) lead and nine other inorganic elements, and (b) toxic organic micropollutants such as dioxins and polyaromatic hydrocarbons.

Housing Corporation

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he has given to separating the funding and the monitoring roles of the Housing Corporation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: In the Government's response to the Environment Select Committee's second report 1993, Cm 2363, we said that we believed the link between the monitoring and funding roles of the Housing Corporation was a natural and positive one and that the former role had a vital part to play in informing decisions on the latter. However, we undertook to keep this under review in further reviews of the Housing Corporation.

The Government announced a prior options review of the Housing Corporation on 14 December, Official Report, column 663. This will provide an opportunity to consider this again.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total planned expenditure in Berkshire by the Housing Corporation in the financial year 1994–95.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The Housing Corporation currently estimates that some £13 million of its capital budget for 1994–95 will be spent in Berkshire.

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total planned expenditure in Dorset by the Housing Corporation in the financial year 1994–95.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The Housing Corporation currently estimates that some £14 million of its capital budget for 1994–95 will be spent in Dorset.

Waste Management

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the proposed national waste strategy will continue to emphasise the hierarchy of waste management options including reduction, re-use and recycling, including materials recycling, composting and energy recovery contained in the Department of Environment's recent response both to the 17th report of the Royal Commission on environmental pollution and to the second report of Session 1994–94 from the House of Commons Environment Select Committee, HC63.

Mr. Atkins: Yes, I can confirm that the waste hierarchy will be a key policy for the waste strategy that is shortly due to be issued for consultation.

Housing Associations

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what support his Department gives to housing societies and smaller housing associations.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The Housing Corporation provides capital funding to registered housing associations through its approved development programme which amounts to some £1.5 billion in 1994–95. Smaller associations, defined as those with fewer than 500 dwellings, received around 11 per cent. of allocations for new scheme approvals in 1994–95.

In addition, the Housing Corporation's total revenue grant support for registered housing associations, including smaller associations, is expected to amount to some £195 million in 1994–95.

Micro-organisms

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is Her Majesty's Government's policy in respect of (a) the agreement made at the UN environment programme conference in 1993 that a state has sovereignty over its flora and fauna and (b) whether this sovereignty extends to micro-organisms; and what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to ensure the categorisation and identification of micro-organisms.

Mr. Atkins: The United Kingdom has ratified the convention on biological diversity, which covers inter alia flora, fauna and micro-organisms. Article 3 of the convention recognises that states have, in accordance with the charter of the United Nations and the principles of international law, the sovereign right to exploit their own resources pursuant to their own environmental policies.

In order to improve our knowledge of micro-organisms, research is in progress in subjects such as soil microbiology. The Office of Science and Technology commissioned an independent review of publicly funded microbial culture collections in the United Kingdom. The Government are currently considering its findings, which were published in November.

Homelessness

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures his Department is taking in combating the problem of homelessness in Merseyside, with particular reference to Liverpool; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The responsibility for dealing with homelessness in Merseyside rests with the local authorities there. In Liverpool, for example, the city council has made extensive provision to meet the demands of the homeless and has good partnership arrangements with voluntary agencies and housing associations. There are no homeless households currently in bed and breakfast in Liverpool and I am pleased with that clear indication of the success of that approach.

Merseyside

Mr Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has in the near future to meet the Mersey Partnership to discuss the promotion of Merseyside's development opportunities, business development, land reclamation and environmental improvements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: I have no immediate plans to visit the Mersey Partnership, but I am in regular contact with many of the members.

The Mersey Partnership, with its drive and energy, is developing and putting across a clear and positive image of Merseyside; its wide membership across the public and private sectors has an important part to play.

Smoke Detectors

Mr. Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if Her Majesty's inspector of pollution will establish the number of ionising smoke detectors disposed of in household rubbish and the safety implications of the accumulation of radioactive material in waste tips from such disposals.

Mr. Atkins: Disposal of smoke detectors containing very small radioactive sources is controlled under the terms of the Radioactive Substances (Smoke Detectors) Exemption Order 1980, as amended, made under the Radioactive Substances Act 1993. The order provides exemption from regulation under the full requirements of the Act but imposes limits and conditions on the accumulation and disposal of these articles. These requirements are designed to ensure that public and environmental safety is fully maintained and Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution is satisfied that this is the case. Because these sources are of very low radiological significance, it is not necessary to record the numbers disposed of in refuse.

Regional Planning

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to release the draft regional planning guidance for Yorkshire and Humberside.

Sir Paul Beresford: Next month.

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is currently the average time between his Department receiving the draft regional planning conference advice and his Department issuing draft regional guidance.

Sir Paul Beresford: The average time for the completion of draft regional planning guidance after receipt of the conference advice is approximately 14.5 months.

National Rivers Authority

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total budget of the west and south-east areas of the Thames region of the National Rivers Authority for the financial year 1994–95.

Mr. Atkins: I am informed by the National Rivers Authority that in the west and south-east areas of its Thames region the total budget for 1994–95 was as follows:

Thames West—£10.6 million

Thames South-East—£20.7 million

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total budget of the area of the south-western region of the National Rivers Authority which covers Dorset for the financial year 1994–95.

Mr. Atkins: I am informed by the National Rivers Authority that in the south Wessex area of their south western region, which covers Dorset, the total budget for 1994–95 was £7.6 million.

Hares

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice) on 14 December, Official Report, column 661, what was the estimated population of hares in Great Britain in (a) 1974, (b) 1979, (c) 1984, (d) 1989, (e) 1990 and (f) 1991.

Sir Paul Beresford: For 1991, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside to the hon. Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice) on 14 December, Official Report, column 661. No Government estimate of the hare population exists for the years in question up to and including 1990.

Cemfuel

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the current test burn of Cemfuel at the Castle Cement works, Ribblesdale, is due to end.

Mr. Atkins: The extra monitoring work at Ribblesdale is now complete and the operator is preparing an assessment of the results and the effect of emissions on the environment.

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information has so far appeared on the public register in respect of Castle Cement's burning of Cemfuel at its Ribblesdale plant; what further information he expects to appear between the present time and the conclusion of the test burn of Cemfuel; and what assessment Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has made of the quality and quantity of such information.

Mr. Atkins: All information prior to the protocol of June 1994 is on the public registers. Monitoring trials conducted under the protocol were supervised by HMIP and the final report of these, along with the assessment of environmental effects, is expected at the end of 1994. HMIP is assessing these results.

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measurements of total organic carbon have been taken in the emissions from Castle Cement's kilns when they are burning Cemfuel.

Mr. Atkins: Measurement of total organic carbon has been part of all tests carried out.

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measurements of total organic carbon in the emissions from Castle Cement's kilns when they are burning Cemfuel have been made during electrostatic precipitator trips caused by high levels of carbon monoxide.

Mr. Atkins: Electrostatic trips are few and far between and last only for a matter of minutes. No total organic carbon measurements have been taken in these periods.

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what conclusions Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has drawn from the information placed on the public register in relation to the burning of hazardous waste at Ribblesdale.

Mr Atkins: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution's preliminary assessment of the results available so far indicates that, compared with coal, the burning of Cemfuel does not have a net adverse environmental effect.

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many deliveries of Cemfuel have been made to Castle Cement's works at Ribblesdale; how many inspections have been made of them by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution; and how many have been rejected as a result of failing to meet the specification.

Mr. Atkins: There have been approximately 1,500 tanker deliveries of Cemfuel to the Ribblesdale site in the last 12 months. The HMIP site inspector has been present and witnessed the unloading operation on numerous occasions. Three loads were rejected in the last 12 months—one load, because the seals on the tanker were not intact, and two, because the paperwork showed fuel of unaccceptable quality.

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many occasions Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has been informed by Castle Cement that Cemfuel has proved inferior to its specifications and had therefore been rejected for use; and what action Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution took on each occasion.

Mr. Atkins: Three loads were rejected in the last 12 months—one load, because the seals on the tanker were not intact, and two, because the paperwork showed fuel of unacceptable quality.

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution proposes to take as a result of the amount of particulate matter in the emissions from Castle Cement's works at Ribblesdale exceeding the authorised limit.

Mr. Atkins: The particulate emissions from all kilns comply with the authorised limits.

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether (a) his officials in the directorate of pollution control and wastes and (b) Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution have seen the British Cement Association's code of practice on the use of recycled liquid fuels in the manufacture of cement; and whether they were consulted on its contents before publication.

Mr. Atkins: The British Cement Association's code of practice was issued by the association on its own initiative and it did not consult officials in the Department or in Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution before publishing it. Officials have seen the code.

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what analysis Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution had made of the contents of the uncombusted waste materials among emissions from cement kilns where hazardous wastes are being burnt.

Mr. Atkins: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has made no measurements of the uncombusted waste materials from the cement kilns, but tests carried out by the company have confirmed a thermal destruction efficiency of almost 100 per cent.

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the conditions for the trial burning of hazardous wastes apply equally to all cement kilns at which such waste is being burnt.

Mr. Atkins: All trials authorised after the protocol of June 1994 have to comply with the same requirements.

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what conclusions Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has reached on whether there is a risk to public health or the environment associated with the emission of uncombusted waste materials as a result of a trip on the operation of a cement kiln when it is burning hazardous waste; and what mechanism exists for measuring the products of incomplete combustion on such occasions.

Mr. Atkins: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution is satisfied that there is no risk to public health or the environment associated with uncombusted waste materials as a result of any process trips. Whenever a trip occurs, the supply of Cemfuel to the kiln is automatically stopped and not restarted until normal operating conditions have resumed. The cement materials in the kiln remain hot for several hours, and this ensures the destruction of any remaining waste.

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many occasions the plume from any kiln at Ribblesdale has grounded in the last 12 months; how many times operations have been suspended as a result of inadequate emission velocity; and how many occasions members of the public have complained to Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution about plume grounding.

Mr. Atkins: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has no records of the number of times the plumes from the chimneys at Ribblesdale works have grounded in the last 12 months. Operations have never been suspended as a result of inadequate emission velocity. There have been around 50 complaints about plume grounding by members of the public in the last 12 months, although not all these have been confirmed.

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many site visits have been made to Castle Cement's works at Ribblesdale which have been (a) announced and (b) unannounced.

Mr. Atkins: There have been more than 30 visits to the Castle Cement Ribblesdale site in the last 12 months. Of these, four were unannounced.

Repossessions

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many repossessions there have been in each year since 1989; and what assessment he has made of the proportion of those repossessed by the United Kingdom subsidiaries of United States companies.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The number of properties taken into possession by mortgage lenders in the United Kingdom in each year since 1989 is as follows:

Year	Number	Per cent of total mortgages
1989	15,810	0.17
1990	43,890	0.47
1991	75,540	0.77
1992	68,540	0.70
1993	58,540	0.58
1994 (first half)	25,020	0.24

The Department does not have access to information that shows the number of properties taken into possession by individual lenders.

Housing Revenue Account

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to issue the housing revenue account subsidy determinations for 1995–96.

Mr. Curry: I have decided to confirm the proposals for guideline rents and management and maintenance allowances, which were set out in my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Vale of Glamorgan (Mr. Sweeney) on 24 November, Official Report, columns 250-51. I have also decided to confirm the other proposals, subject to some revisions in the light of the responses received. The determinations will be issued later this week. Copies will be placed in the Library.

Local Authorities (Companies)

Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his proposals for local authority participation in companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: It is our intention that where authorities participate in companies led by the private sector, there should be few controls other than those applicable generally under the Companies Act. In other cases, our intention is that local authorities' interests in companies should be subject to special capital finance and propriety controls.

We have today issued for consultation to the local authority associations and to local authorities a draft of an order which my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Wales propose to make under the Local Government and Housing Act 1989, and which would give effect to these intentions from the financial year 1995–96. We have asked for all comments on the draft order to be submitted by 31 January 1995.

I have arranged for copies of the draft order, together with an explanatory guide, to be placed in the Library of the House.

Environment Agency Advisory Committee

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, following his announcement of 18 November, Official Report, column 309, he will announce the member of the Environment Agency Advisory Committee who has been nominated by the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Gummer: I have invited Professor Ron Edwards, currently a member of the board of the National Rivers Authority, to become a member of the Environment Agency Advisory Committee. Professor Edwards was recommended to me by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Wildlife

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress he has made in implementing the changes to controls on wildlife following his announcement of 20 July.

Sir Paul Beresford: Good progress is being made in implementing the changes my hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside announced on 20 July, Official Report, columns 319–21.

We have today issued eight general licences to allow the sale of specimens of certain cockatoos, macaws, tortoises, owls and wildfowl, and the competitive showing of certain captive-bred birds, subject to conditions, without the need for an individual licence from the Department; and a general licence allowing the sale of the common toad, common frog, smooth newt and palmate newt, subject to certain conditions.

These licences will take effect from 1 January.

We are now imposing tighter conditions on a greater number of individual import permits to ensure that the specimens concerned are not used for any other purpose than that for which they were imported. The Department's wildlife inspectorate will be stepping up inspections to ensure that importers comply with these conditions. We have also increased the scrutiny of advertisements offering endangered species for sale to ensure that the transactions comply with the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species and national legislation.

We have consulted a wide range of interested individuals and organisations about the proposal to abolish the registered sellers of dead birds scheme. Having taken into account all the responses received, we have decided to proceed to abolish the scheme and to introduce general licences.

We have established a working group to review the enforcement of wildlife controls. Its terms of reference are:

> "To consider the scope for improvements in the enforcement of wildlife species controls in Great Britain with particular reference to the roles of the Police, HM Customs and Excise, the DOE Wildlife Inspectorate and the NGOs, and to report to the Department of the Environment by the end of July 1995".

The first meeting was held on 21 October and was attended by the police, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food investigations branch, HM Custom and Excise, the Crown Prosecution Service, the Joint Nature Conservation Committee, English Nature, the Countryside Council for Wales, Scottish Natural Heritage, TRAFFIC, RSPB, RSPCA and the National Council for Aviculture.

I intend to make a further announcement early next year about the increased use of DNA tests to enforce wildlife controls.

Countryside Stewardship Scheme

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will set out the criteria used in each year since 1991 in deciding which areas of land were suitable to receive additional access payments under the countryside stewardship scheme;

(2) how much was paid to landowners and occupiers as the flat-rate payment for providing new public access under the countryside stewardship scheme in each year since 1991;

(3) how much was spent on capital payments for providing public access on or to countryside stewardship scheme access sites in each year since 1991; and what was the number of sites for which such capital payments were made in each year.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 16 December 1994]: I will write to the hon. Member.

Lettsom Gardens, Camberwell

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to ensure that Lettsom gardens, Camberwell, remains a green area free from development and run by local residents; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Paul Beresford [holding answer 19 December 1994]: I shall write to the hon. and learned Member.

Homelessness

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the monthly cost of the provision of a single homeless persons unit mortgaged over 25 years at current mortgage interest rates; and what is the current average monthly mortgage payment.

Mr. Robert B. Jones [holding answer 19 December 1994]: As capital funding has been available from the Housing Corporation for the full cost of developing single homeless persons units, most units will have been developed without the need for borrowing. The corporation does not therefore have information available on mortgage costs.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the cumulative total of running cost provisions over the previous five years on single homeless units; and what is the average annual expenditure per unit.

Mr. Robert B. Jones [holding answer 19 December 1994]: The cumulative total provision by the Housing Corporation for the cost of housing management in single homeless units over the last five years has been £174 million at current prices. The average annual expenditure by housing associations on grant-aided schemes, taking account of income from all sources, is £6,240 per bedspace.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the cumulative total of capital expenditure over the previous five years on the provision of single homeless persons units; and what is the average cost of providing a unit.

Mr. Robert B. Jones [holding answer 19 December 1994]: At current prices, the cumulative total capital expenditure by the Housing Corporation on the provision of single homeless persons units over the five years to 1993–94 amounts to £139.5 million. The average capital cost of providing a bedspace in a shared unit over that period was £31,000.

Birds of Prey

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, by type, the number of birds of prey reported stolen in (a) 1992, (b) 1993 and (c) each month of 1994.

Sir Paul Beresford [holding answer 19 December 1994]: As thefts of birds of prey are not reportable offences, comprehensive official statistics are not kept. However, the information available to my Department indicates that the minimum figures for thefts of birds of prey from the wild in Great Britain were as follows:

1992: 47

1993: 72

Figures for 1994 are not yet available.

My Department does not keep records of birds in captivity which are subsequently stolen.

EDUCATION

Assisted Places Scheme

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many children who have received assistance through the assisted places scheme are from households in the bottom 10th disposable income levels, according to Department of Social Security statistics.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information is not available in the form requested. Parental income for the purposes of the assisted places scheme is assessed on total family income from all sources, gross of all allowances. Non-taxable social security benefits are excluded and no adjustments for the inputed value of free school meals are made as is the case with the DSS statistics.

For the school year 1993–94, the latest for which information is available, more than 11,800—40 per cent.—assisted pupils were entitled to a completely free place because their families' income fell below the threshold of £9,225 per annum. Over 80 per cent. of parents in the scheme have earnings below the equivalent national average household income.

Funding Agency for Schools

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will list the number of visits each regional representative of the Funding Agency for Schools has made to local education authorities within their designated areas.

Mr. Robin Squire: This matter is the responsibility of the Funding Agency for Schools. I have asked the chairman of the funding agency to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will instruct the Funding Agency for Schools to open its meetings to the public.

Mr. Robin Squire: No. It is for the funding agency to regulate its own proceedings. I have asked the chairman of the funding agency to write to the hon. Member.

Feeder Primary Schools

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will make a statement on the inclusion by secondary schools of named feeder primary schools within their admissions criteria.

Mr. Robin Squire: Circular 6/93 "Admissions to Maintained Schools" advises that priority may be given to children attending certain named primary schools, but that the choice of schools should be determined on objective grounds.

Public Appointments

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what information is sought at interview with candidates for appointment to paid or unpaid posts for which she is responsible as indicated in the answer to the hon. Member for Truro (Mr. Taylor) by the hon. Member for Daventry (Mr. Boswell) on 28 March 1994, Official Report, columns 519–20.

Mr. Boswell: Ministers interview candidates to gain a fuller picture of their aptitude and experience in order to ascertain their suitability for the post and their ability to make an effective contribution to the work of the relevant public body.

Grant-maintained Schools

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many (a) primary and (b) secondary schools' governing bodies were placed under a duty to consider during the school year 1993–94 whether to conduct a parental ballot on grant-maintained status and, in each case, how many ballots were held during 1993–94; and how many resulted in majorities in favour of grant-maintained status.

Mr. Robin Squire: The governing bodies of some 18,300 primary and 2,950 secondary schools in England were required during the 1993–94 school year to consider whether to hold a parental ballot on grant-maintained status.

During that year, 167 primary and 104 secondary schools held ballots. Of these, 107 ballots at primary schools and 52 at secondary schools resulted in a vote in favour of grant-maintained status.

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education which grant-maintained schools have had their admissions policies reviewed by her Department as a result of applying for (a) a change of character and (b) a change of admissions policy not amounting to a change of character; and what action has been taken.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend does not have a general power to require an admissions authority—a governing body of grant-maintained or voluntary-aided school, or a local education authority—to change its arrangements. When considering requests from grant-maintained schools for approval to vary their admission arrangements, officials may sometimes draw attention to aspects of the existing arrangements which appear to fall short of the guidance of best practice contained in circular 6/93. The Department does not keep a detailed record of such exchanges.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the total cost for the central administration of grant-maintained schools for each year since the GMS system was implemented; and what is the central administrative cost per pupil being educated within a grant-maintained school for each year since the GMS system was implemented.

Mr. Robin Squire: This information is held by the Funding Agency for Schools. I have asked the chairman of the funding agency to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the total budget for grant-maintained schools within Berkshire for 1994–95.

Mr. Robin Squire: The determination of grant for GM schools is now a matter for the Funding Agency for Schools. I have asked the chairman of the funding agency to write to the hon. Member.

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the total budget for grant-maintained schools within Dorset for 1994–95.

Mr. Robin Squire: The determination of grant for GM schools is now a matter for the Funding Agency for Schools. I have asked the chairman of the funding agency to write to the hon. Member.

Capital Allocations

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will make a statement on capital allocations for local education authority maintained schools for 1995–96.

Mr. Robin Squire: Local education authorities have today been informed of their annual capital guidelines—ACGs—for schools which, together with supplementary credit approvals, will total £426 million in 1995–96. They have also been informed of their allocations for spending by the governors of voluntary-aided and special agreement schools in their areas—the overall grant to be made available in 1995–96 will be £96 million.

Annual capital guidelines do not represent the full total of funds available to local education authorities for capital expenditure. Authorities are also able to spend additional sums from capital receipts and from their revenue budgets if they so choose.

Local authorities have received considerable resources in the last few years for building work at schools. The substantial sum available in 1995–96 is a 5.7 per cent. increase on the £403 million available in the current year and should enable local authorities to continue to make significant progress in improving the building stock.

In distributing annual capital guidelines, we have again given priority to the second and third year expenditure on work covered by ACGs in previous years; projects to provide new school places in areas of population growth—"Basic Need"; and projects to remove surplus places. For 1995–96, we are providing historically high amounts to support Basic Need. Of the total of £96 million grant for voluntary-aided schools, £38 million has been set aside for repairs. The remainder is to be provided for capital work with a small element for debt repayment; £15 million of this will support new work to provide for new school places, removal of surplus capacity and a range of improvement and replacement projects. Thirty-seven major projects have been authorised to start and a further 29 to proceed to initial design work. My right hon. Friend and I look to local education authorities and school governors to ensure that the grant is fully effectively utilised.

A total of £45 million of the ACGs total will be allocated in the form of supplementary credit approvals—SCAs—to LEAs during the course of the year.

Details of individual LEAs' ACGs and grant allocations have been placed in the Library.

Further Education Funding Council

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proportion of the Further Education Funding Council's budget for 1994–95 supports institutions in Dorset.

Mr. Boswell: The total amount of recurrent funding allocated by the Further Education Funding Council for the academic year 1994–95 is £2,610.8 million, of which £26.2 million was allocated to institutions in Dorset.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proportion of the Further Education Funding Council's budget for 1994–95 supports institutions in Berkshire.

Mr. Boswell: The total amount of recurrent funding allocated by the Further Education Funding Council for the academic year 1994–95 is £2,610.8 million, of which £33.1 million was allocated to institutions in Berkshire.

Education (Schools) Act 1992

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when she expects to lay before Parliament the 1993–94 annual report of Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools under section 4(a) of the Education (Schools) Act 1992.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend expects to be able to lay HMCI's annual report before Parliament after the Christmas recess.

Higher Education Funding Council

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what adjustment is proposed to the total standard spending to take account of the transfer of funding for fee income discretionary awards from local authorities to the Higher Education Funding Council in the 1995–96 financial year, and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: We propose to transfer £2.7 million from local authority finance to the Higher Education Funding Council for England—HEFCE—in 1995–96. This reflects the 45 per cent. reduction in the maximum tuition fee reimbursed through mandatory awards announced a year ago. This will lead to a reduction in local authorities' discretionary awards expenditure; there will be a matching increase in the funds distributed to universities and colleges through HEFCE grant.

Special Educational Provision

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many appeals for special educational provision under the Education Act 1981 are pending; what is the average time for determining these appeals; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The Department is currently dealing with some 500 appeals under sections 5(6) and 8(6) of the Education Act 1981 and related complaints under sections 68 and 99 of the Education Act 1944.

Those resolved over the last year have taken on average about 10 months to conclude. Appeals under section 8(6) tend to take the longest to process, as the courts have made it clear that we must copy correspondence from one party to the other, and allow time for comment in the interests of natural justice, until no new issues arise. In such cases, much of the time taken is beyond the Department's control.

Appeals against decisions taken by LEAs after 1 September under the Education Act 1993 are now referred to the Special Education Needs Tribunal, which is subject to different legal procedures and has a target of five months for deciding appeals.

Teacher Training Agency

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what adjustment is proposed to the total standard spending to take account of any transfer of functions from local authorities to the Teacher Training Agency for the 1995–96 financial year with respect to (a) the training of licensed and overseas trained teachers and (b) management training for head teachers; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: The transfers from local authority finance to the Teacher Training Agency in 1995–96 were £2.26 million in respect of the licensed and overseas trained teachers schemes, and £2.774 million in respect of management training for heads. These transfers reflect the transfer of responsibilities from local authorities to the Teacher Training Agency.

School Statistics

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what was the number and percentage of pupils in primary schools in (a) January 1991, (b) January 1992, (c) January 1993 and (d) January 1994 being taught in classes of (i) between 31 and 35 and (ii) more than 36 in maintained schools in each local education authority and in total;

(2) what was the number and percentage of pupils in secondary schools in (a) January 1991, (b) January 1992, (c) January 1993 and (d) January 1994 being taught in classes of between (i) 26 to 30, (ii) 31 to 35 and (iii) more than 36 in maintained schools in each local education authority and in total.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is given in the tables.

Single Regeneration Budget

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what adjustment is proposed to the total standard spending to take account of any transfer of funding for education functions from local authorities to the single regeneration budget in the 1995–96 financial year; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: A total of £47.326 million was transferred from education's share of total standard spending to the single regeneration budget in 1995–96. The single regeneration budget is designed, through education and other services, to encourage local regeneration and foster partnerships between local groups.

General National Vocational Qualifications

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what adjustment is proposed to the total spending to take account of the transfer of funding of GNVQs from local authorities to central Government in the 1995–96 financial year; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: We propose to transfer £0.25 million from local authority finance in 1995–96 for the funding of GNVQs. This transfer will be reflected in the cost to schools of candidates registered for GNVQs in 1995–96. The Government have announced that they will be providing £23 million new money over three years to support vocational education. Details of the package will be announced shortly.

Expenditure Plans

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will make a statement on the relationship between the planned provision for Ofsted for 1995–96 as set out in her answer of 29 November, Official Report, column 680, and in table 1 of the Department for Education and Office of Standards in Education departmental report for 1994–95 to 1996–97; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Planned provision for Ofsted of £98 million in 1995–96, reflects the latest estimate of the volume of primary and special school inspections next year.

The plans continue to allow for sufficient funding for a full programme of inspections to be carried out as required by legislation. Her Majesty's chief inspector announced on 8 December a range of measures designed to stimulate the market for inspections.

School Inspections

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the cost of schools inspection in (a) 1992 and (b) 1994 in constant prices.

Mr. Forth: In 1992–93 the DFE's provision for HMI and Ofsted was £30.5 million. It is not possible to disaggregate overall school inspection costs within this total. Local authorities spent some £149 million on their school inspection and advisory services.

In 1994–95, Ofsted's planned expenditure is £67 million; of this, some 55 per cent. is for the purchase of school inspections. Details of the estimated outturn expenditure by local authorities on school inspections and advisory services for 1994–95 are not yet available.

Oliver Wiley

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when she expects the appeal on behalf of Oliver Wiley under section 8(6) of the Education Act 1981 for special educational provision, lodged in February, to be determined.

Mr. Forth: I expect that a decision will be made early in the new year. I shall, of course, inform my hon. Friend of the outcome.

Debt Charge Reimbursement Scheme

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what adjustment is proposed to the total standard spending to take account of the transfer of funding, due to the recalculation of the debt charge reimbursement scheme from local authorities to the Further Education Funding Council for the 1995–96 financial year; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: We propose to transfer £1.084 million into local authority finance in 1995–96 in respect of the debt charge reimbursement scheme. This reflects the fact that the amount of money paid by the Further Education Funding Council—FEFC—under the scheme is lower than had been assumed when the original transfer of funds from local authorities to the FEFC was calculated.

Ofsted

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what adjustments were made to the total standard spending to take account of the transfer of functions from local authorities to the Office for Standards in Education in each financial year since 1992–93;

(2) what adjustment is proposed to the total standard spending to take account of any transfer functions for local authorities to the Office for Standards in Education in the 1995–96 financial year; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The amounts transferred from local authority finance to Ofsted were £19 million in 1993–94 and a further £37 million in 1994–95. There are no proposals for further transfers in 1995–96. The phased transfer reflects the gradual transfer of functions from local authorities to Ofsted.

Cash Limits

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what changes she plans to cash limits on votes within her responsibility for 1994–95.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The cash limit for class X, vote 1, schools, research and miscellaneous services will be reduced by £3.5 million from £803,796,000 to £800,296,000. The reduction will be used to offset an increase in the non-voted cash limit DFE-LACAP for local authority capital for school building projects. The local authority capital cash limit DFE-LACAP will therefore be increased by £3.5 million from £39,398,000 to £42,898,000.

Postgraduate Students

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what changes she intends to make to her Department's scheme of support for postgraduate students for the academic year 1995–96.

Mr. Boswell: Under the Department's postgraduate bursary support scheme, more than 750 students received support in 1994–95. My right hon. Friend has decided, in the light of other demands and priorities, to reduce the funding available for the scheme by 10 per cent. from 1995–96. The funding reduction will not affect students already on course.

The maximum level of fees payable through the scheme will be £2,430 for 1995–96. This will preserve the value of the postgraduate fee in real terms.

HEALTH

Health Authority Staff

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many staff have been employed, by category, by each family health services authority in each of the last five years.

Mr. Malone: The available information will be placed in the Library. Family health services authorities were created in September 1990. Since 1990 it has not been possible to identify the numbers and categories of staff employed by individual authorities.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many staff have been employed, by category, by each regional health authority in each of the last five years.

Mr. Malone: The information available will be placed in the Library. It is not possible to identify the numbers of medical and dental staff employed by individual authorities nor has it been possible since 1990 to identify the numbers and categories of non-medical staff by individual authority.

Treatment Costs

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average cost of (a) treating a patient on the hospital waiting list, (b) providing an out-patient appointment, (c) treating a patient in an emergency in casualty, (d) treating an NHS patient in a private hospital under the last waiting list initiative, (e) a modern health centre suitable for general practitioners and their staff, (f) a heart bypass operation, (g) a hip replacement operation, (h) a cataract removal operation and (i) treating an asthma attack sufferer.

Mr. Sackville: Information on the treatment costs of elective hospital admissions is not separately available. The average cost for all acute in-patient and day case episodes in 1992–93—the latest year for which information is available—was about £1,004, and for an out-patient attendance £59.

The available expenditure information does not distinguish patients treated in an emergency in accident and emergency departments from those returning for routine follow-up appointments.

Five hundred and twelve waiting list patients were treated in private facilities as part of the additional activity purchased in February and March 1994 under the last stage of the central waiting times fund, at an average cost of £1,552 each. For the details I refer the right hon. Member to the reply the then Minister for Health, my right hon. Friend the Member for Peterborough (Dr. Mawhinney), gave the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr Blunkett) on 14 June at columns 387-88. The treatments purchased included complex and costly procedures resulting in a relatively high average cost per case.

The provision of premises is a matter for general practitioners and the costs of providing them are not available centrally.

The information requested for the average cost of heart bypass, hip replacement and cataract removal operations, and of treating asthma attack sufferers, is not available centrally.

Alcoholism

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the effect of the implementation of proposals in the recent Green Paper "Tackling Drugs Together", on the levels of alcoholism.

Mr. Bowis: "Tackling Drugs Together" sets out the Government's strategy for combating illegal drug use, not alcoholism.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health to what use the funds made available to the Health Education Authority for its alcohol programme have been put; and what is to become of the various projects funded by this money following the Health Education Authority's announcement that it intends to discontinue the programme.

Mr. Bowis: The Health Education Authority has not discontinued its alcohol work. Its budget for 1994–95 includes £1,159,000 for this work. This has financed the Drinkwise campaign, workplace activities, dissemination of the sensible drinking message, support for health authorities' purchasing functions and other work.

Obesity

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of (a) men and (b) women in each regional health authority were obese in 1986–87 and in each year since then for which figures are available.

Mr. Sackville: The data are not available centrally in the form requested.

However, information at national level has been published by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys. Figures derived from:

(i) the "Dietary and Nutritional Survey of British Adults", published in "Health of the Nation: One Year On", show that in England in 1986–87, 7 per cent. of men and 12 per cent. of women aged between 16 and 64 were obese;

(ii) the "Health Survey for England for 1992", using data for 1991 and 1992 combined, show that in England, 13 per cent. of men and 15 per cent. of women aged between 16 and 64 were obese.

Information at below national level, in the format requested, will be available when data are published in 1995 in the "Health Survey for England for 1993".

Copies of these publications are available in the Library.

Hepatitis C Virus

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many HCV tests are given annually by the NHS.

Mr. Sackville: The number of tests for hepatitis C virus conducted by the national health service for diagnostic purposes is not available centrally.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what additional costs will be incurred on HCV testing following the High Court decision on HCV ownership.

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimated cost to the national health service of being unable to buy hepatitis C virus testing kits from Murex Diagnostics.

Mr. Sackville: The cost effects on HCV testing should be minimal, as the costs of the kits remaining on the market are comparable to those which are now withdrawn.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration she has given to the High Court decision that the hepatitis C virus is owned by an American company.

Mr. Sackville: The High Court decision related to patent rights for hepatitis C virus test kits. All current manufacturers of such test kits are in overseas ownership. We are satisfied that there will continue to be an adequate supply of test kits to the United Kingdom, and that continuing competition will ensure that these kits are supplied on a value-for-money basis.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what new arrangements will be needed for HCV testing following the High Court decision on HCV ownership.

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements have been made to obtain hepatitis C virus kits since Murex Diagnostics has been prevented from doing so.

Mr. Sackville: In some cases centres will need to establish a different source of supply for HCV test kits following the High Court decision on patent rights for such kits. Two existing kits will no longer be available, but there will continue to be an adequate supply of good quality HCV test kits from three manufacturers which will still be competing for the United Kingdom market.

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the names of the companies which supplied hepatitis C virus testing kits before Murex Diagnostics was prevented from doing so; and what are the names of those which have supplied them since.

Mr. Sackville: Ortho Diagnostic Systems Ltd., Abbot Laboratories Ltd., Organon Teknika Ltd., and Murex Diagnostics previously supplied such test kits to the United Kingdom market until the recent High Court decision relating to patent rights. Ortho and Abbott continue to supply, and Sanofi Diagnostics Pasteur Ltd. has recently entered the market, also under licence.

Community Health Councils

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which health regions advertise community health council posts externally only after internal advertising among existing health region staff has failed to result in an appointment; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: It is a matter for the regional health authorities how they deal with community health council vacancies as they arise. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairmen of the regional health authorities for further information.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines she has issued to health regions about the practice of advertising posts in community health councils externally only after internal advertisement among regional health authority staff has failed to result in an appointment.

Mr. Malone: No guidance of this nature has been issued to regions.

Social Services

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for each local authority in Greater Manchester and Lancashire, their use of independent organisations to carry out social services work, in order of the proportion of work placed outside the local authority's own social services department.

Mr. Bowis: Information is not collected centrally about the use of independent organisations by social services authorities.

Health Guidance

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she consulted the Audit Commission before health guidance TEL (94) (2) was issued.

Mr. Malone: No. The Audit Commission has responsibility for the external audit of the national health service, and it is not its role to set policy or manage the NHS.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 9 December, Official Report, column 395, how many individuals received termination payments from each of the NHS trusts listed.

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 19 December. Official Report, columns 985–86.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the salary plus bonus payments for the chief executive of each NHS trust.

Mr. Malone: Remuneration details of chief executives are published locally in trusts' annual accounts.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 9 December, Official Report, columns 394–95, what reasons were given by each NHS trust for the termination of employment in each case.

Mr. Malone: These are matters for individual trusts which have always been and remain free to determine the terms of their staffs' employment contracts.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the policy of her Department as to cancelled operations in NHS trust run hospitals.

Mr. Sackville: The national health service undertakes over 3.5 million operations every year, the vast majority on time. Our aim is to continue to reduce the number of occasions where operations have to be cancelled. We have set a national patients charter standard so that where an operation is unavoidably cancelled on the day it is due to take place, the patient will be offered a new date within one month of the cancellation.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the limitations on NHS trust chairmen and non-executive directors seeking posts or contracts with health authorities or trusts.

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 30 November at column 787.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice) of 9 December 1994, Official Report, column 395, how many termination payments have been made by NHS trusts to employees below the rank of general and senior managers; and what is the total amount for each trust to date.

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many employees of NHS trusts have been (a) dismissed, (b) made redundant, (c) given early retirement and (d) had their contracts revoked with compensation in excess of (i) the NHS redundancy provisions, (ii) £100,000 gross and (iii) £250,000 gross; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally.

Pharmacists (Prescription Fraud)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many pharmacists have been discovered by her Department to have engaged in the practice of fraudulently collecting a prescription fee from a customer and ticking the exempt box on the prescription form during the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally.

Nursing Statistics

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many (a) home helps and (b) district nurses per 1,000 people over the age of 65 years there are in the United Kingdom; and if she will publish comparative data for other European countries;

(2) how many (a) home helps (b) district nurses per 1,000 people over the age of 65 there are; and what are the equivalent figures for other European countries.

Mr. Bowis: For England, the latest available information is for 30 September 1993 and is shown in the table:

	Number per 1,000 people aged 65 or over
Home helps[1]	6.6
District nurses	1.2

Note:

[1] Whole-time equivalent numbers of home helps directly employed by social services departments.

Source:

The home help figures are derived from the annual Department of Health census of local authority social services staff.

The district nurses figures are derived from the Department's non-medical work force census.

The Population data used are the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys mid-year 1993 England figures.

Information relating to Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Scotland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland respectively. The Department does not hold comparable information about other European countries.

Prescriptions

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many items on NHS prescriptions were dispensed in 1993;

(2) how many and what percentage of NHS patients had to pay the full cost of their prescriptions in the latest year for which figures are available;

(3) how many items on NHS prescriptions dispensed in 1993 cost less than the charge for the prescription.

Mr. Malone: In 1993, some 445.43 million prescription items were dispensed by community pharmacists, appliance contractors and dispensing doctors or personally administered to patients by prescribing doctors in England, of which an estimated 222.825 million had a total cost of less than the prescription charge. Figures for the number of patients who paid prescription charges are not available.

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the criteria that enable NHS patients to get their prescriptions free of charge.

Mr. Malone: The categories of patient exempt from, or entitled to remission of charges for prescribed drugs and appliances dispensed by community pharmacists, appliance contractors and dispensing doctors are shown in the table. Drugs and appliances personally administered or applied to patients by general medical practitioners and prescribing nurses, supplied to hospital in-patients and prescribed for contraceptive purposes or for the treatment of venereal disease are free.

Patients exempt from, or entitled to remission of, charges for prescribed drugs and appliances dispensed by community pharmacists, appliance contractors and dispensing doctors:

EXEMPT

Children under 16;

Young people under 19 in full-time education;

Men aged 65 and over

Women aged 60 and over

Pregnant women and women who have had a baby in the last 12 months;

Recipients of war service disablement pensions whose treatment is for their pensionable disability;

- People with one of the following medical conditions;
- Permanent fistula (including caecostomy, colostomy, laryngostomy, ileostomy or urostomy) requiring continuous surgical dressings or an appliance;
- Forms of hypoadrenalism (including Addison's disease) for which specific substitution therapy is essential;
- Diabetes insipidus and other forms of hypopituitarism;
- Diabetes Mellitus except where treatment is by diet alone;
- Hypoparathyroidism;
- Myasthenia gravis;
- Myxoedema, or other conditions where supplemental thyroid hormone is necessary;
- Epilepsy requiring continuous anti-convulsive therapy;
- A continuing physical disability which prevents the patient from leaving home except with the help of another person.

CHARGE REMISSION

Recipients of income support and their partners;

Recipients of family credit and their partners;

Holders of AG2 certificates for full help under the NHS low income scheme and their partners

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans there are to reconsider the present level of prescription charges; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: Judgments are made each year about how finite health resources can be best targeted for maximum health gain. Perscription charges are one aspect of these considerations. An announcement will be made at the appropriate time.

Burnley Healthcare NHS Trust

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the former chairman of Burnley Healthcare NHS Trust is disqualified from serving as the chairman or non-executive director of an NHS trust.

Mr. Malone: No.

Wheelchairs

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to ensure that people who need indoor or outdoor wheelchairs can obtain then through the national health service.

Mr. Bowis: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 24 November at column 321.

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list all health authority wheelchair centres.

Mr. Bowis: A list of addresses of national health service wheelchair services will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the statutory basis for the wheelchair service.

Mr. Bowis: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 24 November at column 321.

Birth Statistics

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many births took place in England and Wales in 1993; and how many took place in (a) NHS hospitals with consultation obstetric units, (b) other NHS hospitals, (c) other hospitals, (d) at home and (e) elsewhere.

Mr. Sackville: The available information is shown in the table.

Live and still births in England and Wales 1993

	Live births	Stillbirths	All births
Total	673,497	3,855	677,322
Institutions	662,423	3,781	666,204

Note:

The "Institutions" total includes national health service hospitals—those with obstetrics and those without—other hospitals and other institutions. Information for 1993 is not available separately for types of institution.

Parental Accommodation

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general hospitals (a) provide and (b) do not provide overnight accommodation for parents visiting their sick children.

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will list by district health authority all children's hospitals giving (a) the total number of beds, (b) the total number and percentage of beds available for overnight parental accommodation and (c) the average annual number of overnight stays by parents;

(2) if she will list by district health authority all hospitals with children's wards giving (a) the total number of beds, (b) the total number and percentage of beds available for overnight parental accommodation and (c) the average annual number of overnight stays by parents.

Mr. Sackville: Information on parental overnight accommodation is not collected centrally. However, the Audit Commission report "Children First, A Study of Hospital Services" published in 1993, noted that most hospitals provide facilities for parents to stay overnight and indicated that in recent years there has been a considerable increase in the number of parents staying overnight.

Information on numbers of children's hospital beds is available in "Bed Availability for England, Financial Year 1993–94", copies of which are available in the Library.

NHS Centre for Information Technology

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what legislation was invoked to establish the NHS Centre for Information Technology in 1985; to whom the NHS Centre for Information Technology is directly accountable; and what was the employment status of the staff at its establishment.

Mr. Sackville: In 1985, Ministers agreed to set up the National Health Service Centre for Information Technology through an agency agreement with the West Midlands regional health authority. It ceased to operate in March 1988. The centre was directly accountable for its work programme to the then NHS management board's director for information and planning. The staff were NHS employees and their contracts of employment were held by the regional health authority.

Ambulance Services

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the total number of ambulances which contain trained paramedics operated by Trent regional health authority and the total number serving (a) the city of Sheffield, (b) south Yorkshire, (c) Greater Manchester and (d) the west midlands; and if she will make a statement;

(2) what is the total number of ambulances per head of population of the city of Sheffield operated by Trent regional health authority and the total number serving (a) the city of Sheffield, (b) south Yorkshire, (c) Greater Manchester and (d) the west midlands; and if she will make a statement;

(3) what is the total number of ambulances per head of population of the city of Sheffield which contain trained paramedics operated by Trent regional health authority; what is the total number serving (a) the city of Sheffield, (b) south Yorkshire, (c) Greater Manchester and (d) the west midlands; and if she will make a statement;

(4) if she will list the total number of ambulances operated by Trent regional health authority and the total number serving (a) the city of Sheffield, (b) south Yorkshire, (c) Greater Manchester and (d) the west midlands; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Information on numbers of ambulances is available from national health service trusts. The information available on paramedics listed shows the unconfirmed results of an informal survey of numbers of paramedics and other front-line staff in each ambulance service in England at the end of 1993.

Care Costs

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost to the national health service of providing long-term care for the chronically sick and terminally ill for each of the last five years.

Mr. Bowis: Information on the cost of different services provided for the chronically sick and terminally ill is not aggregated centrally. People with long-term health care needs are supported by a wide range of professionals and services within the national health service including in-patient hospital care, general practitioner and primary care support, continuing care in hospital or an alternative facility and NHS contributions towards social services led packages of care.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health, my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, West (Mr. Sackville), gave the hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) on 5 December at columns 89–90, for information on palliative care.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the projected cost to the national health service of providing long-term care for the chronically sick and terminally ill in (a) 1995–96 and (b) 1996–97.

Mr. Bowis: Financial allocations are made to district health authorities and general practitioner fundholders. They will determine the specific levels of service required to meet local priorities and the needs of their local population.

Home Births

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many of the births which took place at home in 1993 were actually planned as home births.

Mr. Sackville: There were 10,588 home births in England and Wales in 1993, of which 10,528 were live births and 60 stillbirths.

Information on how many of these births were planned as home births is not available.

Health Statistics

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will now provide the tabulations corresponding to those mentioned in her answer of 27 October, Official Report, column 820, from the maternity hospital episode system for 1992–93; and what plans her Department has to publish these tables in a statistical bulletin.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested will be placed in the Library. Future publication plans for information from the maternity hospital episode statistics system are currently under consideration.

Dementia

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people with dementia there are in (a) each district health authority area and (b) each regional health authority area in England, Wales and Northern Ireland.

Mr. Bowis: We do not collect this information centrally but it is estimated that some 5 per cent. of the population aged 65 and over suffer from dementia. Information relating to Wales and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland respectively.

Health Care International

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which health authorities have contracted with the Health Care International hospital at Clydebank to treat patients from their area; how many patients were treated from each health board area; and what was the cost of the contract to the health authority concerned.

Mr. Sackville: North West regional health authority placed individual contracts with Health Care International for the treatment of some 57 patients at a total cost of £260,000.

Psychiatry and Human Rights

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she proposes to take in response to recommendation 1235 of 1994 of the parliamentary assembly of the Council of Europe relating to psychiatry and human rights; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: The recommendation of the parliamentary assembly of the Council of Europe on psychiatry and human rights has yet to be formally adopted by the Council.

NHS Estate

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total value of the NHS estate in the current year; and what it was in 1979 in constant prices.

Mr. Sackville: The total value of the estate in the national health service, as at 1 April 1992, the last year in which it was valued, was £21,447,463,000. No valuation figures are available centrally for 1979.

Blood Transfusion Centres

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make available copies of the representations received by the National Blood Authority about the closure of the five blood transfusion centres; and what has been the total number of letters, for and against.

Mr. Sackville: These are matters for the National Blood Authority, which has undertaken a thorough and widespread consultation. The results will be carefully considered before decisions are made.

Hypertrophic Cardiomyopathy

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many deaths due to hypertrophic cardiomyopathy were recorded over the past 10 years; and if she will break down the figures by age group.

Mr. Sackville: A table showing the number of deaths for which hypertrophic obstructive cardiomyopathy—CD*425.1—was stated as the cause will be placed in the Library, as will a table showing the number of deaths for which other primary cardiomyopathies—ICD*425.4—were stated as the cause. Some of the latter include cases of hypertrophic non-obstructive cardiomyopathy, but it is not possible to make a count of such cases without disproportionate cost.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research has been done, and what findings have been made, about the causes of the fatal hypertrophic cardiomyopathy condition and which groups are vulnerable; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: It is believed that the majority of patients with hypertrophic cardiomyopathy have an inherited disorder. Therefore the families of those with the disorder are at risk of having the disease.

Ambulatory Care

Mr. Deva: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what experience has been gained elsewhere on the successful operation of an ambulatory care centre of the size of which is proposed for Guy's hospital which is separated from an in-patient service on another site; and what is her assessment of the practicability of the scheme.

Mr. Sackville: Patient care throughout the national health service is increasingly being delivered on a day case and out-patient basis and the proposals for an ambulatory care centre at Guy's would put it at the forefront of such developments.

Guy's and St. Thomas' NHS Trust has carried out considerable and detailed work on the proposals which are currently the subject of public consultation. My hon. Friend may wish to contact Lord Hayhoe, the chairman of the Guy's and St. Thomas's Hospital Trust, for further details of the proposals.

A copy of the consultation document "Looking to the Future" is available in the Library.

Chest Diseases

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will initiate a study into the level of chest diseases of those who live close to opencast coal mining operations; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The expert Advisory Committee on the Medical Effects of Air Pollutants has considered the results of a study in 1992 and concluded that there was no clear evidence that it is injurious to health to live in an area where opencast coal mining is carried out.

In October the Departments of the Environment and of Health, together with the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant in aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, announced a £5 million research programme into the effects of air pollution on health, and invited research proposals. The closing date for proposals to be received is 30 December. Proposals for research into the health effect of opencast coal mining fall within the scope of this programme and, if submitted, will be considered for commissioning as part of the programme.

Sudden Infant Death Syndrome

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects the recently appointed committee to investigate sudden infant deaths to report.

Mr. Sackville: The recently appointed expert group to investigate sudden infant death syndrome has been asked to report as soon as possible.

Mr. Tom Pinders

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps were taken to ascertain the political views of Mr. Tom Pinders before his appointment.

Mr. Malone: None.

Private Health Care

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health is she will state the total payments made in respect of private health care provisions for the treatment of NHS patients in each of the last three years.

Mr. Sackville: The level of expenditure by the national health service on health care services from non-NHS providers over the last three years is as follows:

1991–92: £208.5 million
1992–93: £267.3 million
1993–94: £357.4 million (provisional)

Source:
Annual accounts of FHSAs, regional and district health authorities.
Financial returns of NHS trusts.

These figures include other non-NHS providers such as charitable and religious hospitals, hospices, MENCAP and, MOD hospitals. No figure is held for the level of expenditure with the private sector alone.

Accident and Emergency Departments

Mr. Deva: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what previous experience there is of closing an accident and emergency department the size of that at Guy's hospital.

Mr. Sackville: There have been a number of accident and emergency departments which have been replaced successfully with minor injuries units. In developing these plans, careful account has been taken to ensure that adequate alternatives would be available for those patients requiring full accident and emergency services.

The Lambeth, Southwark and Lewisham health commission is currently consulting widely on proposals for future services at Guy's hospital.

National Blood Authority

Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps she intends to take to make public a summary of the comments received by the National Blood Authority on its consultation document "The Future of the National Blood Service";

(2) if she will give a detailed timetable for the remaining stages of the consultation process on the National Blood Authority's document "The Future of the National Blood Service".

Mr. Sackville: These are matters for the National Blood Authority. The authority has undertaken a thorough and widespread consultation on its proposals. The results will be carefully considered before decisions are made.

Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she intends to take to bring the recommendations of the National Blood Authority before Parliament.

Mr. Sackville: The National Blood Authority has undertaken a thorough and widespread consultation. the results will be carefully considered before decisions are made.

Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the appointment of zonal directors by the National Blood Authority, prior to the conclusion of the consultation process on the authority's document "The Future of the National Blood Service".

Mr. Sackville: When the National Blood Authority took over management control of the regional transfusion centres on 1 April 1994, the regional transfusion directors became directly accountable to the chief executive of the authority. The National Blood Authority decided that this change gave rise to the need for a new management structure based on three zones, notwithstanding the authority's proposals for reorganising the blood service.

Autism

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment has been made of the auditory integration training for the treatment of autism; if she will make it available on the national health service; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: Practitioners are free, within available resources, to offer desensitisation techniques such as auditory integration therapy if they consider it to be in the best interests of their patients.

Drugs (Poisoning)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what new proposals she has to improve the danger warning on labels of products on those medicinal drugs that have been involved in the fatal poisoning of more than five people in the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Sackville: None at present. All medicines are labelled to show the recommended dose and any appropriate warnings. Consideration has been given to putting explicit warnings on the labels of medicines known to be implicated in accidental or deliberate poisonings but it is felt that such warnings may actually encourage misuse and overdose. The European Commission is currently considering the whole question of warnings on medicines labels and we will participate in finalising guidance as soon as proposals are available.

Clinical Waste

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what methods are now being considered for the disposal of clinical waste by the Royal Liverpool University hospital; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for the Royal Liverpool University Hospital National Health Service Trust, which has a duty to comply with all relevant statutory requirements.

Weighted Capitation

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will supplement the information which she provided to the Health Select Committee, which was published as table 8.3 to the Committee's first special report in the 1993–94 Session, by specifying (a) the cash allocation and (b) the weighted capitation target figure in cash terms for each district health authority in 1994–95; and if she will also specify a notional weighted capitation target figure for 1994–95 for each English district health authority calculated on the basis of the modified formula described in annex 1 to the NHS executive's recent publication "HCHS Revenue Resource Allocation: Weighted Capitation Formula".

Mr. Sackville: Some figures have changed from those provided in table 8.3 following the receipt of amended data from regional health authorities. A revised table including the information requested will be placed in the Library.

There are no operational reasons for calculating notional 1994–95 capitation targets for district health authorities on the basis sought.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will specify the HCHS weighted capitation target figure in cash terms for each English district health authority in 1995–96 on the basis of the capitation formula described as (a) current and (b) modified in annex 1 to NHS executive booklet "HCHS Revenue Resource Allocation: Weighted Capitation Formula", published this autumn;

(2) what cash allocation would be made to each English district health authority, including allocations to general practitioners fundholding practices in its area, in 1995–96 on the assumption that regional health authorities disburse their 1995–96 HCHS revenue allocations on the basis of the same percentage increase for each district health authority.

Mr. Sackville: For 1995–96 it is for regional health authorities to determine weighted capitation targets, including the formula used, and allocations for each of their districts. Similarly, the hypothetical figures sought on cash allocations can be calculated only by regional health authorities.

When the regional health authorities have determined hospital and community health services revenue allocations and capitation targets for their districts in 1995–96, we will undertake an exercise to collect this information in a comparable format.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will specify in cash terms the 1995–96 HCHS weighted capitation targets for each health region calculated on the capitation formula described as (a) current and (b) modified in annex 1 to the NHS executive's recent publication "HCHS Revenue Resource Allocation: Weighted Capitation Formula", in a form that is compatible with the 1995–96 HCHS revenue allocations to regions announced on 6 December.

Mr. Sackville: The modified targets referred to are shown in the table.

Capitation targets on the basis of the current formula are not available as there are no operational reasons for these to be calculated.

Regional health authority	1995–96 Weighted capitation target £000s
Northern and Yorkshire	3,150,160
Trent	2,191,435
Anglia and Oxford	2,236,531

South and West	2,946,094
West Midlands	2,399,624
North West	3,217,091
England	23,023,897

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will place in the Library a paper explaining the data and calculations used to determine the weightings for each zone mentioned in table 5 of the NHS executive's recent publication "HCHS Revenue Resource Allocation Weighted Capitation Formula".

Mr. Sackville: Yes.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage increase or abatement (a) the three Thames adjustments, London weighting, Thames market forces factor and the Thames 3 per cent. and 1 per cent. supplements, and (b) the new all-embracing market forces factor described in the NHS executive's recent publication "HCHS Revenue Resource Allocation Weighted Capitation Formula" have on the HCHS revenue allocation to each (i) regional health authority and (ii) district health authority in England.

Mr. Sackville: The table shows:

(i) the affect in percentage terms of the Thames adjustments, London weighting and the Thames supplements used to calculate revenue capitation shares in 1994–95 and

(ii) the effect of the market forces factor used to calculate integrated—revenue and capital charges—weighted capitation shares in 1995–96.

It is for regional health authorities to make allocations to district health authorities and information on market factors to inform DHA targets is not available centrally.

Beta-interferon

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will ensure that there will be no delay in approving the drug beta-interferon as a treatment of multiple sclerosis if the current trials suggest that this drug could be useful; and when she expects trials to be completed.

Mr. Sackville: The licensing authority has always sought to ensure that there is no delay in approving any drug application. The Medicines Control Agency is now arguably the fastest assessing authority for new drugs in the world. In addition, the MCA has a fast-track procedure for considering new drugs which might offer significant public health benefits. However, in the consideration of any drug application, the licensing authority has to be satisfied as to the efficacy, safety and quality of the product before marketing.

Beta-inteferons, to be used in the treatment of multiple sclerosis, fall into a category of products which, as from 1 January 1995, will be considered through the new European licensing procedures. Such products will be granted European approvals through the so-called "centralised procedure". The Council regulation 2309/93 defines the time frame within which applications must be considered through the procedure. Applicants are required to provide data to support the safety, quality and efficacy of the product. If the clinical trials and the other data presented by the company are satisfactory and meet European requirements, then a marketing authorisation will be granted.

Because of commercial confidentiality, information on the progress of clinical trials cannot be provided.

Socio-economic Factors

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the inter-departmental working group to examine the links between socio-economic factors and health; and if she will report progress.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice her Department's variations sub-group has given (a) on the allocation of national health service resources and (b) on the need to promote interventions which reduce health inequity.

Mr. Sackville: We have not established such an inter-departmental working group. A sub-group of the Chief Medical Officer's "Health of the Nation Working Group" was set up earlier this year to consider how the Department and the national health service can effectively tackle ethnic, geographical, socio-economic and gender variations in health in the five "Health of the Nation" key areas. The sub-group is due to report to the Chief Medical Officer by spring 1995.

Dorset Health Commission

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total budget of the Dorset health commission for the year 1994–95.

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for the South and West regional health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman, Rennie Fritchie, for details.

Primary Care

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress her Department is making in developing a new needs-based formula for allocating resources for primary health care.

Mr. Malone: Work is now in hand to consider an appropriate approach to resource allocation in 1996–97 and beyond when, legislation permitting, there will be new health authorities embracing the functions of family health services authorities and district health authorities. That work will include primary care expenditure.

Hammersmith Hospital NHS Trust

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice) of 9 December 1994, Official Report, column 395, how many chief executives, general and senior managers received payments from the £122,689 quoted for Hammersmith Hospital NHS Trust; and what was the total amount of termination payments made to employees below the rank of chief executive and general and senior managers in the Hammersmith Hospital NHS Trust.

Mr. Malone: Two payments were made by Hammersmith Hospital National Health Service Trust on the termination of chief executive and general and senior managers contracts, totalling £122,689. Details of payments made to other employees are not available centrally.

Revenue Allocations

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who carried out the research for her Department which resulted in the approval of a new market forces factor for hospital and community health services revenue allocations.

Mr. Sackville: The research into the market forces was carried out by Department of Health officials.

Budget, Berkshire

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funds were allocated to projects within the Berkshire health authority for 1994–95, excluding the actual budgets for Berkshire health authority and family health services authority.

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for the Anglia and Oxford regional health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact Sir Stuart Burgess, the chairman, for details.

Cornwall Healthcare Trust

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she sought from the former employers of Mrs. Abigail Kirby-Harris prior to her appointment as chair of the Cornwall Healthcare Trust.

Mr. Bowis: The names and personal references of candidates for the post of chairman of Cornwall Healthcare National Health Service Trust were submitted to Ministers by the chairman of South Western regional health authority. Ministers appointed Mrs. Abigail Kirby-Harris on the strength of that information.

Measles-Rubella Immunisation

Mr. Coe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made in the measles-rubella immunisation campaign.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Nearly 7 million school children between the ages of five and 16 were offered immunisation against disease. Early indications are that around 90 per cent. uptake was reached in the first phase of the campaign in many areas, with some as high as 95 per cent.

It is now clear from reports which we have received from district health authorities that high levels of coverage have been achieved. Some authorities have reached 95 per cent. We also have early indications that the rise in measles notifications has been halted. This is a superb effort in the face of the forecast measles epidemic.

I congratulate all those involved in the campaign-school immunisation teams, school staff, doctors, nurses, pharmacists and health authority administrative staff. I would also like to congratulate Rotary International on its practical help with the campaign.

NHS Financing

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what increase in financial resources in real terms was awarded to the national health service in 1979, 1986, 1990 and 1993.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 13 December 1994]: The table shows the increase in Government spending on the national health service represented by the original plans for each of the relevant financial years. The further rise in Government spending on the NHS in England announced in the Budget will bring the overall increase since 1978–79 to 69 per cent. in real terms.

Financial year	Percentage real terms[1] growth over forecast outturn for previous year[2]
1979–80	2.1
1986–87	2.0
1990–91	4.9
1993–94	1.2

Burnley NHS Trust

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much was paid by Burnley NHS Trust to Mrs. Maggie Aikman when she resigned; how it was made up; and what would have been her entitlement if employed directly by the NHS.

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice) on 30 November, at column 786.

The sum paid to Mrs. Aikman was in accordance with the terms of her contract of employment with Burnley Health Care National Health Service Trust.

NHS Funding

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total amount of funding allocated to the NHS for the financial year 1995–96; what was the figure in 1994–95; how much of this total sum is allocated for 1995–96 to the Yorkshire and Northern region; and what the figure was for 1994–95.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 13 December 1994]: The sum available for revenue allocations for hospital and community health services in 1995–96 is £24,579 million. The equivalent figure for 1994–95 was £23,457 million. Most family health service funding is demand led and not allocated.

In 1995–96 the initial cash limit for Northern and Yorkshire regional health authority is £3,186,650,000. In 1994–95, initial cash limits were given to the then 14 regional health authorities. Northern regional health authority received £1,459,489,000 and Yorkshire regional health authority received £1,661,110,000.

The initial cash limit figures for Northern Yorkshire regional health authority are not strictly comparable due to a boundary change between the two allocation years.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Nigeria

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy on future military sales to Nigeria.

Mr. Goodlad: The measures announced by the European Union on 2 December 1993 remain in force. They will be reviewed only in the light of progress towards a return to civilian democratic rule in Nigeria.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what changes were made to United Kingdom policy on arms sales to Nigeria following the military coup of November 1993.

Mr. Goodlad: I refer the hon. Lady to the written reply I gave the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) on 2 December 1993, at column 680.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's diplomatic relations with the Nigerian Government.

Mr. Goodlad: We are urging the Nigerian Government to take all possible steps towards an early return to democratic civilian rule and to improve their performance on human rights.

Liberia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what initiatives are being taken by the European Union to assist humanitarian efforts in Liberia and to bring a peaceful solution to the strife.

Mr. Goodlad: We have given our strong support to the efforts of the Economic Community of West African States and the United Nations to sustain the Liberian peace process, and have urged our European partners to do so.

The European Community humanitarian office in Monrovia manages a wide range of essential humanitarian relief projects. The latest of these, a UNICEF water and sanitation project for Monrovia, is being finalised.

Kenya

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the implications for Her Majesty's Government's policy towards Kenya of the withdrawal by the Kenyan Government of citizenship from Sheikh Khalid Balala; and what plans he has to raise the matter in bilateral and multilateral meetings with the Kenyan Government.

Mr. Goodlad: This is a matter for the Kenyan Government.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Kenyan Government about the number of applications in the current year for asylum in the United Kingdom from Kenyan passport holders.

Mr. Goodlad: I have made no representations to the Kenyan Government concerning the number of asylum applications this year by Kenyan nationals. The high commissioner in Nairobi has discussed with the Kenyan Government the problems caused by asylum claims from both Somali nationals travelling on Kenyan passports and Kenyan nationals who are ethnic Somalis subsequently claiming to be Somali citizens travelling on false Kenyan passports.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 6 December, Official Report, column 170, what assessment he has made of the nuclear facilities, storage areas and equipment at the Murmansk naval base as a threat to the air, ocean, water or fisheries of the United Kingdom and its NATO alies.

Mr. Goodlad: These visits, to which my right hon. and learned Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office referred in his answer of 6 December, were not for the purpose of an assessment of that kind. The purpose of such visits is to improve co-operation and understanding between our armed forces.

Special Advisers

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) of 1 December, Official Report, column 819, if he will make a statement regarding his Department's expenditure on special advisers in each of the last three financial years and for the financial year 1979–80.

Mr. Goodlad: I refer to the hon. Gentleman to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary on 19 December Official Report, column 937.

Intergovernmental Conference

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has had consultations with the United Kingdom's partners in the European Community about the start date of the intergovernmental conference in 1996.

Mr. Goodlad: To date has been discussed formally, but most of my colleagues expect the conference to be convened in the first half of 1996.

Gulf War

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many safe areas were created by the United Nations for the protection of civilians in the Gulf war; and how many of these were not held by Muslim armed forces.

Mr. Goodlad: There were no safe areas created by the United Nations during the Gulf war. But in April 1991 a safe haven was created in northern Iraq to protect the civilian population, the vast majority of whom were Muslims of Kurdish origin.

Mediterranean Basin

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what actions he proposes to take in response to recommendation 1249 of 1994, of the parliamentary assembly of the Council of Europe relating to co-operation in the Mediterranean basin; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: We are considering recommendation 1249 in the context of policies towards the Mediterranean which are already being pursued by other forums such as the European Union.

Gibraltar

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assurances he gave the Chief Minister of Gibraltar during his telephone conversation on 14 December about the administration and stewardship of the colony by the local administration.

Mr. Goodlad: My hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office made clear to the Chief Minister our concern at the contents of a report in The Independent that day.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what considerations led him to telephone the Chief Minister of Gibraltar on 14 December; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: My hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office made clear to the Chief Minister our concern at the contents of a report in The Independent that day.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what plans Her Majesty's Government have to ensure that the spirit and letter of the European Union treaties are applied to Gibraltar and its people; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what representations Her Majesty Government have made, and when, to the European Commission or other European Union agency, about the interpretation of the European treaties by Spain in respect of Gibraltar and its people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: We expect Gibraltar to be accorded those rights to which it is entitled by virtue of its status within the European Union. We have made this clear to other member states whenever necessary, for example over the application of the draft external frontiers convention to Gibraltar.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions Her Majesty's Government have had with Government of Gibraltar regarding the future of the constitution of Gibraltar; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The Chief Minister told us in 1992 that he would like to see a new constitution. We have listened to his concerns.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs with whom responsibility lies for the control of the police in Gibraltar; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The Governor of Gibraltar.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the differences between the rights of European citizenship of the people of Gibraltar and of the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The people of Gibraltar enjoy rights commensurate with the special status negotiated for Gibraltar within the European Community at the time of United Kingdom accession and in subsequent legislation.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his time scale for resolving the problem of delays at the Spanish-Gibraltar frontier imposed by the Spanish authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The secondary checks at the Spanish-Gibraltarian frontier which were the cause of recent unprecedented delays have been lifted. We wish to see all disproportionate checks at this frontier ended permanently.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) with whom responsibility lies for detecting and combating the illegal importation of drugs in Gibraltar; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make a statement on the standards of conduct and stewardship needed by authorities or agencies subordinate to the Gibraltar Government to combat the illegal importation of drugs; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will make a statement on the conduct and stewardship of customs control carried out by the Gibraltar Government.

Mr. Goodlad: Responsibility rests with the Gibraltar police and customs authorities. We have assisted them through the provision of equipment, including two fast patrol launches. Over the past year, just under 2 tonnes of drugs have been seized and over 490 drugs-related arrests made.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what are Her Majesty's Government's responsibilities for money laundering in Gibraltar; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make a statement on the standards of conduct and stewardship of the Government of Gibraltar in respect of their fulfilment of their responsibilities in respect of combating money laundering; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: We have responsibility for good government in Gibraltar and for Gibraltar's implementation of relevant EC law on money laundering. Money laundering is a criminal offence in Gibraltar. We have furthermore received assurances from the Government of Gibraltar that Gibraltar is in the process of implementing the EC money laundering directive.

North Korea

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to restore economic and political relations with North Korea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: We have never maintained formal relations with North Korea. North Korea has, however, entered into a number of commitments in its recent agreement with the United States, an agreement which we have welcomed. Any moves by us to establish contacts with North Korea will depend on the progress it makes in fulfilling these commitments.

East Timor

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he received on 7 December from Timorese people in Lisbon to the British embassy about the relationship between Britain and Indonesia; and what was his response.

Mr. Goodlad: A letter signed by two individuals describing themselves as members of the Timorese resistance was handed into Her Majesty's embassy in Lisbon on 7 December. It gave no address to which to reply.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on sovereignty in respect of East Timor.

Mr. Goodlad: The United Kingdom has not recognised Indonesia's annexation of East Timor. We believe that the continuing dialogue between Indonesia and Portugal, under the UN Secretary-General's auspices, offers the best prospect for reaching agreement on a just, comprehensive and internationally acceptable settlement on the territory's future.

Somalia

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the total number of applications outstanding concerning Somalis who have applied for entry certificates for family reunification; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: It is not possible to collate this information without disproportionate cost on a worldwide basis. However, there are approximately 850 such applicants awaiting interview in Addis Ababa and Djibouti, and 1,700 such applications pending by the Home Office after being referred by out post in Addis Ababa.

Intergovernmental Conference

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, in the run-up to the intergovernmental conference, he will be issuing a White Paper or other public document setting out the Government's view of the key issues and the IGC outcome it will be seeking.

Mr. Goodlad: We have no such plans at the moment. It is not yet possible to say what the agenda of the 1996 IGC will be. But we will keep Parliament informed, and answer questions, in the course of normal parliamentary business.

Boat People

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he proposes to take in respect of those boat people formally detained in Hong Kong whom the Vietnamese refuse to accept as Vietnamese, the Chinese as Chinese and the Hong Kong authorities have had to release as unlawfully detained; what steps he intends to take so that they can settle somewhere; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: We are continuing our discussions with the Vietnamese and Chinese Governments. Our firm intention is that the problem of Vietnamese migrants and ex-China Vietnamese illegal immigrants—ECVIIs—in Hong Kong will be resolved well before China takes over in 1997. Solid progress has been made; 45,000 Vietnamese migrants have been repatriated since 1989 and 2,000 ECVIIs have been returned to China since September last year.

EU Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the voting record of each member state on items agreed at the meeting of the European Community's Foreign Affairs Council held on 3 to 4 October.

Mr. Goodlad: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary's statement to the House of 27 October 1994 Official Report, columns 765–66. No votes were taken at this Council: those items agreed are also set out in the press release published by the Council secretariat and deposited in the House of Commons Library.

Economic Summit

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Wallsend (Mr. Byers) of 12 December, Official Report, columns 463-64, if he will make a statement on how his Department arrived at the figure for the total cost for his spouse to accompany him to the economic summit in Naples between 8 and 10 July 1994.

Mr. Goodlad: The total cost for Mrs. Hurd to accompany my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to the economic summit in Naples, referred to in my answer of 12 December, reflects minimal expenses only. Mrs. Hurd travelled on an official aircraft and stayed as a guest of the Italian Government.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Departmental Telephones

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how much has been spent on telephone charges and how many telephone calls have been made by his Department for each of the last five years.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department of National Heritage was set up in April 1992 and figures can be provided only from 1993–94, when the Department moved into its present offices and took over telephony.

Departmental charges for telephony for the year 1993–94 were £168,000.

Details of the numbers of calls made per year are not held centrally.

Executive Search Agencies

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what use his Department has made of executive search agencies in filling vacancies within his Department and executive agencies administered by his Department during the last year; and how much these services have cost his Department.

Mr. Dorrell: Neither this Department nor its executive agencies have used executive search agencies to fill any vacancies during the last year.

National Lottery

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) whether he will issue a direction to the Director General of the National Lottery with the aim of forbidding the withholding of prize money in the national lottery from one week's competition to add artificially to jackpots in one or more subsequent competitions, other than as part of an authorised roll-over arrangement;

(2) what advice he has received from the Director General of the National Lottery about the withholding of national lottery prize money by Camelot in order to boost jackpots in subsequent competitions other than as part of an authorised roll-over arrangement;

(3) whether it his Department's policy to encourage the Office of the National Lottery to permit the withholding of national lottery prize money by Camelot in order to boost jackpots in subsequent competitions other than as part of an authorised roll-over arrangement.

Mr. Dorrell: Prize money in the national lottery cannot be manipulated from week to week. I have asked Peter Davis, the Director General of the National Lottery, to write to the hon. Member about this matter, placing copies of his letter in the Library of the House.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will bring forward proposals to prohibit the BBC from promoting and advertising the national lottery.

Mr. Dorrell: No. Such proposals are not necessary. Under the terms of its licence and agreement, the BBC may not without my approval receive payment for broadcasting advertising or promotional material, and no such approval has been sought or given.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what advice he has received about the legality of BBC television programmes promoting the national lottery.

Mr. Dorrell: I have been advised that the legality of the BBC's operations is primarily a matter for the BBC's governors.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage under what section of the BBC's charter the corporation is permitted to promote the national lottery.

Mr. Dorrell: Under clause 3 of its charter, the BBC can make and broadcast programmes, including programmes covering events such as the national lottery draw. Detailed rules on the content and presentation of such programmes are set out in the BBC's producers' guidelines.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what steps he has taken to satisfy himself that the content, style and promotion of the national lottery programme shown on BBC television on Saturday night conforms with the BBC's charter.

Mr. Dorrell: None. The primary responsibility for ensuring that individual programmes conform with the BBC's royal charter rests with the BBC's governors.

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage whether Ministers of the Crown will support individual project applications for grants from the national lottery; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Distribution of the net proceeds of the national lottery is the responsibility of the distributing bodies named under section 23 of the National Lottery etc. Act 1993, as amended by statutory instrument 1994 No. 1342. The decisions that these bodies take will be independent of Government. The Government's main function in the distribution process is to issue directions under section 26 of the Act, covering the financial management of lottery funds and matters which distributors must take into account when making funding decisions.

Lottery applications, except those made to the National Lottery Charities Board, are expected to attract a significant element of partnership funding from the voluntary or private sector, from local authorities or, exceptionally, from grant in aid. Within their normal departmental responsibilities, Ministers and their Departments may be involved in the process of approving aspects of a project, or in agreeing the contribution which a body receiving grant in aid might wish to make to a fully worked-up project. In cases where the costs of a project exceed a public body's delegated limits, the entire project will need ministerial approval. Ministers and their Departments may also encourage a wide range of projects to be put forward to the distributing bodies. However, they will not endorse any individual application to any national lottery distributing body, nor will they explicitly state that any applications should be given priority by the distributing body over other applications. Where there is any grant in aid partnership funding, that will not in itself result in that project receiving special priority when it is considered by a distributing body for lottery funds.

Ministers may. of course, support local projects from within their constituencies in their capacity as Members of this House.

Ministerial Train Journeys

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many train journeys of one hour's duration or more he has made in Britain in 1994 in the course of his official duties.

Mr. Dorrell: Whenever it is appropriate, I travel by train to official engagements. Information on individual journeys and the times taken could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Sports Council

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations he has made to Her Majesty's Treasury, with regard to reviewing the Sports Council's financial memoranda as part of the current restructuring exercise.

Mr. Sproat: As I announced on 8 July, Official Report, columns 584–92, the Sports Council will be replaced during 1995–96 by new United Kingdom and English Sports Councils. The framework of financial control for these bodies is currently under consideration.

Rugby Football Union

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make urgent representations to the Rugby Football Union regarding its imposition of a 12-month ban on Mr. Adrian Spencer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 19 December 1994]: I have no plans to make specific representations to the Rugby Union Football about this matter. However, the rugby authorities are well aware of my views on the need for more constructive dialogue between the two codes.

English Heritage

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what local government representation there is on the governing body of English Heritage.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 19 December 1994]: English Heritage's governing body is its commission. Sir Hugh Cubitt, who has been a member of the commission for six years, is a former member and leader of Westminster city council and a former chairman of the council's planning committee. His appointment ends on 31 December 1994. When making future appointments to the commission, due regard will be given to the National Heritage Act 1983 and the desirability of at least one member having knowledge of local government.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Members' Staff

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many staff are employed by hon. Members; and how many are female.

Mr. Newton: As at 30 November 1994, a total of 1,637 separate salary payments were made on behalf of hon. Members. Of these, 1,318 were payments to females.

Christmas Expenditure

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many official Christmas cards he and his Ministers intend to send in 1994; how much these cards will cost (a) to buy, (b) to post and (c) in staff time to sign, address and place in envelopes; and if he will place in the Library a sample copy of the official Christmas card he intends to send this year.

Mr. Newton: This year I expect to send about 200 Christmas cards. The cost of purchasing and posting these cards will be £150, inclusive of VAT, and £38 respectively. It is not possible to estimate accurately the cost in staff time; but it would be minimal. I will arrange for an example of the Christmas card to be placed in the Library.

DEFENCE

Consultants

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the private consultants employed by his Department in each of the last five years; what projects they were involved with; and what was the total cost in each year.

Mr. Freeman: The Department's central contracts branch has placed in excess of 500 contracts with consultants in each of the last few years. In addition to this figure, consultancy contracts are placed as part of specific projects and as low value orders of under £10,000. Under the Department's arrangements for the delegation of contractual authority, such contracts are placed without reference to the central contracts branch and so cannot be identified separately.

In view of this and the large number of centrally placed contracts involved over the last 15 years, an answer to this question could be provided only at disproportionate cost and effort.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will (a) list those consultancy contracts awarded by his Department's central contracts branch in each year since 1989 and (b) list the purpose of each individual contract.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Quangos

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those quangos for which his Department is responsible and indentify the membership of each and the remuneration they receive.

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to "Public Bodies 1993", issued by the Cabinet Office, Office of Public Service and Science, pages 7 and 8 of which detail MOD non-departmental public bodies.

Indonesia

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, who services the British Hawk aircraft sold to Indonesia.

Mr. Freeman: The Indonesians service the Hawk aircraft themselves.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what dates between 1984 and the present memoranda of understanding relating to defence contracts were agreed with the Government of Indonesia; and what was the subject matter and their value.

Mr. Freeman: A general co-operation MOU was signed between the United Kingdom and Indonesia in 1983. This MOU has been extended and supplemented but remains in place. It is not the practice to give details of the contents of MOUs between Governments.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assistance towards military training is being given to Indonesia during the current financial year.

Mr. Soames: The United Kingdom has provided training, including developmental and technical courses, for Indonesian students during the current financial year. Details of such training are not normally disclosed, however, as they are regarded as confidential between Governments.

Debt Collection

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of debt collection visits, and the countries visited, made by the Defence Accounts Agency since its formation.

Mr. Freeman: This is a matter for the chief executive of the Defence Accounts Agency. I have therefore asked him to reply.

Letter from M.J. Dymond to Mr. Jim Cousins, dated 19 December 1994:

You asked the Secretary of State for Defence, if he will list the number of debt collection visits, and the countries visited, made by the Defence Accounts Agency since its formation. As Chief Executive of the Defence Accounts Agency I have asked to reply.

Debt collection visits (4 in number) have been made to the following countries:

a. United Arab Emirates 19 February—27 February 1993

b. USA 16 April–23 April 1994

c. United Arab Emirates 2 September—7 September 1994

d. Germany 5 December—9 December 1994.

Cooks

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many serving officers broken down by service are entitled to the provision of cooks at public expense; and if he will identify the posts and locations and the estimated cost of this provision for the financial year 1994–95.

Mr. Soames: The information requested is as follows:

The subject of domestic assistance, including cooks and chefs, is being studied by Sir Peter Cazalet as part of his review of representational entertainment in the armed forces.

RAF Llandwrog (Buried Bombs)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he now expects to be in a position to respond to the request made by the hon. Member for Caernarfon for a briefing from his Department on the danger posed by second world war bombs buried at RAF Llandwrog near Dinas Dinlle, Gwynedd; and if he will make a statement concerning his investigations into this matter.

Mr. Soames: The issues raised in the hon. Member's letters of 25 November and 14 December concerning the role of RAF Llandwrog after the second world war are being investigated. My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State will reply as soon as these investigations are complete.

Gulf War

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when chemical weapons detectors were triggered during the Gulf war; and what is his Department's assessment of this situation.

Mr. Soames: Chemical weapons detectors were triggered during the Gulf war on a number of occasions but records of individual incidents are not held centrally. We are also aware that there were times when detectors alarmed as a result of operator error; on these occasions, in particular, it is likely that no report would have been made to higher formation. In consequence, and given that detectors were widely deployed both on the ground and at sea, it is impossible to answer a general question of this nature with any degree of accuracy.

Apart from those occasions attributed to obvious operator error, each chemical alarm would have been followed up by NBC reconnaissance to confirm the presence of chemical agent or otherwise. Since at no time was chemical agent detected during such follow-up operations it is assessed that chemical agent was not used for Operation Granby against United Kingdom forces.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many patients have been seen by his Department's appointed doctor concerning problems related to Operation Granby.

Mr. Soames: To date, 67 individual personnel have been examined by an armed forces consultant under the Gulf medical assessment programme, some on more than one occasion. All have been found to be suffering from identifiable complaints, none of which is peculiar to service in the Gulf. From January 1995, the rate of new examinations will be increased and efforts made to reduce the high proportion of patients not attending for pre-booked appointments.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether non-medical personnel were permitted to order members of the British armed forces in the Gulf war to take vaccinations.

Mr. Soames: All vaccinations were offered to service personnel deployed to the Gulf on the basis of voluntary informed consent.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what grounds his Department considered it necessary to vaccinate members of the armed forces in the Gulf war against plague and not botulism toxoid.

Mr. Soames: Details of specific medical countermeasures employed by British forces against potential biological warfare threat during Operation Granby remain classified.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what monitoring was used by his Department in, and during, the Gulf war for troops who had been vaccinated.

Mr. Soames: All aspects of the health of service personnel are monitored, in peace and war, as a matter of routine. As all the vaccines which were offered to Gulf war personnel are routinely used in the civilian world, and were administered in accordance with normal clinical practice, there were no grounds for special additional monitoring of those troops who had been vaccinated.

Market Testing

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 12 December, Official Report, column 457, on market testing, what is the total value of the contracts awarded.

Mr. Freeman: The total annual value of contracts placed following the examination of defence support activities up to September 1994 was approximately £350 million. This figure represents a considerable saving on the original annual operating costs of the 46 activities involved.

Pregnancy Dismissals

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will instigate an inquiry into the publication by a tribunal deciding the issue of compensation in a pregnancy dismissal case, and of a woman's medical records produced by counsel acting for his Department without the woman's consent.

Mr. Soames: Such documents may properly be disclosed to a court or tribunal in the course of legal proceedings to which they are relevant. Industrial tribunals are judicial bodies which are wholly independent of my Department.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the sums of financial compensation paid to former members of the armed services who were judged by industrial tribunals to have been dismissed unfairly because of their pregnancies; and what was the commissioned or non-commissioned status of those women who were compensated.

Mr. Soames: Up to 13 December, industrial tribunal decisions on the amount of compensation due for dismissal on the grounds of pregnancy have resulted in 151 payments totalling £4,397,095 to 10 officers, average £58,018, and 141 other ranks, average £27,070. However, these payments include some made recently but relating to cases heard by tribunals before the employment appeal tribunal issued its helpful guidance in July, since when the level of new awards has fallen. Furthermore, tribunal awards represent only a small proportion of the 3,428 pregnancy claims—75 per cent. of the claims received—which have now been settled for an overall average of about £10,000 for all ranks.

Medical Records (Confidentiality)

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library the notes of the discussions which took place during 1987 and 1988 between his Department and the General Medical Council which refers to the issue of forces medical records and confidentiality.

Mr. Soames: Although my Department and the General Medical Council corresponded and held informal meetings during 1987 and 1988 to discuss matters relating to medical confidentiality, there is no evidence that these meetings were formally minuted. The correspondence and discussions however resulted in the publication of new, jointly agreed, notes of guidance on medical confidentiality for medical officers employed by the armed forces, and the issue of a new medical form to protect the confidentiality of personal medical records during the administrative processing of service medical boards. I am placing copies of these documents in the Library of the House.

Service Personnel (Exhumation)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action his Department intends to take to protect the bodies of service personnel who are buried in public land from being exhumed without permission by war relic hunters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Authority to protect sites where it is believed there are military remains is given to my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence under the Protection of Military Remains Act 1986. Licences to unearth or move any wreckage are not granted if there is any suspicion that human remains may lie at the site. Action against alleged offenders is a matter for the police and the Crown Prosecution Service.

Recruitment and Redundancies

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what considerations led to the simultaneous recruitment and making redundant of regular military personnel in 1993–94.

Mr. Soames: The manpower reductions under "Options for Change" could not be achieved through natural wastage alone and it was therefore necessary for each of the services to implement a redundancy programme. Over 90 per cent. of those being made redundant have volunteered for selection.

Recruiting has continued throughout the redundancy programme, albeit at reduced levels, in order to maintain a balanced age and rank structure and to meet shortages in certain branches and trades.

Nerve Agents

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to which defence establishment in Australia the G agent intermediate Di-Di and the CR gas was transported in each case referred to in his answer of 24 June 1994, Official Report, column 381.

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr Harry Cohen, dated 19 December 1994:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking to which defence establishment in Australia the G agent intermediate di-di and the CR gas was transported in each case referred to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out work to ensure that the UK Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical and biological weapons may be used against them. As part of this work the potential hazard of possible chemical and biological warfare agents is assessed and the effectiveness of British protective measures evaluated.

3. Our records do not indicate to which defence establishment in Australia the G agent intermediate di-di and the V agent intermediate referred to in my answer of 24 June 1994 were transported. As I mentioned the materials, suitably packaged, were transported to London for onward transportation to Australia. It is probable that the materials went to the Materials Research Laboratory in Melbourne.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence from which source the CR gas was obtained for the tests with service volunteers in the specified years referred to in his answer to the hon. Member for Leyton on 24 June 1994, Official Report, column 383.

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr Harry Cohen, dated 19 December 1994:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking from which source the CR gas was obtained for the tests with Service volunteers in the specified years referred to in his Answer to the honourable Member for Leyton on 24th June 1994, Official Report, column 383 has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out work to ensure that the UK Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical and biological weapons may be used against them. As part of this work the potential hazard of possible chemical and biological warfare agents is assessed and the effectiveness of British protective measures evaluated.

3. The CR gas referred to in my answer of 14 June 1994, Official Report, column 383 would have been synthesised either at this Establishment or at the Chemical Defence Establishment at Nancekuke.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in which years the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down, tested CN gas on service personnel in the human volunteer programme; what was the purpose of these tests; how the gas was administered to the volunteers; how many service volunteers were tested with this gas; and where the results of these tests were published in open literature.

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 19 December 1994:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking in which years the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down, tested CN gas on Service personnel in the human volunteer programme; what was the purpose of these tests; how the gas was administered to the volunteers; how many Service volunteers were tested with this gas; and where the results of these tests were published in open literature has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to ensure that the United Kingdom Armed Forces have effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. In order to carry out this work, it is necessary to use Service volunteers to:

a. assess the ability of Service personnel to function with new equipment and procedures,

b. develop medical countermeasures to protect Service personnel and

c. evaluate the effects of very low and medically safe concentrations of CW agents on the ability of unprotected personnel to operate normally.

No studies involving volunteers are carried out unless there is a clear military need and a detailed protocol has been reviewed and approved by an independent Ethics Committee in accordance with the guidelines laid down by the Royal College of Physicians.

3. CN gas, otherwise known as chloracetophenone, was used in the early part of this century as a military tear gas, a riot control agent, a training aid, and as the standard agent for respirator testing in the Armed Services and civil defence. Although it has now been abandoned by the UK for all these purposes, our records indicate that it was extensively studied at Porton Down least 1924. It is probable that there were some studies at that time involving Service volunteers. However, our records in the inter-war years are not in a format from which we could extract details about the number of service volunteers tested and the years in which they were tested.

4. During the period that CN gas was studied at Porton Down it would have been disseminated using the following techniques:

a. pyrotechnic formulations

b. a spray from an alcoholic solution

c. bursting munitions (bombs), grenades, largely, and

d. small glass capsules containing solid CN heated to bursting and release the compound.

5. Our records do not indicate which of these techniques would have been used in any of the human volunteer studies. There are three publications which provide some information on CN:

a. The comparative opthalmictoxicology of chloracetophenone (CN) and dibenoxazepine (CR). B Ballantyne, M F Gazzard, D W Swanston and P Williams. Arch. Toxicol. 1975, 34 183–201.

b. Chemical agents used in control and warfare. F W Beswick. Human Toxicol. 1983, 2 247–256.

c. Riot control agents. Bryan Ballantyne. Medical Annual 1977, John Wright, Bristol.

There appear to be few, if any, publications on CN from the inter-war years.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what grounds (a) the policy on female service volunteers, referred to in his answer of 24 June 1994, Official Report, column 380, was changed in 1972 and (b) female service personnel had not been invited to participate in the human volunteer programme before this year.

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Harry Cohen dated 19 December 1994:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking on what grounds (a) the policy on female Service volunteers, referred to in his Answer of 24 June 1994, Official Report, column 380, was changed in this year and (b) female personnel had not been invited to participate in the human volunteer programme before this year has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to ensure that the United Kingdom Armed Forces have effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. In order to carry out this work, it is necessary to use Service volunteers to:

(a) assess the ability of Service personnel to function with new equipment and procedures,

(b) develop medical countermeasures to protect Service personnel and

(c) evaluate the effects of very low and medically safe concentrations of CW agents on the ability of unprotected personnel to operate normally.

No studies involving volunteers are carried out unless there is a clear military need and a detailed protocol has been reviewed and approved by an independent Ethics Committee in accordance with the guidelines laid down by the Royal College of Physicians.

3. It is not possible from our records to determine whether there was a policy change in 1972 with regard to the participation of female Service volunteers. We believe that there was a change in perception of the importance of female Service personnel. However, female Service personnel will only be accepted for participation in studies at CBDE where the CBDE Ethics Committee has approved the relevant protocol and agreed that female volunteers may participate.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the assessment drawn from the research into the stabilisation of the nerve agent GD referred to in his answer of 24 June 1994, Official Report, columns 378-79; and from which source the nerve agent was obtained.

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Harry Cohen dated 19 December 1994:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking what was the assessment drawn from the research into the stabilisation of the nerve agent GD referred to in his Answer of 24 June 1994, Official Report, columns 378–9, and from which source the nerve agent was obtained has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out work to ensure that the United Kingdom Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical and biological weapons may be used against them. As part of this work the potential hazard of possible chemical and biological warfare agents is assessed and the effectiveness of British protective measures evaluated.

3. In my earlier answer to you of 24 June (Official Report, columns 378-9), I said that CBDE had carried out work on the nerve agent GD and in particular its stability in order to evaluate the feasibility and hazard of the use of such an agent against the United Kingdom Armed Forces. The assessment was that with an appropriate stabiliser there was little decomposition of GD stored at 71°C for three years. It was shown that GD stored with the stabiliser in mild steel vessels was virtually unchanged after three years. The GD was produced at Nancekuke.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the conclusions of the studies referred to in his answer of 24 June 1994, Official Report, column 383, on CR gas on service volunteers in relation to the skin and eye sensitivity tests; with which other countries the results of these studies were shared; when the results were shared; and under which defence agreement the results were exchanged.

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr Harry Cohen, dated 19 December 1994:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking what were the conclusions of the studies referred to in his Answer of 24 June 1994, Official Report column 383, on CR gas on Service volunteers in relation to the skin and eye sensitivity tests; with which other countries the results of these studies were shared; when the results were shared; and under which defence agreement the results were exchanged has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

No studies involving volunteers are carried out unless there is a clear military need and a detailed protocol has been reviewed and approved by an independent Ethics Committee in accordance with the guidelines laid down by the Royal College of Physicians.

3. The studies on CR gas in relation to the skin and eye sensitivity tests referred to in my answer of 24 June 1994, (Official Report, column 383) concluded that CR was found to have certain advantages over CS in specific situations. Its potency was found to be approximately ten times greater than that of CS and its toxicity is low in comparison with the other irritants. It is capable of use in both aerosol and solution form.

4. The results of this work have formed part of the chemical and biological defence programme and is part of the technical database drawn upon in collaboration with the United States, Australia and Canada under the Technical Cooperation Programme and its predecessors and with the United States and Canada under the Memorandum of Understanding on Chemical and Biological Defence.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what years the studies with service volunteers were undertaken at the Cambridge military hospital, referred to in his answer of 24 June 1994, Official Report, column 375; what was the purpose and conclusion of these studies; how many studies were carried out at this hospital; and how many service volunteers were involved in these tests.

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 19 December 1994:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of state for Defence asking in what years the studies with Service volunteers were undertaken at the Cambridge Military Hospital, referred to in his Answer of 24th June 1994, Official Report, column 375, were undertaken; what was the purpose and conclusions of these studies; how many studies were carried out at this hospital; and how many Service volunteers were involved in these tests has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

No studies involving volunteers are carried out unless there is a clear military need and a detailed protocol has been reviewed and approved by an independent Ethics Committee in accordance with the guidelines laid down by the Royal College of Physicians.

3. The Nerve Agent Pretreatment Set (NAPS) was developed in response to a requirement which called for a pretreatment effective against poisoning by all known nerve agents. A number of studies were conducted by the Chemical and Biological Defence Establish to identify the effective oral dose regime which used in conjunction with therapy would provide protection against nerve agent poisoning whilst producing minimal or nil side effects.

4. One of these studies took place at the Cambridge Military Hospital in 1993. Thirty two of the military staff of the hospital volunteered to take part and the conclusions of the study agreed with earlier findings that the side effects from the taking of NAPS were minimal and did not interfere with military efficiency.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the nature of the study referred to in his answer of 24 June, Official Report, column 378, which prompted the service volunteer to withdraw following the detailed explanation of the protocol.

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 19 December 1994:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking what was the nature of the study referred to in his Answer of 24th June, Official Report, column 378, which prompted the Service volunteer to withdraw following the detailed explanation of the protocol has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

3. The volunteer who withdrew from the study referred to in my answer of 24 June, Official Report, Column 378, was taking part in a climatic study whilst wearing Individual Protective Equipment. The protocol for the study required some blood samples to be taken but the volunteer was uneasy about this and exercised his right to withdraw from the study.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the conclusion drawn from the studies on VX referred to in his answer of 24 June, Official Report, column 371, to determine whether or not this agent was producible in quantity and was stable when stored.

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down, under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive, CBDE to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Ken Livingstone dated 19 December 1994:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking what was the conclusion drawn from the studies on VX referred to in his answer of 24 June, Official Report, column 371, to determine whether or not this agent was producible in quantity and was stable when stored has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out work to ensure that the United Kingdom Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat the chemical and biological weapons may be used against them. As part of this work the potential hazard of possible chemical and biological warfare agents is assessed and the effectiveness of British protective measure evaluated.

3. The conclusion drawn from the stability studies referred to in my answer of 24 June 1994, Official Report, column 372, was that VX could be produced on a large-scale and that the product could be stabilised. The studies showed that using a suitable stabiliser VX could be stored under nitrogen in mild steel containers; storage could not be achieved in containers of other materials. These conclusions taken together with others supported the assessment that VX would present a significant battlefield hazard.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the purpose of the research on the nerve agent GB between 1979 and 1993 at Nancekuke as described in his answer of 11 January 1994, Official Report, columns 163-64; what quantities of nerve agent were used in this research; if the results of this research were shared with any other countries; and under which defence agreement this occurred.

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive, CBDE to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 19 December 1994:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking what was the purpose of the research on the nerve agent GB between 1979 and 1993 at Nancekuke as described in his answer of 11th January 1994, Official Report, column 163-4; what quantities of nerve agent were used in this research; if the results of this research were shared with any other countries; and under which defence agreement this occurred has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out work to ensure that the United Kingdom Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical and biological weapons may be used against them. As part of this work the potential hazard of possible chemical and biological warfare agents is assessed and the effectiveness of British protective measure evaluated.

3. In my earlier answer to you of 11th January 1994 (Official Report, column 163-164), I advised you that the approximate periods during which research was carried out at Nancekuke was from 1951 to 1976. The Chemical Defence Establishment at Nancekuke was closed in 1980 and was handed back to the RAF. By 1979 the closure process was well advanced and few personnel remained on site. There was, therefore, no research carried out at Nancekuke on the nerve agent, GB, after 1979.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the conclusion drawn from the work carried out on the substituted analogues of VX at Nancekuke, referred to in his answer of 24 June, Official Report, column 371.

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive, CBDE to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Ken Livingstone dated 19 December 1994:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking what was the conclusion drawn from the work carried out on the substituted analogues of VX at Nancekuke, referred to in his Answer of 24th June, Official Report, column 371 has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

As part of this work the potential hazard of possible chemical and biological warfare agents is assessed and the effectiveness of British protective measure evaluated.

3. The conclusion drawn from the work with VX analogues showed that these compounds were unlikely to provide any advantage over VX as a chemical warfare agent to a potential aggressor.

Housing

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service personnel have applied for housing from local authorities in (a) England, (b) Wales and (c) Scotland on leaving the forces in each of the past five years; and what is his estimate of the numbers expected to make such applications in the current year and in each of the next three years.

Mr. Soames: The information is not available in the form requested. Recent surveys have indicated, however, that of all personnel leaving the services on redundancy 43 per cent. were already home owners and a further 40 per cent. intended to buy a home.

The numbers of personnel leaving the armed forces in the last five years are as follows:

	Numbers
1989–90	42,761
1990–91	39,942
1991–92	34,501
1992–93	34,002
1993–94	32,865
1994–95[1]	33,465

[1] to date.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement concerning the transfer of service housing stock.

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Milton Keynes, North-East (Mr. Butler) on 8 December, Official Report, column 303.

International Payments

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if international payments cleared through defence export sales organisations or Government-to-Government defence contracts are cleared through the Defence Accounts Agency or its systems.

Mr. Freeman: Yes.

Exports

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library an analysis of how the figures in "Defence Statistics 1994", table 1.10, for employment dependence on defence exports were derived; and if he will estimate for the years stated dependence on military aerospace exports.

Equivalent figures for the earlier years are not available.

Mr. Freeman: Defence statistics bulletin No. 3 explains the methodology used to prepare the employment estimates published in table 1.10 of "UK Defence Statistics 1994". Copies of the bulletin were placed in the Library at the time.

Figures for UK employment dependent on defence aerospace equipment exports for the years 1987–88 to 1992–93 are as follows:

	Value of exports £ million	Direct employment	Indirect employment	Total employment
1987–88	2,000	44,000	38,500	82,500
1988–89	2,000	42,500	37,500	80,000
1989–90	3,000	50,000	44,000	94,000
1990–91	2,500	37,500	33,000	70,000
1991–92	3,000	42,000	37,000	79,000
1992–93	2,000	28,000	24,500	52,500

Note:

As with table 1.10 of "UK Defence Statistics 1994", all figures are rounded to the nearest 500—total figures may not therefore correspond to the sum of the components.

Satellite Intelligence Data

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether intelligence data gathered from satellites of the United Kingdom and its allies is fully available to United Kingdom forces serving with UNPROFOR; and what limitations on such exchanges of data exist.

Mr. Soames: All necessary information, derived from a variety of sources, is provided to UK forces serving with UNPROFOR.

Cruise Missiles

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to ask for contracts for a conventionally armed stand-off missile system and to acquire cruise missile systems for United Kingdom forces.

Mr. Freeman: I refer to the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Milton Keynes, North-East (Mr. Butler) on 29 November 1994, Official Report, column 621.

Feasibility studies are now under way into the possibility of fitting our submarines with conventionally armed Tomahawk land missiles; results from these studies are expected in the spring and a decision on procurement will be taken in the light of those findings.

Global Monitoring System

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what rights of access to the global monitoring system the United Kingdom possesses; and if he will list the agreements that govern them.

Mr. Soames: I am not aware of any such system.

Bombing (Bihac)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 1 December, Official Report, columns 913-14, concerning the dropping of napalm bombs, whether the United Nations military observers identified the maker of the unexploded bomb.

Mr. Soames: From markings found on the unexploded bomb, the weapon has been identified as having been manufactured in the former Yugoslav Republic.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 1 December, Official Report, columns 913-14, concerning the dropping of napalm bombs, what was the nationality of the UN military observer who reported the incident and that of the UNMOs who collected evidence at the impact points; and what was the evidence which they collected.

Mr. Soames: It is not UN policy to release information on the nationalities of individual UN military observers involved in incidents. A cluster bomb casing, an unexploded bomb, unexploded and exploded bomblets and unburnt weapon material were found at the site.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many cluster bombs were dropped on Bihac; what was the estimated weight of explosive used in all bombs falling on Bihac; and what assessment he has made of their country of manufacture.

Mr. Soames: Two cluster bombs were dropped in Bihac on 18 November. Each bomb had an estimated weight of explosive of 32 kg. It is assessed that the cluster bombs were British manufactured BL755 munitions, which were purchased by the former Yugoslavia prior to the outbreak of the present conflict.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 2 December, Official Report, columns 945-46, what assessment he has made of the factors underlying the absence of photographic evidence in relation to the bombing in Bihac; and what assessment he has made of casualties or damage to buildings in the Bihac area.

Mr. Soames: The decision as to whether or not to gather photographic evidence in relation to the bombing in Bihac rested with the UN. We have no information as to the casualties caused by the air attacks on 18 November. We are only aware of some minor damage to an old warehouse and to a football field.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 1 December, Official Report, column 913, whether the loss of one of the two aircraft observed in the vicinity of Bihac was reported at the time; if the aircraft was totally destroyed with its pilot; and why the United Nations military observers did not photograph the wreckage for identification purposes.

Mr. Soames: The loss of one of the aircraft observed in the vicinity of Bihac was reported at the time the aircraft was destroyed and the pilot killed. The decision not to photograph the wreckage rested with the UN.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 2 December, Official Report, columns 945-46, what were the initial reports of the damage inflicted by the bombing of Bihac; and if these were consistent with the dropping of an unexploded napalm bomb and an unspecified number of cluster bombs.

Mr. Soames: Initial reports of the bombing of Bihac on 18 November indicate that the munitions used in the attack caused only minor damage to an old warehouse and to a football field. Although some sub-munitions of the cluster bombs exploded, available evidence suggests that neither of the two weapon types operated as designed.

Absenteeism

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what was the absenteeism rate for the Defence Analytical Services Agency in 1991, 1992 and 1993;

(2) what was the absenteeism rate for the Naval Aircraft Repair Organisation in 1991, 1992 and 1993;

(3) what was the absenteeism rate for his Department in 1991, 1992 and 1993;

(4) what was the absenteeism rate for the Defence Research Agency in 1991, 1992 and 1993;

(5) what was the absenteeism rate for the Defence Operational Analysis Centre in 1991, 1992 and 1993;

(6) what was the absenteeism rate for the RAF Training Group Defence Agency in 1991, 1992 and 1993;

(7) what was the absenteeism rate for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment in 1991, 1992 and 1993;

(8) what was the absenteeism rate for the Meteorological Office in 1991, 1992 and 1993;

(9) what was the absenteeism rate for the defence animal centre in 1991, 1992 and 1993;

(10) what was the absenteeism, rate for the RAF Support Command's Maintenance Group Defence Agency in 1991, 1992 and 1993;

(11) what was the absenteeism rate for the Army Base Repair Organisation in 1991, 1992 and 1993;

(15) what was the absenteeism rate for the Military Survey in 1991, 1992 and 1993;

Mr. Freeman: Neither my Department nor its agencies could provide the information requested without disproportionate cost and effort.

Special Advisers

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) of 1 December, Official Report, columns 903–94, if he will make a statement regarding his Department's expenditure on special advisers in each of the last three financial years and for the financial year 1979–80.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary on 19 December 1994, Official Report, column 937.

Nuclear Submarines

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what responsibilities have been vested in (a) Devonport Management Ltd. and (b) Babcock Thorn for the longer-term management of laid-up nuclear powered submarines; for how long it is intended that laid-up nuclear submarine boats will be stored afloat; what has been the cost to date for the preparation of each boat in an environmentally fit state for storage afloat; and which body is responsible for submitting and maintaining the nuclear safety case for such nuclear submarines withdrawn from operational service;

(2) whether environmental and safety cases for the storage afloat of nuclear submarines withdrawn from operational service have been submitted for approval to the nuclear installations inspectorate.

Mr. Freeman: Responsibility for decommissioned nuclear-powered submarines rests with my Department; contracts are placed with the dockyard contractors when necessary in relation to the maintenance of the submarines. Storage afloat of decommissioned nuclear submarines is an interim policy pending national decisions on a final disposal route, the timing of which is still under consideration. The approximate costs of undertaking the defuelling, de-equipping and lay-up preparation process for those nuclear-powered submarines which have been taken out of service to date are as follows:

Submarine	DDLP £ million
HMS Swiftsure	11.5
HMS Warspite	11.3
HMS Churchill	11.2
HMS Conqueror	10.6
HMS Courageous	10.8
HMS Revenge (SSBN)	18.7

HMS Valiant and HMS Resolution have not started their DDLP process yet.

Those costs do not include the costs of final disposal, the policy for which is still under consideration. It is also not possible to provide costs on the decommissioning of HMS Dreadnought, which was the first nuclear submarine to be withdrawn from service in 1982 and the information requested, insofar as it may be available, could be assembled only at disproportionate cost.

Since section 1 (1) (a) of the Nuclear Installations Act 1965 specifically excludes nuclear reactors comprised in a means of transport from the provisions of the Act, there is no requirement to prepare environmental or safety cases to the NII. However, hazard analysis has been conducted at each dockyard, and the MOD and the relevant local authorities carry out regular surveys alongside, which confirm that the storage afloat of the decommissioned submarines presents no external radiological hazard.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the number of vessels from the Royal Navy's surface fleet that spent a substantial part of their operational time in guarding nuclear submarines.

Mr. Soames: It is not my Department's policy to comment on operational matters.

Departmental Telephones

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much has been spent on telephone charges and how many telephone calls have been made by his Department for each of the last five years.

Mr. Freeman: For telephone costs I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 13 December, Official Report, column 576, to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark).

The number of telephone calls made by my Department is not recorded, and could not be obtained without disproportionate cost.

Defence Export Services Organisation

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many staff have been employed in the office of the Defence Export Services Organisation in Jakarta in each year since its establishment; and what is the breakdown of their posts.

Mr. Freeman: Three staff have been employed in the Jakarta office each year since its establishment. The breakdown is as follows: one grade 7, one personal secretary—shared with the British defence attaché Jakarta—and one driver.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on which date the decision to establish an office of the Defence Export Services Organisation in Jakarta was taken.

Mr. Freeman: The decision to establish an office of the Defence Export Services Organisation in Jakarta was taken in September 1990.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on which date in 1991 an office of the Defence Export Services Organisation was formally established in Jakarta.

Mr. Freeman: The office for the Defence Export Services Organisation was formally established in Jakarta in April 1991.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the annual cost of running the office of the Defence Export Services Organisation in Jakarta in each year since its establishment both in full and net of any offsetting administrative arrangements.

Mr. Freeman: The estimated annual cost of running the DESO office in Jakarta in each year since its establishment has been:

1991–92 £K	1992–93 £K	1993–94 £K	1994–95 £K
126[1]	67	78	[1]167

[1] including three years advance rent.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the country-based project groups were set up within the defence export services teams; when each country-based project group was functioning; and how many such country-based project groups exist at the present time.

Mr. Freeman: Within the Defence Export Services Organisation there are three country-based project teams: for Saudi Arabia, Malaysia and Kuwait. They were established in September 1985, November 1989 and January 1993 respectively.

Hercules

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contribution he proposes to make towards the tendering costs of the proposals for refurbishment or replacement of the Hercules aircraft.

Mr. Freeman: None.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations were made to him following the placement of an advertisement for the sale of Hercules C130K by his Department in the September 1994 edition of Flight International.

Mr. Freeman: Following placement of the advertisement, 20 organisations expressed a possible interest in Hercules C130K aircraft. Contact will be made with these organisations should aircraft become available for sale.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will now withdraw the offer to put up for sale a number of Hercules C130K aircraft which were advertised in the September 1994 edition of Flight International; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 28 November, Official Report, column 550.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what conclusions he has reached about the Hercules replacement programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence gave on 16 December, Official Report column 823.

Biological Warfare (Vaccines)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 21 November to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark), Official Report, column 59, if he will list the countries, other than the United Kingdom, in which licences for civilian use had been obtained for vaccines for biological warfare protection.

Mr. Soames: Of the vaccines administered to British service personnel during Operation Granby, against the potential biological warfare threat, two were not licensed in the UK for civilian use. One was licensed in United States of America and Canada, while the other was licensed in France, Ivory Coast, Senegal and Venezuela. Both vaccines are, however, tested by the UK National Institute for Biological Standards and Control, and cleared for use by the institute and the Department of Health.

Ministerial Train Journeys

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many train journeys of one hour's duration or more he has made in Britain in 1994 in the course of his official duties.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has made two train journeys of one hour's duration or more in Britain in 1994 in the course of his official duties.

Low Flying

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the pilots of the two Harrier jets that flew at a low altitude over the Royal Welsh agricultural show 1994 filed and submitted flight plans indicating their intentions; if flight plans were authorised; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: There were no breaches of the avoidance afforded to the Royal Welsh agricultural show in 1994. The incidents to which the hon. Member refers occurred, in fact, in 1993. At one of the units concerned, a flaw occurred in the system for presenting details of temporary avoidances to aircrew; as a result, the avoidance was not taken into account in planning the sortie. In the second case, the sortie was planned to avoid the area of the show, but adverse weather conditions necessitated a diversion for flight safety reasons from the planned route, in the course of which the breach occurred.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many breached of low flying regulations there were over Wales in 1992, 1993 and so far in 1994; how many of these breaches resulted in formal disciplinary procedures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: There were eight confirmed breaches in 1992 and four in 1993. Investigations to date in 1994 have confirmed that 11 breaches have occurred. None of these has to date resulted in court martial or summary disposal proceedings under the service discipline Acts. However, copies of the RAF police reports into the incidents have been sent to the commanding officers of the aircrew concerned for consideration as what further action is necessary and what can be learned from the incident.

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy while low flying training is still necessary to offer low-level flights in conventional aircraft, as distinct from high-speed jets, to educate the public in the necessity of such manoeuvres.

Mr. Soames: No. We believe the provision of such flights would be of no practical benefit and the cost could not be justified. My Department does, however, recognise the importance of explaining the need for low flying and how it is controlled and monitored. Accordingly, public presentations are given regularly by RAF representatives and officials around the UK. Furthermore, informative leaflets are freely available. We believe this better meets this requirement.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received concerning infringements of low flying regulations.

Mr. Soames: My Department has recently received a number of representations from hon. Members and the general public about alleged infringements of low flying regulations.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date the recent alteration of the boundaries of the Glasgow-Prestwick low-flying avoidance area took effect; what is now the minimum permitted altitude for military low flying over and in the vicinity of (a) the Heads of Ayr holiday camp, (b) Maybole, (c) Dalrymple, (d) Patna, (e) Drongan, (f) Ochiltree, (g) Cumnock, (h) Auchinleck, (i) Catrine, (j) Mauchline and (k) Ballochmyle hospital; and what consultations took place prior to the reduction of the size of the Glasgow-Prestwick avoidance area.

Mr. Soames [holding answer 16 December]: The alteration took effect on 7 November 1994 to coincide with the issue of revised military flying charts. The locations listed, with the exception of Mauchline which straddles the boundary, are outside the revised avoidance area and therefore open to low flying by fixed-wing aircraft to a minimum altitude of 250 ft minimum separation distance. The guidance provided to aircrews does, however, state that they should avoid flying over populated areas wherever possible. The UK low flying system alters whenever there is a reduction or increase of controlled airspace of this kind, whether civil or military, and it is not our practice to conduct consultations when these changes are made.

Porton Down

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if service volunteers who take part in tests at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down are bound by the Official Secrets Acts in respect of the tests.

Mr. Soames: Although service volunteers are bound by the Official Secrets Acts in the same way as all other Government employees, their medical records are provided on request to their general practitioner, as is information on the studies in which they participated.

Nuclear Liabilities

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer of the President of the Board of Trade of 9 December, Official Report, column 389, if he will estimate the total liabilities to British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. and the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority in respect of pre-1971 programmes; what have been the total payments made so far as a result of these liabilities; and what further payments are planned within the next public expenditure plan period.

Mr. Freeman: Since 1988 to the end of the financial year 1993–94 the Department has paid £365 million in respect of these payments. An estimate of the payment for this financial year is some £50 million. The payments estimated for the next public plan period amount to about £250 million over the next three years.

The estimated total value of pre-1971 waste management and decommissioning liabilities to BNFL and AEA extending well into the next century is in the order of £2 billion.

Cyprus

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the name of the officer commanding British forces in Cyprus; when he was appointed to this position; and when his appointment is expected to end.

Mr. Soames: The officer commanding British Forces in Cyprus is Major General A. G. H. Harley, CB OBE. He was appointed to this position on 25 March 1993 and his appointment is expected to end in February–March 1995.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with the Commander in Chief of British forces in Cyprus on the need to make clear to service personnel the serious nature of drink-related driving offences; what assessment he has made of the prevalence of the offence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

Goose Bay

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the planned number of low-level sorties to be flown by Royal Air Force aircraft from Canadian forces Goose Bay in each of the years (a) 1992, (b) 1993 and (c) 1994; and what were the reasons for any divergence between the planned number of sorties and the actual numbers of sorties flown in each year.

Mr. Soames: In 1994, it was planned to fly 1,212 sorties, the vast majority of which would have involved an element of low flying. In the event, 1,299 sorties were actually flown. Records of the number of sorties planned to be flown in 1992 and 1993 are not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Any divergence between the number of sorties planned and those readily actually flown could be the result of a variety of factors including; aircraft availability and weather but chiefly the effect of unforeseen operational deployments.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many weapons, and of what types, were dropped or fired by Royal Air Force aircraft during training from Canadian forces base Goose Bay in the 1994 flying season.

Mr. Soames: Some 290 inert 1,000 lb bombs and 297 inert 28 lb practice bombs were dropped by RAF aircraft during training from Canadian forces base Goose Bay in the 1994 flying season. No weapons were "fired" by RAF aircraft.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if payments to the Canadian authorities for Royal Air Force use of facilities at Goose Bay were withheld or postponed following introduction of the new cost recovery methodology by the Canadian Department of National Defence in the financial year 1990–91.

Mr. Soames: Part of the payment to the Canadian authorities for financial year 1990–91 was postponed while the introduction of the revised cost recovery methodology was the subject of correspondence between United Kingdom and Canadian officials.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what commitments to, or agreements on, future costs to the United Kingdom Government were contained in the agreements signed with the Canadian authorities in 1986 concerning Royal Air Force access to training at Goose Bay.

Mr. Soames: The United Kingdom agreed to pay for those costs attributable to the Royal Air Force's use of Goose Bay.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of the presentation made by the head of the Royal Air Force delegation to the meeting of the Goose Bay military users committee in June 1994.

Mr. Soames: The head of the Royal Air Force delegation did not make a presentation to the Goose Bay military users committee in June 1994.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration has been given to the pooling of Royal Air Force and German air force maintenance and operations facilities for Tornado aircraft deployed for training at Canadian forces base Goose Bay.

Mr. Soames: Consideration of potential cost savings measures between all military users is a constant process.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what agreements have been reached with other NATO air forces concerning the sharing of air-to-air refuelling assets for transatlantic deployment of fighter aircraft to Canadian forces base Goose Bay;

(2) what agreements have been reached with other NATO air forces concerning the sharing of air transport assets for transatlantic deployment of air and ground crew from Europe to Canadian forces base Goose Bay.

Mr. Soames: No agreements have been reached, although a degree of informal pooling of resources already takes place between the allied detachments at Goose Bay.

Service Discipline

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many British service personnel have been disciplined in each of the last five years for alcohol-related offences while stationed in (a) Germany, (b) Britain and (c) Cyprus;

(2) how many British service personnel have been disciplined in each of the last five years for drug-related offences whilst stationed in (a) Germany, (b) Britain and (c) Cyprus.

Mr. Soames: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

Brian Patchett

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what efforts have been made to trace Corporal Brian Patchett of the Intelligence Corps, formerly based at RAF Gatow.

Mr. Soames: My Department has no record of any Brian Patchett in the Army. If the hon. Member wishes to write to my noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence with more details, he will be happy to look into the matter further.

International Military Service Ltd.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the disposal of the assets and good will of International Military Services Ltd. is now complete; and to whom those assets and good will were passed.

Mr. Freeman: Although International Military Services Ltd. ceased trading on 31 July 1991, not all its residual obligations have yet been met. Disposal of its assets will not be dealt with until the company is finally wound up.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether reinforced bunkers built to designs supplied by International Military Services Ltd. are still in service in Iraq.

Mr. Freeman: No operational bunkers were supplied or designed by International Military Services Ltd. for Iraq.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the arrangements for supervision of International Military Services in 1987; what considerations had led to them; and how they were subsequently revised.

Mr. Freeman: When ownership of IMS was assumed by the Ministry of Defence in 1979, the Department laid down rigorous policy guidelines for the company, setting out the nature of the business it could undertake and the degree of MOD supervision required. The company was obliged to seek the Department's approval before initiating business in new markets, or which involved novel features or was significantly different from previous business. In 1989, IMS was required to cease trading by 1991.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 29 November 1993, Official Report, column 365, to which agencies or departments of Government the employees of IMS Ltd. were transferred in the years 1987, 1988, 1989, 1990 and 1991.

Mr. Freeman: There have been no staff transfer arrangements for the years quoted between IMS Ltd. and my Department or its agencies.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the IMS Ltd. branch in Tehran was closed; and to which agency or agencies of Government its responsibilities were transferred.

Mr. Freeman: The Tehran office remains a registered office of IMS Ltd. None of its responsibilities has been transferred to my Department or its agencies.

Royal Ordnance

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what total orders by value were placed with Royal Ordnance under the terms of explosives and propellants and related end products agreement; what proportion of his Department's ammunition purchases that represented; and when the EPREP agreement was terminated.

Mr. Freeman: Orders to an approximate total value of £560 million were placed with Royal Ordnance under the EPREP agreement, representing 80 per cent. of the Department's ammunition purchases over the agreement's five-year life. The EPREP agreement expired on 31 March 1993.

Aircraft Reconnaissance Systems

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what electronic combat reconnaissance systems for aircraft are available from United Kingdom manufacturers; and what is the cost of each such system.

Mr. Freeman: Comprehensive information on systems available from industry is only held when we are considering specific proposals to purchase such equipment.

The cost of any such system is commercially sensitive.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British strike aircraft are fitted with electronic combat reconnaissance systems; and what programme is currently in hand to fit more such systems to strike aircraft.

Mr. Freeman: Some Tornado GRI aircraft are equipped with the air-launched anti-radiation missile which is designed to attack and suppress enemy radar systems. The number of aircraft so equipped is classified and cannot be publicly disclosed. Following the Tornado mid-life update programme, all Tornado GR4 aircraft will be ALARM capable.

Brunei

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to what extent purchases have been made (a) under and (b) outside the 1989 defence protocol agreement between the United Kingdom and Brunei; and what efforts have been made to bring the defence protocol into effect.

Mr. Freeman: It is not the policy of this Government to reveal details of defence exports.

The hon. Member will be interested to know that my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and His Majesty the Sultan of Brunei Darussalam signed a memorandum of understanding on defence equipment, infrastructure and training on 15 December.

The memorandum, which enters into force immediately, will continue the close relations between the British defence industry and the Royal Brunei armed forces.

Saudi Armed Forces Project Group

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of his Saudi armed forces project group were seconded from industry; and from which enterprises they were so seconded.

Mr. Freeman: Two members of staff of the Saudi armed forces project office within my Department are on secondment, one from British Aerospace and one from Hunting Engineering.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many previous officials of the Saudi armed forces project group are now working in commercial enterprises that do, or may, have an interest in contacts placed, or likely to be placed, through the group.

Mr. Freeman: My Department does not hold comprehensive records of the subsequent employment of former staff of the Saudi armed forces project office. Such employment would, however, be governed by the normal rules on acceptance of business appointments by former Crown servants.

Peace Dividend

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the total net and gross savings from the peace dividend in each of the past three years.

Mr. Soames: Details of defence spending between 1992–93 and 1994–95 at constant 1993–94 prices, are set out:

Year	Total £ million	Underlying £ million
1992–93	23,611	23,243
1993–94	22,757	22,181
1994–95	22,071	21,556—forecast of outturn

The "underlying" figures exclude expenditure on redundancies arising from the transition to the new force structure and costs resulting from recovery from the Gulf conflict.

Future Large Aircraft

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to place an order for the future large aircraft.

Mr. Freeman: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence on 16 December 1994, Official Report, column 823.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received concerning the need by his Department to order the European future large aircraft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Representations were made by British Aerospace in support of the European future large aircraft. A number of letters were raised from hon. Members and from British Aerospace employees, as well as an early-day motion and some questions in the House.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the impact on the United Kingdom aerospace industry should the Government choose not to proceed with the FLA.

Mr. Freeman: I can assure the hon. Member that the wider industrial issues of the Hercules rolling replacement programme were given full and careful consideration.

Army Costs (Northern Ireland)

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of potential savings from the reduction in Army security activities as a consequence of the ceasefire in Northern Ireland for each of the next five years.

Mr. Soames: No such estimate has been made.

Military Regalia

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much has been spent on items of military regalia during the last five years, indicating the costs of each type of item.

Mr. Soames: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

Territorial Army

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to provide for the Territorial Army vehicles built in the former East Germany.

Mr. Freeman: None.

Second World War

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) the events planned to commemorate the end of the second world war, (b) the total cost to his Department and (c) the charges which will be made to second world war veterans and widows for participating in the events.

Mr. Soames: The Government plan to commemorate the end of the second world war with a programme of events to mark the 50th anniversary of both VE day and VJ day. The former will be commemorated over the 6 to 8 May bank holiday, and the latter over the weekend of 19 and 20 August. The provisional programme of major events will include:

Dates	Events
6–8 May	Public event activities in Hyde park.
6 May	Reception and banquet at Guildhall, City of London.
7 May	Service at St. Paul's cathedral.
7 or 8 May	Services in Belfast, Cardiff and Edinburgh.
8 May	VE night concert in Hyde park.
19 August	Open air service in central London.
19 August	Tribute and promise parade in central London.
19 August	Evening firework display along the Thames.
20 August	A tribute throughout the nation, including services in Belfast, Cardiff and Edinburgh, and culminating with a Beating the Retreat and sunset ceremony in these cities and in London.

The cost of organising the commemorative events will fall to a number of Government Departments, as appropriate. The total cost to the Ministry of Defence cannot be projected accurately at present, as the details of plans have yet to be finalised.

It is not envisaged that any charges will be made to veterans for admission to any of the Government-sponsored events.

Bosnia

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service men and women on active service in (a) Bosnia and (b) elsewhere are working 60 hours per week or more.

Mr. Soames: We do not maintain detailed records of the hours worked by service personnel on operational duty in Bosnia. The information that is available, however, indicates that last year some 20 per cent. of other ranks worked in excess of 60 hours per week.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on current policy over British armed forces serving in Bosnia.

Mr. Soames: British troops continue to make a major contribution to the United Nations operation in the former Yugoslavia which has helped to save hundreds of thousands of lives. We intend to maintain this contribution so long as our forces can continue to carry out the UN mandate at an acceptable level of risk.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what commitment the United States has given to deploy ground troops in Bosnia.

Mr. Soames: The President of the United States has recently indicated his willingness, in principle, to contribute ground forces to any NATO-led operation to support a withdrawal of UNPROFOR, should that become necessary.

Defence Employees

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people are employed in British defence industries.

Mr. Freeman: Defence expenditure in this country, by my Department and by overseas purchasers, sustained some 425,000 jobs in industry in 1992–93, the last year for which estimates are available.

Western European Union

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he intends to meet his Swedish, Finnish and Austrian counterparts to discuss the development of the Western European Union; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence looks forward to discussing a range of defence matters with his counterparts in these countries, both in the course of bilateral meetings and in the WEU, should they decide to seek a formal association with that organisation.

Arms Trade

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about his Department's involvement in the international arms trade.

Mr. Freeman: The United Kingdom involvement in the international arms trade is strictly controlled by Government policy which takes account of our defence and international obligations. The Defence Export Services Organisation within my Department exists to help UK defence industry market and sell its products and services overseas. 1993 was a record year for British defence equipment manufacturers—winning orders worth some £7 billion. It is still too early to say how successful 1994 has been.

Royal Naval College, Greenwich

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of the royal naval college, Greenwich.

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence to the hon. Member for Surrey, North-West (Sir M. Grylls) on 8 December, Official Report, column 303.

Married Quarters

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how his Department's budget has been affected by the failure to sell the married quarters housing stock.

Mr. Soames: The defence budget for 1995–96 continues to assume a substantial receipt from the sale of married quarters in Great Britain during that year. Although the original plans for a housing trust have been dropped, other options are being pursued.

Equipment

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with the United Kingdom's European Union partners on future defence equipment needs.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence regularly discusses future defence equipment needs with our European Union partners in the western European armaments group, most recently on 14 November in Noordwijk.

Arms (Value)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what he estimates to be the value of arms currently held by British forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Records are not maintained which would enable my Department to provide such information. Details of major equipment procured for the UK armed forces have, however, been published in successive Statements on the Defence Estimates.

Contractors

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assistance his Department is providing to defence contractors as a result of reductions in the procurement budget.

Mr. Freeman: My Department is assisting defence contractors to adjust to possible changes in the market for their products by providing as much information as we can about our future requirements, to help them in their commercial planning.

Defence Establishments, Herefordshire

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received concerning the closures of defence establishments in Herefordshire.

Mr. Soames: In the past 12 months, seven representations have been made to Ministers in my Department concerning defence establishments in the county of Hereford and Worcester where closure or part closure has been announced or proposed.

Attack Helicopters

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what evaluations have taken place regarding the provision of attack helicopters.

Mr. Freeman: The evaluation of fixed price bids received at the end of September in response to the attack helicopter competition is in progress. This evaluation is being conducted on the basis of operational and cost-effectiveness, with proposals for UK industrial participation and risk being key considerations. As part of this process, test flights of the contender aircraft have been conducted.

Konver

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions his Department has had with European Union representatives concerning the Konver project.

Mr. Freeman: None. The EEC Konver programme is a matter for my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade.

Diversification

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on defence diversification.

Mr. Freeman: The Government's policy is that decisions on how to adapt to changing market circumstances, and what products to make, are for the commercial judgment of companies.

Franco-British Summit

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the implications for United Kingdom defence policy of the recent Franco-British summit.

Mr. Soames: The UK-French summit formed part of the framework of bilateral relations which the UK has developed with close allies and demonstrated a commonality of views on a wide range of defence issues.

Reserve Forces Bill

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will publish the Reserve Forces Bill.

Mr. Soames: As my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence announced on 17 November, Official Report, columns 222-23, we intend to publish draft reserve forces legislation early in the new year.

Christmas Holiday

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has made to ensure operational readiness over the Christmas holiday.

Mr. Soames: The operational readiness of the armed forces is maintained throughout the year at levels appropriate to the prevailing circumstances.

Eurofighter

Mr. Elfyn Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the latest position vis-a-vis completion of the Eurofighter project; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Reorientation of the project is continuing. No decision on production is required until next year, but current planning assumes that the production investment phase will begin in early 1996 with a production contract for the first batch following about a year later.

Lockerbie

Mr. Tam Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the film "Maltese Double Cross", by Alan Francovites, in relation to those areas of the Pan Am 103 crash over Lockerbie which are the responsibility of his Department.

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 15 December, Official Report, column 766. My Department has co-operated fully with the Crown Office and Dumfries and Galloway police throughout the investigation and will continue to do so.

UN Military Capability

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what ideas his Department has submitted to the appropriate authorities for the reform of the United Nations military capability.

Mr. Soames: The 1993 British reply to the United Nations Secretary-General's report "An Agenda for Peace" put forward a range of proposals on command and control, planning, doctrine and other aspects of peacekeeping, several of which have been adopted. The United Kingdom has also responded constructively to the United Nations standby force planning initiative. In addition, we have taken an active part in general discussions on ways of enhancing the capacity of the United Nations to mount peacekeeping operations. My Department has been fully involved in all these responses.

Army

Mr. Sykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about possible defence agency status for the Army's technical branches and authorities.

Mr. Soames: I have decided that Army technical support should be considered as a candidate for agency status, under the next steps procedures. A "prior options" study is under way to establish whether agency status or other options would be appropriate and an entry to this effect appeared in the December 1994 market-testing bulletin. I would welcome comments from interested parties; these should be sent by 26 January 1995 to: Major General P.J.G. Corp, Director General Equipment Support

(Army), HQ QMG, Monxton road, Andover, Hants, SP11 8HT.

Disposals Sales Agency

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the establishment of the Disposals Sales Agency responsible for the disposal by sale of stores and equipment surplus to the requirements of his Department.

Mr. Freeman: The Disposal Sales Agency was established as an agency within the Defence Export Services Organisation of the Ministry of Defence on 1 October 1994. The role of the agency is to provide a disposal sales service for surplus equipment, stores, spares and other material to the Ministry of Defence and the Department's agencies.

In the past, there have been major sales to other Governments of equipment in operational condition, in particular ex-Royal Navy ships; and other ranges of surplus equipment and stores provide considerable revenue to the Department each year. The skills of the disposal sales agency in identifying the best marketing opportunities and increased private sector involvement are the key to the future success of the agency.

The previous organisation was headed by a grade 6 civil servant, who has been appointed the agency's first chief executive. The agency has 100 employees.

The chief executive has been set the following key targets for the financial year 1994–95:

1. to achieve disposal sales revenue of £60.8 million
2. to introduce three new storage and marketing agreements—joint ventures—with industry.
3. to implement the first stage of a three-year programme of withdrawal of the agency from direct selling, other than Government-to-Government sales.
4. to improve efficiency by reducing the overhead of the agency's stores activity in Germany.
5. to establish an agency resource data base and interim output budget, incorporating full cost accruals accounting.
6. to develop performance indicators.

Copies of the agency's framework document are available in the Library of the House.

Cash Limits

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes he has to announce to the class I cash limits and running costs limit for 1994–95.

Mr. Rifkind: The class I cash limits will be amended as follows:

Class I cash limits

Vote	Current cash limit	Change	Revised cash limit £ 000s
1	11,554,200	– 4,549	11,549,651
3	6,404,169	–11,230	6,392,939

These changes reduce the block defence cash limit by £15,779,000 from £22,777,039,000 to £22,761,260,000. They reflect decreases to compensate for an overspend on class I, vote 3 in financial year 1993–94.

The Ministry of Defence's running cost regime has been replaced by a much broader defence operating costs limit covering all front-line and support budgetary expenditure. The new limit will be £17,399,500,000 in 1994–95. This is an administrative change only, with no effect on the defence block cash limit or on the vote structure. Controls analogous to those of the running costs regime will continue to apply to defence operating costs.

Battle of Britain Memorial Flight

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether it is his intention to make provision for the re-sparring of the one remaining Lancaster bomber of the battle of Britain memorial flight in time to avoid its grounding from May 1996 onwards; and if he will make a statement about the future size of the flight.

Mr. Soames [holding answer 16 December]: The future of the battle of Britain memorial flight is not in doubt. Current plans assume that the Lancaster will be re-sparred during the winter of 1995–96. Decisions on the future size of the flight will follow the outcome of a routine review, now under way, into its composition, activities and cost.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Special Advisers

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) of 1 December, Official Report, column 843, if he will make a statement regarding his Department's expenditure on special advisers in each of the last three financial years and for the financial year 1979–80.

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary on 19 December, Official Report, column 937.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the duration of the trips, undertaken by Ministers in his Department on which they were accompanied by their spouses and paid for at public expense, which were referred to in his answer of 26 October, Official Report, column 644.

Mr. Howard: The duration of the visits were from 1 January to 7 January 1994 and from 20 August to 2 September 1994.

North Wales Police Authority

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement concerning the establishment level of the North Wales police authority.

Mr. Maclean: The approved establishment of the North Wales police is 1,369. This represents an increase of 90 posts since 1979. The increase is in line with those received by other police forces. As from 1 April next year, formal approval of establishments will end, and complement levels will be entirely for local decision.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what revenues he has made available to the North Wales police authority to enable it to develop its school liaison and community-based projects; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: No specific funding has been made available for these purposes. The police service undertakes a range of work in schools and the community, in order to foster good relations between the police and young people. It is for the chief constable to determine the deployment of resources to meet the various responsibilities of the North Wales police.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will increase the allocation of funds to the North Wales police authority so that it may recruit officers, special constables and civilians.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question by him on 8 December at columns 567–68.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department by what percentage the North Wales police authority's spending has been increased in the coming year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: It is the responsibility of the North Wales police authority to set the force budget for 1995–96.

Prison Security

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if funding is always available to prisons in England and Wales when a prison governor requests improvements to alarm systems, or security cameras; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 20 December 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the availability of funding for improvements to alarm systems or security cameras in prisons in England and Wales.

Governors have discretion to spend up to £50,000 from their local budget on capital projects, including installation of alarms or security cameras. If they have inadequate budget available, they can apply for central funding and this would normally be granted if it was an essential security expenditure.

Departmental Telephone Calls

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much has been spent on telephone charges and how many telephone calls have been made by his Department for each of the last five years.

Mr. Howard: I regret that this information is not available.

Police Resources (Wales)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the principle underlying the decision he took concerning the sharing of resources among the police authorities of Wales.

Mr. Maclean: The draft report "The Police Grant Report (England and Wales) 1995–96" sets out the principles on which proposed allocations of resources to police forces have been made for 1995–96. A copy of the report has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department by what percentage Welsh police spending has increased in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Between 1992–93 and 1993–94 total capital and current expenditure by Welsh police authorities increased by 4.2 per cent. Final expenditure figures for 1994–95 are not yet available. The Government's proposals for allocations of police grant for current expenditure and police standard spending assessments in Wales in 1995–96 were announced on 1 December 1994, Official Report, column 815.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultations he has with the chief constables of Dyfed and North Wales before the apportioning of resources to police authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The Association of Chief Police Officers was represented on the Home Office working group which oversaw the development of the funding formula. The draft "Police Grant Report (England and Wales) 1995–96" was sent to chief officers on 1 December. This offers to them the opportunity to comment upon my right hon. and learned Friend's proposals for the allocation of police funding in 1995–96.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will grant extra funds to the North Wales police authority to enable it to proceed with its capital project on the communications network; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Projects of this kind are funded from the block allocations of capital resources which are made to each police authority. It is for the Police Authority and chief constable to decide what their priorities are and on what they spend their allocation. There are no additional funds available for individual communications projects.

Executive Search Agencies

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what use his Department has made of executive search agencies in filling vacancies within his Department and executive agencies administered by his Department during the last year; and how much these services have cost his Department.

Mr. Howard: Executive search consultants are used in making appointments to public bodies where it is thought that they will be able to supplement usefully the field of applicants.

Since January 1994 consultants have been used in a scheme to fill the post of prisons ombudsman and are currently being used to assist in recruiting a director of personnel for the Prison Service.

For reasons of commercial confidentiality it is not our practice to disclose individual contract values. However, the combined value of the two contracts is £44,000 excluding VAT.

Asylum Seekers

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the average period of detention of those asylum seekers who are detained;

(2) what is the longest time for which an asylum seeker has been detained;

(3) pursuant to his answer of 12 December, Official Report, columns 483-84, for how long each of (a) the 103 asylum seekers who have been detained for more than six months and (b) the asylum seekers who have been detained for longer than 12 months have been in detention.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Information on the length of detention of those people who had sought asylum and have been in detention longer than 12 months at 15 December 1994 is given in the table. Similar information for those detained longer than six months could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The longest currently detained person who had sought asylum has been held in detention since 14 August 1990. The individual concerned has been detained for this exceptional length of time because he represents a substantial threat to national security.

Information on the average period of detention for persons currently detained, who had sought asylum is not available.

Persons detained longer than 12 months as at 15 December 1994, who had sought asylum, by the date on which each person entered detention

Ministerial Train Journeys

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many train journeys of one hour's duration or more he has made in Britain in 1994 in the course of his official duties.

Mr. Howard: I have made 24 train journeys of one hour's duration or more this year.

Fire Safety

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for a cost-benefit analysis on the recommendations of the interdepartmental review on fire safety legislation and enforcement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government have not yet taken any decisions in response to those recommendations. Before we do so, we will give careful consideration to all the relevant issues including the costs and benefits of the propositions before us.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what evidence he has that self-compliance in matters of fire safety in houses of multi-occupation will improve standards of safety.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Self-compliance under the Fire Precautions Act 1971 for which the Home Office has responsibility is at present only provided for under section 9A. This does not affect houses in multiple occupation. Policy in respect of houses in multiple occupation rests with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Ex-prisoners (Housing)

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the rate of reoffending by prisoners who have no secure residence to return to on their release; and what assessment he has made of the probable impact upon this rate of reoffending if housing benefit is restricted for single prisoners to a maximum of 13 weeks.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: There is no statistical information routinely available on the relationship between reoffending by prisoners and the type of accommodation to which they are released. It is therefore not possible to assess any effect on reoffending of changes to the rules on eligibility for housing benefit for single prisoners.

Income Support

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) males and (b) females in receipt of income support have been imprisoned in the last year for non-payment of fines.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Lynne Jones, dated 20 December 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking how many (a) males and (b) females in receipt of income support have been imprisoned in the last year for non-payment of fines.

The information requested is not available centrally.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to announce the date of the appointment of the chief executive of the National Lottery Charities Board.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: This is a matter for the National Lottery Charities Board.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when charities will be allowed to apply for funds from the National Lottery Charities Board; and what process or criteria will be used to determine distribution.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: These are matters for the National Lottery Charities Board.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when a definitive date will be given for the appointment of a chief executive to the National Lottery Charities Board.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: This is a matter for the National Lottery Charities Board, but I understood that it expects to make an announcement very shortly.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when charities will be given the opportunity to apply for funds from the National Lottery Charities Board; and what process will be used to decide on distribution.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: This is a matter for the charities board.

Prison Populations (European Union)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the prison population in each of the 12 member states of the European Union.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The countries of the European Union are covered by the statistics collated by the Council of Europe. The latest available information is given in the table. An article on "International Comparisons of Prison Populations" by Collier and Tarling—Home Office research bulletin No. 23, pages 48 to 54—showed that the figures for different countries are unlikely to be strictly comparable because the definitions of prisons and prisoners vary from one country to another, reflecting different legal and administrative systems. Examples of differences in the definitions are the inclusion or exclusion in a country's figures of juvenile offenders and mentally disordered offenders.

Prison population in each of the countries of the European Union as at 1 September 1993[1]

Nationality	Prison population
Belgium	7,200
Denmark	3,700
France	51,100
Germany[2]	65,800

Ireland	2,100
Italy	50,800
Luxembourg	400
Netherlands	7,800
Portugal	10,900
Spain	45,700
United Kingdom	53,400

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) men and (b) women over the age of 60 years are at present serving a life prison sentence in prisons in England and Wales.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 20 December 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking how many (a) men and (b) women over the age of sixty years are at present serving a life prison sentence in prisons in England and Wales.

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners are at present serving a life sentence in the United Kingdom; and what is the total annual cost to the Exchequer.

Information for Scotland and Northern Ireland is available from the Scottish and Northern Ireland offices respectively. The average net operating cost per prisoner per week is published in the "Prison Service Annual Report and Accounts, April 1992—March 1993" (Table D, Volume 2, Cm 2385) and was £494 at 1992–93 prices.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people are serving a life prison sentence in each of the 12 European Union states.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I regret that the information requested, is not available for states in membership of the Council of Europe other than the United Kingdom.

Doncaster Prison

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many companies bid to manage the Doncaster prison when Premier Prison Services succeeded in winning the contract.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. John Gunnell, dated 20 December 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about Doncaster prison.

Five bids to manage Doncaster prison were received in response to the invitation to tender.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. John Gunnell, dated 20 December 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the performance criteria specified in the contract for managing Doncaster prison.

The contract, a copy of which is held in the House of Commons Library, specifies a wide range of performance criteria, covering all aspects of the prison's activities. As with both publicly and privately managed prisons, the performance at Doncaster is measured against key performance indicators, which are specified as follows:

> Escapes from the prison: no more than two by the end of the first year of operation thereafter no more than one in each year of operation.

Escapes from court: no more than eight each year for the first three years. No more than six in the fourth year and then subject to review.

Time out of cell: a minimum of twelve hours a day for prisoners on normal location.

A positive regime: a minimum of at least twelve hours a day of regime activities including education for prisoners on normal location. Adult prisoners to have access to a minimum of six hours a week, and young prisoners under 17 provision of fifteen hours a week, of education and training.

Visits: The statutory minimum as set out in Prison Rules.

Grievances: Ninety per cent. of grievances, capable of resolution at prison level, resolved within seven days.

Assaults on prisoners: no more than 148 by the end of the first year of operation, to be reviewed at the end of the first year.

Assaults on staff: no more than 77 by the end of the first year of operation, to be reviewed at the end of the first year.

Prison Escapes

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of those prisoners serving sentences who have spent time unlawfully at large during the past five years were at large for (a) 24 hours, (b) seven days, (c) 30 days and (d) more than 30 days.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. A. J. Beith, dated 20 December 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking how many of those prisoners serving sentences who have spent time unlawfully at large during the past five years were at large for (a) 24 hours (b) seven days (c) thirty days and (d) more than thirty days.

I am afraid that this information is not collected centrally and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of those prisoners serving sentences who have spent time unlawfully at large during the last five years (a) returned to custody voluntarily, (b) were reapprehended by the police and other agencies of the law and (c) are still at large.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. A. J. Beith, dated 20 December 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking how many of those prisoners serving sentences who have spent time unlawfully at large during the last five years (a) returned to custody voluntarily (b) were reapprehended by the police and other agencies of the law and (c) are still at large.

I regret that this information is not collected centrally and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Capsicum Pepper Sprays

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the draft report of the joint Home Office and metropolitan police review of deportation procedures contained reference to the use of capsicum pepper sprays.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: It is not the practice to comment on the contents of draft or incomplete reports. As I said in my reply on 6 December at column 150, the conclusions of the review were placed in the Library on 12 January 1994.

Firefighters

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total number of firefighters serving (a) the city of Sheffield, (b) South Yorkshire, (c) Greater Manchester and (d) the west midlands; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on the number of firefighters in each fire authority is published annually in the reports of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Fire Services for England and Wales. The latest report, for 1993–94, column 2679, contains on page 14 a table giving brigade establishments and strengths as at 1 January 1994. I understand from South Yorkshire fire and civil defence authority that on that date there were 471 regular firefighters and 62 retained firefighters based at fire stations in the city of Sheffield.

Prison Escorts

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners serving sentences have been guarded, escorted or otherwise supervised by private security firms, and how many by the Prison Service, since the first escort of prisoners by private security firms; and how many have escaped from the supervision of each.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. A. J. Beith, dated 20 December 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the escapes of prisoners serving sentences from escorts by the Prison Service and from escorts by contractors.

I am afraid that the information requested is not held centrally and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Cheshire Police Headquarters

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cause of the major power fault cut on 29 November affecting Cheshire police force headquarters; how long they were without power; what emergency systems they used; what action is being taken to prevent this happening again; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I understand that the power failure at Cheshire constabulary headquarters was caused by an internal failure of both normal and backup electricity supplies. Power was restored to the building after two hours. The 999 emergency system remained operative throughout. Measures have already been taken to prevent such a thing happening again.

Detention Pending Trial

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he proposes to take in response to recommendation 1245 of 1994 of the parliamentary assembly of the Council of Europe relating to detention pending trial; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The decision to detain a person pending trial is taken primarily to protect the public and ensure the pursuance of justice.

The majority of the guidelines contained in this recommendation reflect existing law and procedure in the United Kingdom.

Police Authorities

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the guidelines governing the claiming and levels of attendance allowances for members of police authorities.

Mr. Maclean: This information is contained in a Home Office circular letter dated 5 August 1994. A copy is available in the Library.

Mr. Maclean: The information is set out in the table:

Police strength at September 1994

Firearms

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what response he has made to the Association of Chief Police Officers report on firearms licensing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The Association of Chief Police Officers produced a report on firearms administration in 1990. This was considered by a working group set up in 1991, consisting of Home Office officials, Her majesty's inspectorate of constabulary and representatives of several police forces, which was set up to promote efficiency and consistency amongst forces; to identify models of best practice for forces in administering the firearms licensing system; and to identify a reliable basis on which to set fees. The report of that group was circulated to police forces, strongly recommending that, where they had not already done so, they adopt the procedures which is set out.

Market Testing

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total number of his Department's posts lost or contracted out as a result of market testing since 1991.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A total of 705 Home Office posts have been contracted out as a result of the "Competing for Quality" programme, which includes strategic contracting out as well as market testing with in-house bids. There has also been a reduction of 209 posts as a result of efficiency improvements made by in-house bid teams during the market-testing process.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many external contractors have been awarded functions of his department following a market test; and what were the contract prices.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) at column 487.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) which outside consultants were used during the course of any market test conducted or completed since 1991;

(2) what was the total amount paid to each consultant used on his Department's market testing in each year since 1991.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Up to 30 September 1994 the Home Office market-testing division and the Prison Service contracts and competition group engaged the following consultants to advise on market tests where there was an in-house bid:

Brian Farrington Ltd.
P. Chapman
Clayton Forde Associates
D. Croin
ER Consultants
Ernst and Young
Handley-Walker plc
Ken Worthing Associates
KPMG Peat Marwick
Lamb Associates
G. Lister
L. Massey
PA Consulting Group
Theodore Goddard
Touche Ross Management Consultants

Information on the costs of contracts with individual consultants is commercially confidential.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the outcome of each market-testing exercise in his Department which has been completed since 1991;

(2) which of his Department's functions have been market tested since 1991.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The outcome for each market test with an in-house bid since 1991 is as follows:

Private Security Patrols

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the guards employed by private security patrols in Southwark have criminal convictions.

Mr. Maclean: This information is not available.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what meetings he has had with the police in Southwark to discuss the issue of private security patrols;

(2) if he will make a statement on mobile private security patrols operating in Southwark.

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. and learned Friend has not discussed private security patrols with the police in Southwark. We are not aware of an significant local problems with patrols operating in the area.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to license private security patrols.

Mr. Maclean: We have no such plans.

Drivers (Insurance Fines)

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of those convicted of driving without insurance received fines of greater than (a) £1,000 and (b) £5,000 in 1993.

Mr. Maclean: Information available to me indicates that 6,538 convictions for driving without insurance in 1993 in England and Wales resulted in fines of over £1,000 being imposed, none of which was over £5,000.

Prisoner Transfers

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners have been transferred from Great Britain prisons to Northern Ireland prisons in the last six months, in the categories of republican, loyalist or non-terrorist offenders.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Since July, 11 prisoners have been transferred from prisons in England and Wales to prisons in Northern Ireland on a temporary basis. Eight of these prisoners have been convicted of terrorist offences. Requests for such transfers are not considered or recorded on the basis of the prisoner's political beliefs.

Stop and Search

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in what circumstances a police officer who stops a person and bodily searches that person is required to make an official report of the incident in his log book and also in the police station to which he is assigned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: These matters are regulated by section 3 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 and by the code of practice for the exercise by police officers of statutory powers of stop and search—code A—made under section 66(a) of the Act.

A written record must be made of all stops and searches by police officers. The record must be made on the form provided for this purpose as soon as practicable after the search. The search record is to be retained at a police station in the area where the search takes place. A copy of the record may be obtained by the person searched if he asks for it within one year of the date of the search.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) in what circumstances the Metropolitan police maintain computer records relating to individual stop-and-search incidents; and what is the purpose of so doing in respect of those searches which do not give rise to an arrest.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 19 December 1994]: I understand from the Commissioner that computer records of all stop-and-search incidents are maintained at local divisional level throughout the Metropolitan police district. This is in compliance with section 3(7) of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984, which requires that the police record all occasions when a person is searched. Anyone who is stopped and searched by the police is entitled to request a copy of the record of the search for up to 12 months after the search took place; computer records are therefore maintained to allow for such requests. They are destroyed after 12 months.

Mr. Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 1 December. Official Report, column 843, which five police authorities estimated the numbers of ethnic minorities stopped and searched in the fiscal year 1993–94; what is the basis of their estimates; for what reasons these authorities could not collect actual figures; and what action he will take to ensure that all police forces comply with the request to supply accurate figures for the numbers of ethnic minorities stopped and searched in the forthcoming year.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 19 December 1994]: Statistics of the number of stops and searches conducted in 1993–94 were collected from forces by Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary. Estimated figures were provided in respect of five forces: Essex, Humberside, Lancashire, Sussex and West Midlands.

In Essex, the form containing the ethnic split was not introduced until 1 October 1993, and in Humberside not until 1 September 1993. HMIC received returns only for the portions of the fiscal year after those dates, and multiplied the figures appropriately.

In the case of Lancashire, the relevant form was not introduced until 1 January 1994. The force estimated the ethnic breakdown of the total years' result based on the split disclosed during the months for which these figures were available. In Sussex, the form was not introduced until 1 July 1993; the force estimated the annual total by grossing up from the available figures.

West Midlands was unable to provide actual data because the force did not receive forms from every subdivision for every month. It furnished HMIC with an estimate on the basis of approximately 94 per cent. of potential returns.

These were difficulties associated with the introduction of this new monitoring procedure and it is not expected that there will be such difficulties in subsequent years.

European Youth Campaign

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the United Kingdom's financial contribution to the European youth campaign against racism, xenophobia, anti-semitism and intolerance; and what is the figure for each of the European countries.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The campaign was agreed on the basis that it would be met from existing Council of Europe resources, supplemented by voluntary additional contributions and private sector funding. At the national level the United Kingdom contribution to the European youth campaign is being co-ordinated by the Commission for Racial Equality as part of its statutory function to promote good race relations. This will be funded from its existing Government grant of £15.5 million—1994–95. Information is not available on the position of other member states, most of which have no equivalent of the CRE and will have to allocate specific funding, but we understand that very few have offered additional contributions.

Prison Staff Violence

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made on the Prison Service project to reduce violence against staff; and when a report will be published.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. George Howarth, dated 20 December 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the Prison Service project to reduce violence against staff.

The preliminary work of the project has been completed and the results will shortly be considered by the Prison Board. Further work is likely to be undertaken. There are no plans to publish the preliminary results.

Dorset Police Authority

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total budget for the Dorset police authority for 1994–95.

Mr. Maclean: The latest estimate by the Dorset police authority of total current and capital expenditure in 1994–95 is £65.2 million.

Child Abduction

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he will take to ensure that there are uniform and satisfactory instructions on dealing with child abduction cases available in all police stations.

Mr. Maclean: Discussions are planned between the Association of Chief Police Officers and Reunite—the National Council for Abducted Children—on a range of issues, including guidance materials available to police officers.

Thames Valley Police Authority

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total budget for the Thames Valley police authority for 1994–95; and what proportion was allocated to Berkshire.

Mr. Maclean: The latest estimate by the Thames Valley police authority of total current and capital expenditure in 1994–95 is £188.7 million. The proportion of expenditure applicable to Berkshire cannot be separately identified.

Secure Training Units

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the locations selected for secure training units and give for each (a) the date on which detailed planning permission was applied for, (b) the progress to date on each application (c) the projected dates on each site for letting a contract, for commencement on site and for completion, (d) the number of young people to be accommodated in each case, (e) the target date for first admissions in each case, (f) the target date for first admissions in each case and (g) the target date for full operation.

Mr. Maclean: I announced on 21 April 1994 at columns 636–37, that it was proposed to site secure training centres at Campsfield house, Gringley, Medomsley and Onley. The location of the fifth site, at Cookham Wood, was announced on 29 June 1994 at column 622. Each secure training centre will accommodate up to 40 persistent juvenile offenders sentenced to a secure training order.

Applications for outline planning permission in respect of four of the sites and for a certificate of lawfulness of proposed use in respect of the Gringley site have been lodged with the relevant planning authorities. To date, permission has been granted on one site—Cookham Wood—and planning consultants have been engaged to advise on progressing matters on the other four sites.

Following enactment of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994, it is our intention to issue invitations to tender for the design, construction and refurbishment, management and finance of each secure training centre. Invitations to tender will be issued on the basis of named sites with the benefit of outline planning permission for the development of a secure training centre. Contracts will then be let as soon as practicable following receipt of the tenders.

It will be the responsibility of the contractor to obtain detailed planning permission and issues such as projected start and completion dates on site, target dates for first admission and for full operation are contractual matters to be proposed by tenderers. Those proposals will then form part of the tender evaluation exercise.

Unitary Authorities, Wales

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the electoral areas to be used for the first elections to the councils of the new unitary authorities in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: I am pleased to announce that my right hon. and noble Friend Lady Blatch has today signed electoral arrangements orders establishing the electoral areas to be used for the first elections for the 22 new unitary authorities in Wales.

The orders confirm the proposals submitted to the Home Secretary by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales in July this year. The first elections to the new authorities will be held on 4 May 1995. Copies of the orders may be obtained from the Vote Office.

Justice and Home Affairs Council

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Justice and Home Affairs Council held on 30 November and 1 December.

Mr. Howard: The main matters dealt with by the Council were as follows:

The Council discussed the serious problems presented by fraud against the Community budget. It adopted a resolution on the criminal law protection of Community financial interests, and agreed that further work should be done on this during the first half of 1995 with a view to concluding a binding legal instrument. The United Kingdom proposed a legally binding joint action in March this year.

The Council considered the draft Europol convention but was unable to resolve all the outstanding issues. The presidency reported on progress in developing the convention to the European Council at Essen on 9 to 10 December.

The Council decided on senior staff appointments in the EUROPOL drugs unit. The United Kingdom candidate has now been confirmed as a member of the senior management team.

The Council adopted the following measures in the field of immigration:

> Resolution on the admission of third-country nationals to the territory of member states for study purposes.
> Resolution on admission for self-employment.
> Joint action on travel facilities for third country nationals school pupils.

The Council adopted conclusions setting out the framework for organising co-operation and contacts with third countries on third pillar matters. The Council agreed that the French presidency should organise a meeting with Cyprus and Malta in the first half of 1995.

The Council considered an interim report on racism and xenophobia. It expressed general agreement on the importance of the issue and on the need for further work on all aspects of the problem.

It considered an interim report on judicial co-operation against international organised crime and asked officials to develop a range of proposals for further action.

The Council agreed proposals from the presidency for increased police and customs co-operation in implementation of the declaration adopted at the Berlin conference with central and eastern European states on 8 September.

The Council agreed that officials should proceed with the development of a convention covering all aspects of extradition concurrently with the preparation of a more limited, separate instrument creating simplified procedures for persons consenting to extradition. The aim should be to finalise this latter document in the first half of 1995.

The Council considered a progress report on the drafting of an extension to the Brussels convention, covering jurisdiction and enforcement of judgments in matrimonial cases. It agreed that the working group should continue its work and should examine in particular the possibility of extending the convention to procedures relating to the custody of children.

Passports

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has reached a decision on the recommendations arising from the Passport Agency's review of the British visitors passport, the British excursion document and the collective passport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The Passport Agency's review of the British visitor's passport, the British excursion document and the collective passport has now been completed. The need for the review arose from 1988 Home Affairs Select Committee report which recommended that because of doubts about its security and value as an identity document, the BVP should be withdrawn as soon as the computerisation programme for issuing standard passports had been successfully completed, and effective arrangements were in place for the issue of the standard 10-year passport, especially for people requiring a travel document quickly.

In conducting the review, the agency has consulted widely and received contributions from the Home Office, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, the Security Service, from leading organisations in the travel industry, the Post Office and from national youth associations.

The review evidence has established that the BVP is a poor quality travel document which does not provide definite evidence of national status or of identity, and its security is poor. It is used in the evasion of immigration controls, and its use by criminals, terrorists and football hooligans has been of considerable concern to police and immigration authorities in this country, and in the EC for a long time. Because of these factors, Spain has decided to withdraw acceptance of the BVP from 1 October 1995, and it is clear that many other EC Governments, facing immigration pressures from outside the EC are very concerned about the BVP's security weaknesses.

The BVP remains popular, but its poor reputation creates problems for bona-fide holders, and it is of no value for non-travel purposes. In comparison to the standard 10-year passport, it represents poor value for money.

As for the BED which can be used for short excursions to France, and the no-passport excursion arrangements with Belgium and the Netherlands, the review has established that these arrangements are also vulnerable to abuse, and are not compatible with the requirement for tight immigration controls.

The review has concluded that there is strong support for the continuation of the collective passport which is well regarded in Europe.

In the light of these findings the Passport Agency has recommended that the BED and the arrangements for no-passport excursions should be withdrawn from 1 March 1995; that the BVP should be withdrawn from 1 January 1996; and that the collective passport should be retained.

The Passport Agency is satisfied that the standard passport which costs £18 will provide a convenient and effective replacement for the BVP and BED, and that it will be able to provide a flexible and responsive service which fully meets the needs of the travelling public throughout the year. To improve customer service the agency is planning to form partnerships with high street outlets such as travel agents and the Post Office so that they will issue and receive completed applications, and fees from the public. The agency intends to have these arrangements in place by the autumn of next year.

I have carefully considered the Passport Agency's report on its review, and its recommendations, and after consultations with colleagues, I have approved them.

The Green Paper on identity cards, which I plan to publish in the spring of 1995, will take account of the Government's decision to withdraw the British visitor's passport and the no-passport arrangements. It will invite views on the available options for a national identity card scheme, including the possible use of a United Kingdom identity card as a travel document within Europe.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) hold open meetings, (b) conduct public consultation exercises, (c) conduct consultation exercises with outside commercial interests, (d) publish a register of members' interests, (e) publish agendas for meetings and (f) publish the minutes of meetings; and whether this is in each case (i) under a statutory requirement of (ii) voluntary.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 16 December 1994]: Details of appointments for which I am responsible are given in "Public Bodies 1993", a copy of which is in the Library.

The answers in relation to the advisory non-departmental public bodies listed in "Public Bodies 1993" and sponsored by the Home Department are as follows:

(a) none

(b) Boundary Commission for England—statutory requirement—Boundary Commission for Wales—statutory requirement

(c) Advisory council on the Misuse of Drugs—voluntary—Animal Procedures Committee—voluntary

(d) none

(e) none

(f) none

Maidstone Gaol

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes have been made to home leave arrangements at Maidstone gaol since 1 November.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 21 November 1994]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. George Howarth, dated 20 December 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about changes that have been made to home leave arrangements at Maidstone prison since 1 November 1994.

The more stringent risk assessment for temporary release (which includes home leave) for prisoners, announced on 18 November by the Home Secretary, has already been implemented at Maidstone. The new procedures, which include consideration of the victims' views if known, will provide for a more rigorous assessment to be made in considering all applications for home leave and temporary release.

Police Funding

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish, by police force area, figures for total police funding in (a) 1995–96 and (b) 1994–95.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 12 December 1994]: In respect of 1995–96 I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Uxbridge (Mr. Shersby) on 1 December 1994 at column 844.

It is not possible to provide directly comparable figures for police funding in 1994–95. The elements of standard spending assessments relevant to police are, in the case of county forces, part of the counties' overall SSAs for the provision of local services. Police grant for 1994–95 is now being paid in respect of actual expenditure by police authorities. The nearest approximation to police funding in 1994–95 is therefore obtained by adding an estimate of that part of a county's SSA relevant to the police to estimated police grant. These figures are given and provide a rough basis for comparison with 1995–96 funding. They are not, however, directly comparable because:

(a) the 1994–95 financial year is not yet over and the expenditure figures are therefore still estimates; and,

(b) grant elements of the 1994–95 figures include forces' share of funding for common police services, whereas the 1995–96 grant element of the figures are shown after forces' share of funding for common police services have been taken into account. Section 31 of the Police Act 1964 as substituted by section 17 of the Police and Magistrates' Courts Act 1994 does not provide for deductions from grant to fund common police services.

The table shows the totals of the estimated SSAs relevant and to police and police grants by English police force area in 1994–95. For 1994–95 and earlier years there were no SSAs for police authorities in Wales.

Corporate Plan

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will be publishing the next corporate plan; and what consultations with the trade unions will precede it.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 19 December 1994]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. George Howarth, dated 20 December 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about when the next Corporate Plan will be published; and what consultations with the trade unions will precede it.

We expect to publish the Corporate Plan for 1995–98 not later than 1 April 1995. We are happy to take account of any comments from the trade unions in preparing the draft Corporate Plan, which will then be submitted to the Home Secretary for approval. A meeting has already been arranged with the Prison Service Trade Union Side to discuss the next Corporate Plan on 20 December, and we will be happy to arrange further meetings with the unions if they so wish.

Prisoner Release (Victims)

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether victims in individual cases will have the right to challenge a governor's decision to release a prisoner on home leave or temporary release;

(2) how victims will be made aware of any prisoner's applications for either home leave, temporary leave or parole.

(3) what legal advice he took prior to announcing the fact that he is to allow victims to influence decisions on prisoners' home leave in England and Wales;

(4) what mechanisms will be put in place to ensure that the victims' helpline view is communicated to the governor in each case.

(5) where the victims' home leave helpline will be located; and how many staff will be allocated to it;

(6) what plans he has to make the victims' home leave hotline a freephone;

(7) which individuals and organisations were consulted prior to his announcement of the victims' home leave helpline on 14 November;

(8) what was the total number of home leave and temporary leave applications in England and Wales during 1993; and how many were granted.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 19 December 1994]: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. George Howarth, dated 20 December 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about the consultation with victims before decisions being taken about release on home leave and temporary licence and statistics on the number of applications made for such leave in 1993 and the number granted.

The new helpline is located in Birmingham as a discrete part of the Prisoner Location Service and will be initially staffed by four members of staff. Details of the victim concerns will be conveyed to the Governor of the prison concerned using a standard form and the victim notified in writing that this has taken place. There are no plans to make the Helpline free of charge but the calls made using the main number are charged only at local rate.

The introduction of the Victims' Helpline does not confer any new rights upon victims. The Helpline has been set up to enable victims to make their concerns known to the Prison Service by a more simple and direct means. There was therefore no need to seek fresh legal advice on the setting-up of the Victims' Helpline.

The introduction of a Helpline evolved from discussions within the Home Office Standing Victim Steering Group which includes representatives from all the criminal justice agencies and voluntarily organisations who considered that there should be a facility for stopping unwanted communications from prisoners to victims of crime. Consultation on the operation of the Helpline will continue with the relevant agencies concerned.

Current instructions on the consideration of home leave and temporary release applications already require governors to consider, where appropriate, consulting known victims or the police and probation services in order to establish known victim's concerns. It is already the case that the wishes of a victim who does not wish a prisoner to come back to the family home, where the offence was committed against a family member, must be respected and in these circumstances the application would be refused. In all other circumstances, the views of the victim will be taken fully into account, but it is for the governor in the light of all the known circumstances about the offender and the circumstances of the offence to decide whether home leave should be granted.

Statistics on the number of applications made by prisoners for home leave and temporary release are not currently recorded. The number of prisoners who were granted unescorted absences in 1993 was 29,000.

Reconviction Rates

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the reconviction rate following discharge from (a) approved schools, (b) community homes with in-house education facilities and (c) borstals for each year since 1974.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 19 December 1994]: After 1970 sentencing to an approved school order ceased to be a sentencing option available to the courts.

After 1983 borstal training ceased to be a sentencing option available to the courts. Information on reconvictions after discharge from borstal training is contained in chapter eight of "Prison Statistics, England and Wales, 1987", Cm 547. The relevant figures are contained in tables 8.7 and 8.10. Reconviction rates, after a two-year follow-up period, are quoted for males and females discharged from borstal training for each year from 1974 to 1983.

The information requested on reconviction rates for community homes with in-house educational facilities is not centrally available.

Suicides (Prison Staff)

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many suicides involving prison service staff have occurred in each of the past three years; and what steps have been put in place to support vulnerable staff.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 19 December 1994]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. George Howarth, dated 20 December 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about suicides involving Prison Service staff.

There were five staff suicides in 1992 and four in 1993. There have been ten this year, and the Prison Service is most concerned about this increase, as it is about each individual case. In all cases, the principal causes appear to have been related to their private lives rather than work.

The Prison Service has a staff care and welfare service whose role is to assist staff to give of their best by providing for them and their families a confidential service to enable them to deal with personal and work related problems.

A specific part off that role is to provide care support and counselling to staff who have been involved in incidents at work, to help prevent or relieve the symptoms of post traumatic stress which may result.

A workshop was held in November to examine issues related to staff suicide. A number of ideas emerged from this - relating, for example, to the provision of training in stress management, the operation of care teams and links with outside agencies, which will be examined further. We shall continue to keep this matter under very careful review to see whether there are additional steps which could helpfully be taken.

Marchioness

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what money he has allocated to meet the costs of legal representation for the police at the inquest into the Marchioness disaster scheduled for March 1995.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 19 December 1994]: Provision for costs of this kind is made in the estimates for the Metropolitan police and the cost falls on the Metropolitan police fund.

The Service's current programme of work is set out in our Corporate Plan for 1994–97 and Business Plan for 1994–95, copies of which have been placed in the Library.

[1] Comparisons with prison receptions suggest there may have been under-recordings during 1989 and 1990, although this is less likely in 1990.

[2] Under the Criminal Justice Act 1991, the arrangements for imposing longer sentences under section 53(2) of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 also applied to 17-year-olds from 1 October 1992.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES

SESSION 1994–95

VOLUME 251

5th December—20th December 1994

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instruments etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker's rulings and statements'.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates and Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates, etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Comm = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
